From their report it appears the United States fell into possession of this reservation by a decision of the Court of Claims. The quantity of land involved is, I believe, about 2,000 acres and embraces the springs. Prior to the decision of the court much of the land had been occupied by settlers, who had improved their holdings by building up hotels, bath-houses, private residences, and business houses. When the disputed title was settled in favor of the Government the President, under act of Congress passed in 1877, appointed commissioners, who proceeded to the springs and adjudicated the claims of about eight hundred of these occupants. Most of the occupants bought the property that was allotted to them at the prices fixed by the commissioners.

Among the buildings on the reservation was a hotel, which the Government leased for a period of ten years at a rental of $1,000 per annum. The committee to which I have referred took testimony in regard to the value of this rental. It appears from the testimony that the rental was worth $10,000 a year; so that the Government is losing $9,000 a year by reason of the improvident lease it then made.

Mr. CUTCHEON. How long does the lease extend?

Mr. BEACH. I think it has some three years yet to run. Another source of revenue to the Government is found in the bath-tubs, which are leased at $15 each per annum. The committee reported that these bath-tubs were worth $50 apiece instead of $15. Now, in regard to this creek, the estimated cost of walling up its sides and improving it generally was $167,000. At the time the committee visited the springs they found considerable of this work had been done and very improperly done, for the committee say:

From all the evidence the committee was able to obtain on this point they are utterly unable to state with any degree of accuracy how much the Government has been defrauded in the measurement of and payment for this work, but they feel quite certain that more masonry has been paid for than was ever put up.

Now, I have moved to strike out the whole of this appropriation, and I have done so because I do not think we should spend another cent on this Hot Springs reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BEACH. I desire one moment more.

Mr. STORM was recognized, and yielded one minute of his time to Mr. BEACH.

Mr. BEACH. I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that this great Government of ours was ever intended to engage in the business of running a hotel or competing with Coney Island in the bath-tub business. We should put a stop to the whole business. And here let me say I shall take early occasion to introduce a bill turning over the whole of this reservation, hotel, bath-tubs, and all, to the State Arkansas. Let that State run them if it will. Let us confine ourselves to our constitutional functions. [Applause.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. We run them for the benefit of the great unwashed.

Mr. STORM. I agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH], if the Government had lost the suit in which the title to the Hots Springs lands was litigated it would have been of advantage to the Government. It was a clear case where the winning party was the losing party. Besides the appropriation of about $120,000, all the proceeds of the land sold on that reservation have been consumed in this improvement. Rents derived from the water privileges do not pay the salary of the superintendent and the ordinary expenses of running the concern.

I think so long as things are managed on that reservation as they have been in the past few years the Government will be involved in perpetual expenses, and those expenses will be constantly increasing. In the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress a provision was contained—I believe in an appropriation bill—authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to enter upon the work of covering what was known as the Hot Springs Creek, a small stream of water flowing along the front of the Hot Springs reservation. And while I think it is clear Congress intended in that act simply to provide for covering about 700 yards of that spring, it is quite clear by some arrangement 1,100 yards of that creek were covered at a great deal of expense. The report of the committee sent there by the Forty-eighth Congress showed such an amount of mismanagement, if not downright dishonesty, as ought to make Congress act with care in its future dealings with this unique enterprise.

Now, as to this provision in the bill which appropriates $20,000 for the continuation of that work, I wish the members of this House to understand that the improvement is to be entirely upon private property. It is not upon the Hot Springs reservation, as provided for in the original act, but is simply intended to improve and make more valuable the property of private individuals who own the lands on both sides of the stream. The Government has covered 400 yards more of the stream than was originally contemplated, and now it is proposed to carry this improvement farther down the stream at the expense of the Government, along the property owned by individuals and far beyond the point originally intended by Congress. I think that ought not to be done.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Does not the gentleman think that the Government might well close out this entire Hot Springs property to private individuals and be rid of it?

Mr. STORM. I think so, and have always thought so, and if it was here as an original proposition I never would assent to embarking in such an enterprise. The Government would be the gainer to-day if it could get the State of Arkansas to accept Hot Springs reservation as a gift.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Arkansas is too sharp for that.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, the Government came into possession of this Hot Springs property in 1875 at the end of a lawsuit. They found that they owned four sections of land in Arkansas and had owned it since Arkansas was a Territory. They found that there were numerous squatters on that land who claimed to have the title and had erected cheap wooden buildings which had become valuable because of their location. A receiver was appointed as a result of that suit. He was in charge of the property for a year or two, and, as a result of his receivership, he turned into the Treasury a little over $33,000, the rental of the property during that period. Then a commission was appointed with authority to settle with the owners, or those who claimed to be the owners, of the property, and they sold to the parties who had squatted on the land at a nominal figure, some $20 a foot front, property which three or four years afterwards was worth from $300 to $500 a foot front.

From these sales $44,000 more was turned into the Treasury. When the people of Hot Springs and vicinity found that there was $77,000 in the Treasury, the proceeds of those lands, they wanted it expended in Hot Springs. They came here, and Congress was induced to pass an amendment to a law by which the Government was to wall up the banks of the creek which runs through the central avenue, the main street of Hot Springs, there being a mountain on either side of the street, and the street being nothing but a narrow defile or gorge between the mountains, in the bed of which was Hot Springs Creek. Afterward they came and asked another amendment at the hands of Congress. They wanted the Government not only to wall up the banks of the creek, but to spring an arch over it, and then to cover it and make a broad and beautiful street, the main street in Hot Springs. This also was granted by Congress. The $77,000 was expended, and during the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress $75,000 was appropriated to complete the improvement of Hot Springs Creek. Now that improvement, so called, extended from the south line of the permanent Government reservation to a point 3,000 feet northward, and to a point 1,500 feet north of any reservation or any property which the Government owns abutting on that street.

It is true there was a reservation on West Mountain, on the west side of the creek, which extended as far as the improvement extended, but the Government had already parted with its title to all the land abutting on the street for a depth or distance back of 175 feet, the only valuable property on the west side of this Central Avenue Creek. This strip was owned by other parties, and separated the reservation from the street for the entire distance, on the west side, so that the Government was inveigled into the scheme of improving private property north of its own property for a distance of 1,500 feet along the creek. During the last session of the last Congress there was put into the sundry civil bill (a bill which, as gentlemen will remember, went through under a suspension of the rules) an appropriation of $7,500 more for the purpose of extending this improvement south of the Government reservation and across what is called Reserve street, or Reserve avenue, being the southern boundary of the Government reservation. I understand that that sum is ample, and that the improvement is being completed to that point. Now, here is another appropriation of $20,000 proposed in this bill to extend this improvement southerly over the creek, and it is proposed to extend it some 300 feet south of Reservation avenue, through private property, not through a public street, but over private lands in the rear of several buildings for the sole use and benefit of these private property-owners.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that no man in this House wants to vote away the people's money for the sake of improving this creek where it passes through private premises. I was a member of this investigating committee appointed by the last House, and we were there six days and and took a large volume of interesting testimony.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. BAYNE obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], who is making a very clear exposition of this matter.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, some of the citizens of Hot Springs appeared before that committee. With the utmost composure of countenance they had the assurance to claim that this expensive improvement should be continued not only south of Reserve avenue but, as some of them contended, clear down to Ouachita River, 6 miles below. What do you suppose was the remarkable reason they gave for extending this improvement to that point? Why, they said that the Government had allowed private-property owners to turn the sewerage of the city into this hot-water creek, and that in the summer time it became very detrimental to the health of the citizens of Hot Springs; and therefore they thought this great and good Government ought to extend this archway for the creek clear down to the Ouachita River, in order to counteract any detrimental results to the health of the citizens. And we could not find a single prominent citizen in Hot Springs who did not think it the duty of the Government to extend this improvement at least 2,000 feet south of Reserve avenue across private property down to a point adjacent to the gas-works in order to preserve the public health.

I modestly suggested to some gentlemen who appeared before the committee that it would be well for the citizens of Hot Springs, inasmuch as the Government had done so much for them, to construct sewers for themselves through this street on each side of the improvement; that they would be at liberty to continue those sewers down to the Ouachita River, if they chose, in order to carry off the filth of the city. I was met by a constitutional objection! [Laughter.] They said that the constitution of Arkansas would not permit anything of that kind; that they were limited to a certain amount of taxation, and could not raise any more, whether the citizens of Hot Springs perished because of lack of sewerage or not. [Laughter.] I have been informed by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], who represents that district, that when they became satisfied that the Government would not construct these sewers for them they went to work and found a loop-hole somewhere in the constitution; that at any rate they have constructed the sewers alongside of their private property on each side of this improvement, and are now waiting only for the Government to construct the sewer along the front of the reservation and continue it down, I suppose, to the river. It seems to me therefore that good resulted from the investigation. The citizens of Hot Springs found that the Government would not do everything for them, and they have done that much for themselves.

In addition to the creek, the Government found that there were various hot springs on the Hot Spring Mountain that were supposed to be a cure for every disease that human flesh is heir to and some diseases to which it is not heir legitimately. [Laughter.] And it became an idea of the citizens of Hot Springs that the Government should not only preserve these springs for the people who could pay for a bath, but should enable the poor people who might come from anywhere in the United States to get a free bath. So they reserved a hole in the mountain, which was called "mud-hole," and was supposed to have the finest medicinal qualities of any spring on the mountain; and the Government from that day to this has been maintaining a free bath-house in the "mud-hole" for the poor people—a sort of pool of Bethesda. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. What became of the "mud-hole?"

Mr. PAYNE. Well, that was not considered safe, because people began to rent frontage on Reserve avenue, on the Government reservation, and then to rent privileges for twenty, thirty, or forty bath-tubs at an annual rental of $60 a year per tub for not exceeding five years. This was done under a law passed by Congress. These leases were made mostly in 1877 and 1878. The parties paid rent at that rate for about a year; and the evidence before the committee showed that while paying a rent of $60 per tub they were making about 10 per cent. on their investment. Then a committee came here to Washington and convinced a committee I believe in the other House that this rent was too great; that not more than $15 a tub, instead of $60, ought to be paid.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to proceed further with these remarks. I do not want more than five minutes more.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, obtained the floor and said: I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. ROGERS. I must object unless there is some understanding. I can not be expected to reply to all these misrepresentations in five minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the gentleman from Arkansas will have ample time.

Mr. ROGERS. If I can have opportunity to respond to all these statements, the gentleman from New York may occupy all the time he wants; but if I am to be restricted to five minutes, that is a different thing.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. You will be heard fully; we want all the facts.

Mr. ROGERS. If that is the understanding, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. PAYNE. These people went on under these leases and paid $15 a tub. After that a syndicate of the different bath-house owners was formed, all of them clubbing together; and this great paternal Government seemed to be in a sort of race with these bath-house owners to see whether it could not break up the syndicate by regulating the price of baths. I believe that the Secretary of the Interior was empowered to make regulations on that subject; and he did fix the price which these bath-house owners might charge. It was the Government of the United States that engaged in this business. [Laughter.] It was not exactly a peanut business; but it seems to me it would have been just as consistent with the dignity of the Government of the United States if it had gone into the peanut business or the livery business or something of that kind, as it was for it to go into the bath-house business. This syndicate, for some reason or other, did not like the opposition of the "mud hole," which was a free bath.

They went to work to blast with powder or dynamite or something else, and carried on the work in such a manner as to crack the tufa formed on the rock, allowing the water which supplied the spring or mud-hole to find another vent, and so the mud-hole went. [Laughter.] That is, the hole remained, but the hot water which supplied it found another outlet, and when the hot water was gone the poor people were left out again. That is the condition the committee found it in when they went down there a year ago.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. So the committee did not get a free bath?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, yes; the committee had an opportunity to take a bath, and one bath satisfied them.

Then the Government found, when they took possession of this reservation in 1875, a hotel on the reservation called the Arlington. This hotel was formerly an old building owned by Governor Rector, which was used as a hotel. In 1874 Governor Rector rented this property to Messrs. Fordyce, Stitt & Co. at $3,000 a year. They were to have the privilege of going on and making improvements, and at the end of the lease, which ran, I believe, for three years or perhaps for five years, Governor Rector was to have the privilege of buying their improvements at two-thirds of the cost. As Mr. Fordyce testified before the committee, in answer to my inquiries, they went on and made improvements, which, with the furniture they put into the hotel, amounted to $35,000. There was awarded by the commission to Fordyce, Stitt & Co. $22,000, which is about two thirds of $35,000, the total cost of the furniture and other improvements.

Mr. DUNN. Which was never paid by the Government.

Mr. PAYNE. The Government gave them a certificate for $22,000, and they have never made a demand on the Government for the money due on that certificate. And why they have not will appear later on.

Mr. DUNN. It appears not.

Mr. PAYNE. Governor Rector also received a certificate for $8,000 for his interest in the old building. It will thus be seen that these gentlemen received all they were entitled to receive for this property, even according to the strictest equity.

But nevertheless, in 1878, Congress was induced to lease this valuable hotel property to Messrs. Fordyce, Sitt & Co. for a term of ten years at an annual rental of $1,000. They have since put additions upon the property amounting to about the sum of $25,000, and the annual rental is worth, as testified to before the committee, all the way from $5,000 (the sum testified by Mr. Fordyce) to $20,000 per annum, as testified to by other witnesses. Mr. Fordyce claims that the present tenants are entitled to lease the premises again at the expiration of their present lease in 1888 at a low rate. Mr. Fordyce testified that $2,000 was about the right figure per annum for another ten years, and there is no doubt but that another attempt will be made in this or in the Fiftieth Congress for a renewal of this lease at a nominal rental, and the astounding claim is made that these parties have some claim or equity in this property that the Government ought to recognize. And I have no doubt that this certificate for $22,000 is held by Fordyce, Stitt & Co. to create the impression that they have been unfairly dealt with by the Government, in order to give them the appearance of some sort of standing in the consideration of Congress, and this in face of the fact that they have received from the Government a certificate for more money than they would have been entitled to under their agreement with Governor Rector at the expiration of their lease from him, and that they have put on all the improvements since, amounting to $25,000, while they were occupying as tenants under a fixed term, which state of facts renders the improvements the property of the Government. Nor are there any equities in the case that call for any consideration from Congress. When the present lease expires the gentleman will have made out of the Government the difference between $1,000 per annum, the present rental, and $5,000 per annum, the actual annual rental value according to Mr. Fordyce, or $30,000 for ten years.

All these facts, Mr. Chairman, lead to but one conclusion. I was disposed to think two years ago that the Government, having entered upon this policy, had better continue it, correcting the abuses as best they may. But time seems only to increase the abuses. The only remedy is for the Government to relinquish the hotel and bath-house business, make a sale of this valuable property, and turn the proceeds into the Treasury. If the property is worth one or two million of dollars, as many gentlemen of competent judgment believe, that sum would go a long way to make up the deficiency in the next fiscal year that our friends on the other side of the House so much dread.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like very much to go on for a few minutes longer, so as to complete my statement.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I do not think the gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. DUNN. I do not think the other side of the House should have all the time on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired, and the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I shall not be able in the time I shall get to correct the inaccuracies and misrepresentations which have been made, inadvertently no doubt, in reference to the Hot Springs reservation. If it were an original proposition as to what we were to do with the Hot Springs reservation we might well enter into a discussion of the merits of the plan we have heretofore adopted, and which is now criticised. But it is not an original proposition, and it is not up for discussion now.

The simple proposition now is to strike out from this appropriation bill (the sundry civil) a provision for the continuation of the improvement of the Hot Springs Creek. In support of that provision of the bill I will send a letter from the Surgeon-General to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and ask that it be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 12, 1886.

SIR: In reply to your letter of May 11, requesting information as to whether the appropriation of $20,000 (or so much of it as may be needed to continue the main sewer below Reserve avenue in Hot Springs, Ark.), is necessary for sanitary purposes, I have the honor to state that the present sewer terminates just below the site of the Army and Navy hospital, and the emanations from it can not be other than dangerous and deleterious to the health of the inmates of that institution. It is essential and necessary for sanitary reasons touching this hospital, as well as for the welfare of the residents of that part of the town, that this sewer should be continued at least 200 to 250 yards down the stream.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. MURRAY,
Surgeon-General, United States Army.

To the CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
House of Representatives.

Mr. ROGERS. I send up now to be read by the Clerk a document prepared by the Secretary of the Interior. The Clerk will only read the last paragraph on the second page, which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the act of March 3, 1885, an appropriation was made for the continuation of the improvement of Hot Springs Creek across Reserve avenue at the southern boundary of the reservation. It has been urgently represented to this Department that the improvement should be continued beyond this point. The bed of the creek immediately below Reserve avenue has not sufficient fall to carry off the water emptied from the culvert or sewer which has been constructed, and the completed work is endangered by the backing up of the water from this cause after any unusual rainfall. The Department is also advised that important sanitary reasons are advanced by the officers in charge of the Army and Navy hospital against the emptying of the sewer in such close proximity to the hospital.

The amount estimated for this work is $20,000.

Very respectfully,

L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. ROGERS. Congress by two acts, the last in 1880, dedicated the Hot Springs and the land upon which they are situate forever to the Government. To use its own language in the bill, "the Hot Springs, with the reservation and the mountain, are hereby dedicated to the United States, and shall remain forever free from sale or alienation." In 1880 that was repeated in the second act, in which they also provided for free baths for the poor of the United States, as provided in acts of Congress.

In response to my friend from Pennsylvania who thinks the Government should not have originally embarked in this matter, I wish to say that that subject is not now under consideration. If it were, others no doubt would differ with him, and much might be said on both sides.

The Government, in pursuance of this plan heretofore adopted, have constructed at the extreme lower corner of the reservation front what is known as the Army and Navy hospital.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the time of the gentleman will not be curtailed beyond the time allowed to the other side.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I ask that the gentleman be allowed to proceed.

Mr. DUNN. I yield to the gentleman five minutes, if I can be recognized.

Mr. ROGERS. They have constructed on the lower corner of this property, some 70 yards from the mouth of the arch over the creek, this Army and Navy hospital.

It is well known that the offal and filth, the gravel and refuse matter in the upper part of the city, and that part of it lying above the mouth of the arch (for the city lies largely above the mouth of the arch) is washed down the mountain-side and carried into the creek above the mouth of the arch, and on through the arch until it gets to the lower end of it.

The water while confined between the two smooth walls of the arch sweeps along with great force and carries everything with it; but when it reaches the lower end of the arch, under the very nose of the hospital, as I have said, the water at once spreads out over the creek bottom, and whatever it carries is spread out on the sides of the creek to rot and breed disease. Not only so, but the débris, gravel, small rocks, and other matter, forms a sort of bar just below the mouth of the arch, where there is very little fall to the creek, and the Secretary of the Interior tells us dams up the water, endangering the work already done. Some 300 yards below this point the creek has very considerable fall, enough, it is thought, for the natural flow of the water to carry off most of the filth and débris that accumulate at the mouth of the arch where the fall is so slight.

Now, if you leave the creek improvement in the shape it is in now, it is in an infinitely worse condition, so far as the health of the hospital is concerned and the city itself, than before the sewer was constructed. So that in pursuance of the policy heretofore inaugurated by the Government, the Surgeon-General of the United States Army has recommended that this sewer be extended further down. This idea is indorsed by the Secretary of the Interior under whose charge the matter will be placed, in fact he has charge of the whole of that reservation with the exception of the Army and Navy hospital.

It is stated that the extension of the arch will be on and for the benefit of private property. That, I think, is a mistake. The extension will run along a public street, as I recollect, the entire distance. It will no doubt improve private property on both sides of it. In that connection let me add that it will be an advantage in another way to the Government to extend this sewer some two or three hundred yards along this street. The Government owns a large amount of property further down the stream on the line of the sewer. There were originally laid off, I believe, some twelve hundred lots. Six hundred of these were sold to persons who had made improvements prior to the settlement of the question of title by the Supreme Court of the United States, when it was determined that the property belonged to the Government.

The residue of these lots remaining unsold still belong to the Government, except such as have been since sold, so that in the construction of this sewer, below the point where it now stops, you not only take away all of the origin of disease from the hospital built by the Government for the benefit of the soldiers and sailors, and from that part of the city lying adjacent to it, but you likewise improve at the same time this property of the Government below that point, and incidentally, it is true, as I have said, also improve private property. I do not think that there could be a valid objection to the construction of the sewer because of the fact that private property will be incidentally improved.

If the improvement is a necessary and desirable one for the Government, we will not stop because some citizen will be benefited by its prosecution.

But in addition, Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that my friend from New York was led inadvertently to mix up his suppositions with my statements. It is, I suppose, true that the people at Hot Springs insisted originally on the necessity of arching the creek, for at that time the street in front of the Government property was almost impassable. The creek at that point was on the Government property. If they could have raised the money they had no right to touch it; but they did not have it and could not raise it to carry on so large an enterprise. This creek, an ugly, rough, almost impassable mountain gulch, runs right in front of the Government reservation, in which the hot water is found and where the bath-houses stood. The arching of the creek has gotten rid of this ugly stream, made a pretty street along the reservation front, made the bath-houses accessible, and enhanced the property of the Government.

I presume it is also true that they thought it wise for the Government to lay its own sewer-main between the base of the mountain and the arch of the creek, so that the waste-water and other filth from the bath-houses could be taken off and not taken into the stream. Indeed the Interior Department thought so, too, for in the original plans for the improvement of this creek the sewer-main was provided for. Experience has proven that the Department and the people were right on that point, and that it was unfortunate for both that the original contract in that regard was changed.

The property-owners, impressed with its importance, have raised the money and have put down the sewer-main on both sides of the street, except along the Government front, where they had no legal right to go; nor was it right, I submit, for them to go on the Government side. I presume they will be compelled to empty the sewer-main into the creek, at the upper reservation line, unless the Government will provide for a sewer-main along its own front, and this will leave the whole filth and offal of that side of the street to be emptied, as heretofore, at the mouth of the creek, under the nose of the hospital, at the back door of the post-office, in close proximity to one of the large hotels, and in the very heart of the business part of the city.

Mr. STORM. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. ROGERS. Certainly.

Mr. STORM. If the lateral sewers are extended on each side down the stream to carry off the sewage of the city, what is the necessity for arching the stream farther down?

Mr. ROGERS. The question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is, why is it necessary to extend the arch farther down the stream if the sewer main be laid? But my friend singles out one view of the question and forgets the other. One reason is that if the Government does not put down its own sewer-pipe along the reservation front in order to carry off the filth from the bath-houses and reservation, it must be emptied into the creek and carried down to the mouth of the arch, where it will be deposited as I have explained. I have just shown that it is spread out at that point over the creek bottom after it leaves the main sewer and is a source of disease to the hospital.

But suppose this sewer main is provided, and that the sewerage from the Hot Springs Mountain, bath-houses and Army and Navy hospital, &c., is emptied into it, still in the upper part of the town there will be much filth collected from the mountain sides that will never reach the sewer system, but will find its way into the creek, and the result will be the same as before the sewer main was laid as to all such matters. It must not be forgotten that in all that country stock runs at large, people come from all parts of the country and camp on the mountain sides above the arch, and the creek will be the natural sewer main for all filth from these sources. There is no help or remedy for this. It must always pass through this arch. But the Secretary of the Interior has answered the question; for he tells us at the mouth of the sewer the water dams up and endangers the work already done. I have said that a few hundred yards lower down the fall of the creek is greater, and this will be obviated.

It is for the very purpose of getting rid of this bar that it must be done. The Government must connect its sewer with the city sewers above and below and extend the creek arch down the stream so that all this matter will be carried off to the river. So that in either event it becomes absolutely necessary for the protection of the Government work itself that this sewer shall be extended beyond the point where it now is; and I apprehend it will probably be necessary for the city itself, after the Government has preserved its own property, to take steps to open up this creek, and to let this water go directly out into the Wachita River which is 3, 4, or 5 miles farther south. These are the main reasons.

I do not care at this time to respond to what has been stated about the other matters referred to, because they do not relate to the subjects now under consideration; and I have always found it wiser and better when you want to legislate to confine yourself to the subject under discusion.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Does the gentleman maintain that this reservation is inalienable; that it can not be sold?

Mr. ROGERS. Not at all. I have stated that that law simply indicates the purpose and policy of the Government.

Mr. BEACH. What do you say to the proposition to turn it over to your State?

Mr. ROGERS. That question is not under consideration now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. While I was for the moment out of the House the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] has caused to be read a letter from the Surgeon General's Office which gives the reason of the committee for inserting this item of $20,000 in this bill. There has been already appropriated, if my memory serves me, $116,000.

Mr. PAYNE. There has been expended $180,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I think I am right.

Mr. PAYNE. The appropriations are about $116,000; but besides that there has been expended by the Secretary of the Interior $44,000, which was the avails of sales of lands, and which he was authorized by the acts authorizing the sales to appropriate for the improvement of the creek.

Mr. RANDALL. My knowledge is only as to the appropriations. The gentleman may be correct in the statement he has just made, and I do not propose to gainsay it. But there was a direct appropriation in 1883 of $33,700; in 1885, of $75,000; in 1886, of about $8,000 more; in all, $116,000.

In this bill the committee provide for $20,000 more to complete this work which has been commenced and on which this amount of $116,000 has been expended. The appropriation is made to finish the work, and that it may not be offensive or the cause of unhealthfulness to the inmates of the hospital. I want to defend the action of the committee. I think this is a wise expenditure of $20,000 to complete this work. I dismiss all these criticisms and controversies. I do not know that I originally gave my support to this enterprise or this hospital. But here we are with $116,000 expended, or, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] says, $44,000 more than that, and here are 250 yards of this sewer or this creek work to be finished. We have the authority of the Medical Department of the Government for saying that unless we do this disease will be bred in that hospital. I say as a prudent business man it is better for us to give this $20,000, although it may have been of doubtful expediency in the beginning, and finish the work. That is just what any of you would do in the management of your business.

Mr. STORM. Two expert engineers came before the committee and testified that by removing some loose stone and rocks beyond the end of this covering of the stream to facilitate the flow of water the whole difficulty would be removed. Those engineers live in Hot Springs.

Mr. ROGERS. Theory is one thing, practice is another. It has been found after every rain that falls of any amount it becomes necessary for the city to go down with its force and remove the obstructions at the mouth of the creek to get rid of the débris and other matter that is accumulated in the heart of the city at the mouth of the creek improvement.

Mr. PAYNE. If the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will give me his attention I think I can convince him that this appropriation is entirely unnecessary. He would have been convinced of this if he had been down there himself and inspected these works personally.

Mr. RANDALL. I never had occasion.

Mr. PAYNE. In the first place there ought not to be any drainage into what gentlemen are pleased to call a sewer but which is in no sense a sewer. It is an archway 11 feet wide on the bottom and 7 or 8 feet high. It is placed there for the purpose of carrying away the waters of Hot Springs, and the waters coming from the mountains make quite a large creek of water. Gentlemen will see no sewer, and no sewerage should empty into this archway or into this creek.

The city of Hot Springs, as has been said, has built a sewer on one bank of this creek. Now, there is nothing in the world to prevent that city from building another on the other bank.

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman misunderstood me. The city have built theirs on the opposite side of the creek.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; on one side of the archway on the other side of the creek. The gentleman says they have built a sewer on the other side of the archway coming down to the Government reservation.

Mr. DUNN. No; beyond the street.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, this street, Central Avenue, has been conveyed by the Government to the city of Hot Springs, and there is nothing to prevent the city from building this sewer through the public street, even if it is in front of the Government reservation, thus taking care of the sewage and garbage of their city themselves and carrying it off below the Government reservation. Certainly there is no reason why the Government should extend this improvement, which has been already "completed"—for the appropriation made in 1885 was for the completion of it across Reserve Avenue and four or five rods below the line of the reservation—there is no reason in the world, I say, why the Government should extend that improvement beyond the Government property when every sanitary consideration can be subserved by a simple sewer; and that, as I have said, should be built by the city of Hot Springs. But if it is necessary for the Government to have sewerage from the Army and Navy hospital, they can build a sewer at a very slight expense compared with this appropriation of $20,000.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, it is absolutely necessary in order to take off the filth and water from the bath-houses and the reservation that the sewer main shall be between the archway and the reservation, and that is on Government property.

Mr. PAYNE. Then why do you not offer an amendment giving the city of Hot Springs the right of way across there to build it?

Mr. ROGERS. To build a sewer for the Government?

Mr. PAYNE. The Government have not any sewage there. They rent some buildings, to be sure. They rent the hotel and these bath-houses, but they have not any sewage to be carried off. However, if you insist on the Government building a sewer across the reservation, then put in an appropriation here of a couple of thousand dollars, which will be quite sufficient for that purpose, and do not appropriate $20,000 for an improvement which will be altogether for the benefit of private parties.

Mr. DUNN. The city of Hot Springs does not want the Government to build this sewer for it. If the Government does not need the sewer for its own purposes, it ought not to be buiit. The people of Hot Springs do not care about it, and if the gentleman thinks he would be punishing them by withholding this appropriation, he is mistaken.

Mr. RANDALL, I hope we shall have a vote now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH] proposing to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 38, noes 42.

Mr. BEACH. I think we had better have tellers on this question.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have tellers; but I hope that after we have had a vote by tellers the gentleman will not make the point of order that there is no quorum.

Mr. BEACH. I do not know yet just what I shall do about that.

Tellers were ordered; and the chairman appointed Mr. BEACH and Mr. RANDALL.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 42, noes 46.

Mr. BEACH. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to detain the committee, and if I can have a vote in the House on this proposition I will not make the point that there is no quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. I agree to that.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was as follows:

After line 946 insert: "And for providing a system of reservoirs and pumps, and for other purposes, necessary to the collection and distribution of the hot water in the Hot Springs reservation, Arkansas, $31,000.

Mr. NELSON. I make the point of order that that is new legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no law authorizing those reservoirs.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment is as follows:

After line 946 insert: "And for providing a system of reservoirs and pumps, and for other purposes, necessary to the collection and distribution of the hot water in the Hot Springs reservation, Arkansas, $31,000."

Mr. NELSON. I make the point of order that that is new legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no law authorizing those reservoirs.

Mr. ROGERS. I desire to be heard on the point of order. The point is that this is new legislation, and the determination of the point involves looking to some extent into the history of legislation upon the Hot Springs reservation. It will be remembered that the Army and Navy hospital and the bath-house for the indigent have been provided for by existing law.

Mr. FELTON. Do the indigent have to pay for their baths in that bath-house?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir; under a former administration I am advised they did; but that has been discontinued. It was an abuse that has been corrected.

Mr. Chairman, in the appropriation act of June 30, 1882, this provision was contained:

For construction and repair of hospitals, as reported by the Surgeon-General of the Army, $75,000: Provided, That $100,000 be, and hereby is, appropriated for the erection of an Army and Navy hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., which shall be erected by and under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with plans and specifications to be prepared and submitted to the Secretary of War by the Surgeons-General of the Army and Navy; which hospital, when in a condition to receive patients, shall be subject to such rules, regulations, and restrictions as shall be provided by the President of the United States: Provided further, That such hospital shall be erected on the Government reservation at or near Hot Springs, Ark.

It will be remembered that this Army and Navy hospital, now just about completed, so that it will be ready to be occupied in thirty or at the outside sixty days, is located on this reservation and in immediate proximity to the hot water. All the hot water of the Government is on this reservation, and within about 400 or 500 yards of the Army and Navy hospital.

In addition to the law authorizing the construction of this building, there is in the act of December 16, 1878, this provision:

And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to lease to the present proprietors of the Arlington Hotel or their assigns the grounds, not exceeding 1 acre, now occupied by them, for a period of ten years, unless otherwise provided by law, at an annual rental of $1,000. And he is further directed to lease the bath-houses of a permanent nature now upon the Hot Springs reservation to the owners of the same, and lease to any person or persons upon such terms as may be agreed on, sites for the building of other bath-houses for the term of five years, unless otherwise provided by law, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe; and the tax imposed shall not exceed $15 per tub per annum, including land rent: Provided, That said leases shall in no way prejudice any legal right that any person or persons may have acquired under the act hereby revived and continued, to any improvements on said ground: And provided further, That to prevent monopoly, no bath-house or hotel shall be supplied with more than enough water for forty bath-tubs of the usual size, unless there shall be more than enough hot water to supply all other demands for the same, in which case no single establishment shall be allowed more than forty bath-tubs of the usual size: And provided further, That the superintendent shall provide and maintain a sufficient number of free baths for the use of the indigent, and the expense thereof shall be defrayed out of the rentals hereinbefore provided for.

Situated in close proximity, therefore, to the Army and Navy hospital on the reservation is what my friend from New York denominates the "Mudhole," which is simply a place excavated out of the rock, to which water is conveyed and to which hundreds of poor people go every day and under the supervision of an agent of the Government enjoy those baths. The law requires that this shall be kept up, and it has likewise provided for the Army and Navy hospital.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the expenditures made have been under the general law allowing the Secretary of the Interior to appropriate the proceeds of the Government lots at Hot Springs to the general improvement of this reservation. Aside from that there have been specific appropriations also for the construction of the arching over the creek which we have just discussed; but with the exception of the legislation with reference to the creek and the Army and Navy hospital, our whole legislation has had reference to the general improvement of this reservation, which was dedicated previously to the United States.

Now, in the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress a committee was appointed to inquire into the condition of things in relation to that reservation. That committee, in their report submitted at the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress, use this language:

Another evil, the existence of which was developed to the committee, should in their judgment be remedied by appropriate measures as quickly as possible.

The daily flow of water from the springs amounts, according to the best information that could be obtained, to a sufficient quantity to furnish baths for twenty-five thousand persons every twelve hours, but nearly two-thirds of this is allowed to run to waste and flow unused into the creek. The only means at present provided by the Government for the collection of the hot water is a single brick tank or reservoir, which in point of size is wholly inadequate to serve the purpose for which it was designed.

The committee would therefore recommend that a larger and better constructed reservoir be at once provided of sufficient capacity to contain all the water that flows from the springs, from which it can be distributed through pipes to the different bath-houses, with some arrangement for measuring the quantity furnished to each one. This they deem a matter of the highest importance, and call attention to the plans for such work which accompany the testimony in this matter, the cost of which will amount, as shown by the estimates furnished, to the sum of about $30,000, though the committee are of opinion that it can be done at far less expense.

The committee think that the bathing facilities and accommodations now provided for indigent invalids are wholly inadequate, and they would recommend that suitable houses for this purpose be at once erected at some point on the reservation in the near vicinity of the springs.

There is another provision of the report which I will not read, but will merely state its substance. It is found on page 15, where the committee show that by reason of blasting, which had been imprudently carried on, the spring which formerly fed what is termed the "Mud-hole," or bath-house for the indigent, had been completely destroyed, so that the place was left without water.

Now, the Secretary of the Interior—the present Secretary as well as Mr. Teller—has recommended to this House the construction of this work.

Mr. RANDALL. The recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior is not law.

Mr. ROGERS. I understand that. If the gentleman will listen he will find that I am using this recommendation for the purpose of showing that the amendment offered is not new legislation, but that there is existing law under which a provision of this kind is authorized. Mr. Teller said:

To provide the bath-houses upon the reservation as well as the Army and Navy hospital, with an adequate supply of hot water it is necessary that the water now running to waste should be gathered into reservoirs for distribution.

Mr. Lamar, the present Secretary of the Interior, recommended at the present session the very same thing. On page 68 of this report will be found these words:

The daily flow of water from all the springs upon the reservation has been estimated at 500,000 gallons; of this the greater portion is from springs below the grade line of the bath-houses, and under the present imperfect method of collecting and distributing the water it can not be utilized.

The increasing demand for water to supply the bath-houses provided for the general public and the recently established army and navy hospital render it necessary that some system should be adopted by which all the hot water may be made available.

He then refers to the report of the committee of the Forty-eighth Congress, which I have previously read, in support of the suggestions made. I will not stop to read that again.

Now to get back to the point. I want to make this statement distinctly and unequivocally that the Government has already embarked in the construction of one reservoir. It has embarked already in the construction of a navy and army hospital, the purpose for which it was located there being that the Army and Navy might receive the benefit of the hot water on that reservation. Considering the language of the Secretary of the Interior, the Committee on Appropriations as well as Congress is notified that unless additional means are provided for the preservation of this hot water they can not supply the army and navy hospital and bath houses; that unless we construct these pumps and reservoirs to collect hot water there we can not supply it to our army and navy hospital nor to the public bath-houses leased by the Government to citizens there nor to the baths set apart for the poor. The chairman therefore must hold, I submit, that this is a continuation of work already begun and in progress. We stand in the attitude of having erected a building on a Government reservation to secure the benefit of this hot water for the Army and Navy, and when ready for occupancy the supply necessary for running it is not provided. Why is not the furnishing of water to the hospital as necessary as furnishing bath-tubs for the hot water or furnishing means for the heating of it?

Bath-house and bath-tubs without water for the hospital will be utterly useless. Unless the hot water is collected in this or some other way it can not be had. How can it be said, therefore, that a provision in this bill to provide for the hot water for the hospital is new legislation or that it is not in continuation of the work already begun? But if this appropriation is for the continuation of a work already begun it is not obnoxious to the rule prohibiting "new legislation on an appropriation bill." Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I submit that the point of order should be overruled.

I will not now go further into the discussion of the necessity for this work. But if the point of order is overruled I think I shall be able to show that there is an imperative necessity for it, and that it should be done. As the point of order made against it by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is all that is now presented, I think I should not go beyond a discussion of that. I conclude, therefore, by saying that I regard the providing of water for the hospital as the continuation of the work begun, and that the appropriation for reservoirs is only supplying the means for getting the water.

Mr. RANDALL. I have nothing to do with the recommendation of officers or with the argument as it has been made here to-day. I say this is new legislation, and the language of the estimate itself proves that it is. It provides a new system of reservoirs and pumps for the collection of this hot water.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the question. Its attention has not been called to any legislation providing for pumps and reservoirs. Whether they are necessary to carry on what heretofore has been done is matter of argument. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries and commissions of registers and receivers: For salaries and commissions of registers of land offices and receivers of public moneys at district land offices, at not exceeding $3,000 each, $475,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to be heard on that paragraph, and therefore, as it is near the hour of adjournment, I suggest the committee rise.

Mr. RANDALL moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. REAGAN, from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration the sundry civil bill (H. R. 9478), and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 67) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter;

A bill (H. R. 183) providing for printing the first annual report of the Commissioner of Labor;

A bill (H. R. 524) granting a pension to Daniel H. Ross; and

J. M. HIATT.

Mr. HALL. I ask, by unanimous consent, to take up for present consideration Senate bill 1942 for the relief of J. M. Hiatt, surviving partner, &c.

Mr. BEACH. I object to doing business with so limited a House.

Mr. MCMILLIN moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (accordingly at 5 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

Mr. ALLISON. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back with sundry amendments and with a written report the bill (H. Mr. MAHONE. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report favorably the bill (H. R. 4335) making an appropriation to continue the construction of the public building at Clarksburg, W. Va., and changing the limit of cost thereof. As the work is progressing now, and the appropriation is needed in order to prevent a stoppage of the work, I ask that the bill may be put upon its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill reported by him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that a public-building bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then it ought to take its place on the Calendar; we shall go to all those bills in a short time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1391) to provide for the erection of a public building in Springfield, Mo., reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1162) for the erection of a post-office building at Lynn, Mass., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1880) for the completion of a public building at Nebraska City, Nebr., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, reported three amendments intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 8336) granting an increase of pension to Duncan Forbes; and

A bill (H. R. 5051) to place the name of Jacob Madison Pruitt on the pension-roll.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2450) granting a pension to Abner Daily, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2720) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands in Kansas, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Commerce, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 816) to give the right of trial by jury to claimants of pensions, under the laws of the United States, whose applications have been rejected by the Secretary of the Interior on appeal from the decision of the Commissioner of Pensions, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

WILLIAM H. F. LEE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I report from the Committee on the Judiciary an original bill to remove the political disabilities of William H. F. Lee, for which, as usual, I ask present consideration.

The bill (S. 2759) to remove the political disabilities of William H. F. Lee, was read twice by its title; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative.

JOHN K. MITCHELL.

Mr. GEORGE. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2721) to remove the disabilities of John K. Mitchell, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered at this time.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The title ought to be amended by inserting the word "political" before "disabilities."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ought not the word "political" to be inserted before "disabilities" in the body of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. We thought as the Constitution only imposes political disabilities that would not be necessary, but only to make the title show. We examined that, and while it is usual it does not seem to be necessary.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to remove the political disabilities of John K. Mitchell."

FEDERAL COURTS IN COLORADO.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3014) to provide for terms of court in Colorado, to report it favorably without amendment. Inasmuch as it will excite no opposition, I ask that the bill may be considered at the present time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the district of Colorado shall be held at the times and places hereinafter designated, namely: At Denver, on the first Tuesday in May and the first Tuesday in November in each year; at Pueblo, on the first Tuesday in April in each year; at Del Norte, on the first Tuesday in August in each year.

SEC. 2. That acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed, but such repeal shall not affect any term of court now in progress. Any court now being held in said district pursuant to an act of Congress may be continued in the same manner and with like effect as if this act had not been passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think on hearing the bill, although it is as much my fault, if there is any fault at all, as it is the fault of my friend from Iowa, that it is open to question whether the law providing for existing terms differing from these is legally inconsistent with this. I think, therefore, the bill had better go on the Calendar, and we had better provide a little amendment, and say that instead of the terms now provided by law these shall be held.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The bill provides that the terms now in course of being held may be continued.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But it would be still open. That would only apply to terms that happen to be sitting at this present time, and the fact that the term is to be held a month before by the existing law and is not now sitting would not seem to be inconsistent with Congress providing in a legal sense for a term to be held a month later, another and independent term; and I think we had better correct that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that it may be proceeded with now. The judge there, Judge Hallett, drew the bill and sent it down here, and I have no doubt it is well guarded and will take care of the courts. If we are going to pass the bill he ought to know it at once, so that the jury may be assembled for the August term. I hope the Senator from Vermont will withdraw the objection and let the bill pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not the least possible objection to the bill, but it does not depend merely on the judge; it depends on the law. If there is anything in the suggestion I have made, and the more I think of it the more I think there is—if there is any inconsistency between the present terms of sitting and those provided by this bill, criminals who were bound over to appear at the next term of court and suitors will come to a court not sitting at all, and the judge will not be there, and they will get off; while a single word or two will correct that and save all possible difficulty.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I hope the Senator from Vermont will suggest an amendment now to that effect.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Senator from Vermont has formulated such an amendment as he desires to the bill, and I hope it may now be acted on.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend by adding at the end of the first section:

Instead of the terms now provided for by law.

And making the period which now stands after the word "year," at the end of the section, a comma.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, accompanied by a report, which I ask may be printed.

I give notice that I shall ask the Senate on Wednesday morning, or as soon as the legislative appropriation bill is disposed of, to take up and consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, and the report will be printed under the rule.

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report the following resolution; and I ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing is hereby authorized and directed to inquire into the public printing and binding and the distribution and sale of public documents, including the reports of debates, showing the manner in which the work has been executed in years past, with the cost thereof; with authority to sit during the coming recess, to employ a stenographer, and to call for information upon those departments of Government which have printing and binding executed at the Government Printing Office, with a view to the reduction of expenses, and to report a codification of the laws on printing and binding, in print, at the commencement of the next session, embodying such reforms as may to them seem desirable and practicable.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Nebraska to enlarge the inquiry so as to include engraving, lithographing, and other illustrations in connection with public printing.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have no objection to that change. I think perhaps the resolution might as well lie over until to-morrow and be printed.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I move to add:

And engraving and lithographing connected with the printing of public documents.

Mr. PLATT. Photolithographing.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I will say photolithographing.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the resolution may be printed and lie over. I should like to look at the resolution before it is acted upon.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have made that request.

Mr. HOAR. I should like before the resolution goes over to add to the scope of the resolution an inquiry in regard to the distribution of documents.

Mr. MANDERSON. That is already in it.

Mr. HOAR. I did not think it was quite covered.

Mr. MANDERSON. If the resolution does not cover it, I will see that it does.

Mr. PLATT. Let the resolution be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and lie over.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2760) granting an increase of pension to Henry Slaughter; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2761) to incorporate the Windsor Hotel Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2762) granting a pension to James E. Kabler; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2763) granting a pension to Clarinda McLean Holmberg; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TELLER. The other day when the bill for the relief of Fitz-John Porter was before the Senate I offered an amendment to that bill. Some of the members of the Military Committee said the proper course to be pursued was to introduce a separate and independent bill. Without committing myself to the practice of placing officers upon the retired-list, I desire to introduce a bill for the appointment and retirement of General Pleasonton, and I ask to have it referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 2764) authorizing the President to appoint and retire Alfred Pleasonton a major-general was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, introduced a bill (S. 2765) to increase the pension of James Mans; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMDEN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2766) for the relief of Elizabeth Mulvehill and William Lavery; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WITTHORNE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2767) to authorize the southwest extension of the Le Roy and Caney Valley Air-Line Railroad to construct and operate a railway through Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. VEST (by request) introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 73) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a permit to John F. Chamberlin to erect a hotel upon the lands of the United States at Fortress Monroe, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. DAWES submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN R. REYNOLDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The occupant of the chair submits for adoption the following resolution:

Resolved, That the claim of John R. Reynolds, now of the city of Dayton, in the State of Ohio, and late of the State of Mississippi, for quartermaster and commissary stores and supplies and other property alleged to have been sold to and taken and used by the United States Army during the late war from the plantation of said Reynolds, in the vicinity of Natchez, Miss., be referred to the Secretary of War, who shall investigate the justice and equity of said claim and the loyalty of said claimant, and report the amount and value of said supplies sold to the said Army, and the amount and value of other said property taken and used by the said Army, and also what amount, if any, has been paid on the same, and that he report all the facts and evidence in the case for the further consideration of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That ought to be referred to the Committee on Claims, clearly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no objection, and the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

EXECUTIVE SESSIONS WITH OPEN DOORS.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to give notice that on Wednesday next, after the conclusion of the morning business, I shall ask the Senate to take up the resolution for open sessions so that I may submit some remarks, unless the condition of the public business should be such at that time that it would be inconvenient to the Senate. If it is, I shall not ask the favor.

EMILY J. STANNARD.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to move, with the permission of and after consultation with my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], that the Senate proceed to the consideration of one pension bill on the Calendar, Senate bill 2609. I ask, in making this motion, unanimous consent to say simply that this lady, Mrs. Stannard, has been for years a totally helpless person, so that she can not lift her hands to her face, and her family are absolutely destitute, too proud to accept charity and too poor to live without the provision that her husband had and which she now wants. I ask therefore that the Senate may take up and consider the bill.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Emily C. Stannard, widow of the late George J. Stannard, brevet major-general of volunteers, at the rate of $100 per month, from and after June 1, 1886.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill should be amended in the middle initial of the name. "C" should be changed to "J".

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; it should be "Emily J. Stannard."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be made, if there be no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Emily J. Stannard."

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the committee of conference on the Post-Office appropriation bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5887) "making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887," having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

P. B. PLUMB,
WM. MAHONE,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JAMES H. BLOUNT,
J. M. RIGGS,
HENRY H. BINGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What motion does the Senator from Kansas make?

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate still further insist on its amendments to the bill, and ask for a further conference with the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a further conference.

Mr. PLUMB. On that motion the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] desires to be heard, and I think some other Senators also.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President, the bill as passed by the Senate made an appropriation of $800,000 for the support of foreign mail service in American-built steamers. That provision attracted a good deal of public attention, and it is the importance attached to the question of making the appropriation which induces me to assign the reasons why I favor it.

In February, 1881, a few months after I took my seat in this body being a member of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, of which the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] was then chairman, I was instructed to report from that committee an amendment to be offerred to the Post-Office appropriation bill. What took place when I presented the amendment will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 2, part 2, Forty-sixth Congress, third session, page 1410:

Mr. PUGH. I offer an amendment from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to come in at the end of section 1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, at the end of line 197, to add the following:

For additional postal service to foreign countries, $1,000,000, to be expended under the direction of the Postmaster-General, in the establishment of mail steamship lines, equitably distributed among the Atlantic, Mexican, Gulf, and Pacific ports: Provided, That the vessels employed for such service shall be owned and manned by American citizens, and that said vessels thus employed shall be iron steamships, accepted by the Secretary of the Navy, after due inspection, as in all respects seaworthy and properly entitled to such service.

Upon that amendment I addressed the Senate as follows:

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President, I should not undertake to consume the valuable time of the Senate in addressing it upon this amendment were I not impressed with the fact that I can not render a more valuable service to the people of Alabama, whom I in part represent, and in fact to the people of the South, than to give in the form that I have them the figures, the reflections, and the views upon this great subject, to which they have paid no attention and about which they are uninformed, and I make that apology for trespassing upon the courtesy of the Senate.

Mr. President, the amendment reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to the bill (H. R. 6972) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department is intentionally left incomplete in some important provisions, about which each member of the committee is free to act in accordance with his convictions when the amendment is before the Senate. The main purpose of the committee was to introduce to the Senate for its consideration and action a subject of pressing and paramount importance—a great American question affecting the present and future welfare of every class and condition in each of the United States. Congress is confronted by the undisputed facts in the Report of the Bureau of Statistics on the Foreign Commerce of the United States that "the total value of the foreign commerce of the United States, embracing both imports and exports, amounted last year to $1,613,770,633 and was larger than during any previous year in the history of the country;" that "during the five years ending June 30, 1876, 1877, 1878, 1879, and 1880, the value of our exports of domestic merchandise from the United States has greatly exceeded the value of imports of foreign merchandise into the United States, this excess amounting in the five years to the sum of $825,400,513;" that "the value of the exports during the last fiscal year exceeded the value of such exports during the preceding fiscal year $125,199,217, an increase of over 17 per cent.;" that "the value of the imports during the last fiscal year exceeded the value of such imports during the preceding fiscal year $222,176,971, an increase of over 49 per cent.;" that "the rapid increase in the value of the exports from 1860 to 1880 is shown by the fact that the specie value of such exports during the year ended June 30, 1870, amounted to only $376,616,473, whereas during the year ended June 30, 1880, it amounted to $823,946,353, or an increase of 119 per cent."

When we survey the almost boundless extent of American territory, exceeding as it does the whole of Europe, surrounded as it is by two oceans, the gulf, and the lakes, with an ocean front equal to all other nations combined, and 90,000 miles of splendid railways, and capabilities, opportunities, probabilities, and possibilities for agricultural, commercial, mechanical, mineral, and manufacturing production and development, we are bewildered by the grand spectacle, and rejoice that we are Americans. Great Britain, France, and Germany, the lions of Europe, have culminated in their internal food-producing capacity, and found themselves largely dependent upon American surplus for support of their dense populations. The only self-supporting, attractive resource left for their capital, genius, and enterprise is found in manufacturing and mining at home and their commerce with foreign nations. The total foreign commerce of the United States with Great Britain during last year was $664,410,191; with France it was $169,407,456; with Germany, $109,407,456.

The internal food-producing capacity of the United States is out of the reach of computation. Our boundless fields, in full view of American capital, genius, and enterprise, have attracted and absorbed them, and profitable investment and employment therein have wholly diverted all the agencies of improvement and progress from foreign fields and engaged them in home development. And we find ourselves amazed and confounded by our rapid growth and sudden dimensions. And yet we are in our infancy, and just approaching the untouched and inexhaustible realities and advantages of our situation.

Let us call a halt and look around, and see what is going on between us and our foreign neighbors.

In 1860 we imported in American vessels $228,164,855, and exported same year in American vessels $279,082,902. During the same year we imported in foreign vessels $134,001,399, and exported $121,039,394, making in the aggregate of imports and exports during the year 1860, in American vessels, $507,247,757; and in foreign vessels $255,049,793, over 66 per cent. in favor of American vessels.

In 1880 our imports in American vessels amounted to $164,087,606, and in foreign vessels to $579,394,159. The same year our exports in American vessels amounted to $115,917,891, and in foreign vessels to $730,072,437, a falling off from American vessels to about 17 from over 66 per cent. in twenty years.

This startling loss of the ocean carrying trade of the United States with foreign countries works an annual drainage in coin from American income of about one hundred and thirty millions per annum, paid by Americans to foreign ship-owners for freights and passengers. The causes that produced this remarkable result have been the subject of much speculative inquiry. We find that the United States was the master in ship-building and in the foreign carrying trade when vessels were made of wood and moved by wind and sail; but now, when ships are built of iron and propelled by steam, their superiority in every particular has given them the sway, and England, getting the start and devoting her energy and capital to the buiding of iron steamships and employing them in the foreign carrying trade, while we were engaged and absorbed in home production, development, and enterprise, has established her supremacy upon the ocean.

We have not only lost our carrying trade, and are humiliated by the fact that we have not a single iron ship carrying our flag across the ocean, but American sailors, once the pride and boast of the whole country, have disappeared, and to-day we are in the humiliating position of being powerless for naval warfare or the protection of our vitals exposed upon our sea-coast to foreign attack.

Every American is deeply interested, and should feel the paramount importance of providing, as early as practicable, all the means in our power for restoring to American ship-owners our export and import carrying trade with foreign countries. Every State in our Union and every interest and pursuit suffer materially by the annual payment by citizens of the United States to foreign ship-owners of $130,000,000. This amount of gold is exported annually and goes out of American pockets into the pockets of foreigners. How can we continue to submit to such an enormous annual absorption of American income without serious detriment to our prosperity, on account of the loss of our supply of currency and the consequent derangement of our trade and commerce?

How can we accept the condition of perilous dependence upon perpetual peace with our own nation, and between nations that afford the only market for our vast and yearly increasing surplus productions? It becomes the present and pressing duty of Congress to exercise all its power in removing the obstructions and incumbrances and inequalities that are believed to be in the way, and providing all the aids necessary and proper in the great work of restoring our merchant marine, and of saving to Americans the money of Americans, for American carrying trade with foreign countries.

The difficult question is, what is the best and surest and speediest remedy? How far can Senators agree? It can not be denied that we must have ships enough to accommodate the trade. How shall the indispensable necessity for a sufficient number of ships be supplied? To my mind it is self-evident that the only way to supply the necessary number of ships, or any number of ships, is to make it safe and profitable for men to become ship-owners. Without ship-owners you can have no ship-builders. The inducement to become ship-owners must first exist before there can be any hope of having or employing ship-builders. What will induce Americans to invest their capital in iron steamships and running them as carriers of freight and passengers to and from American to foreign ports? Nothing but reasonable certainty that the investment will be free from legislative impositions and exactions, and profitable. How can these two indispensable predicates to ship-owning by citizens of the United States be supplied?

Ship-owning is by companies or corporations and not by individuals. The amount of money required to build an iron steamship of average tonnage is about $300,000 and only associated capital seeks such investment. An American company finds the ocean free to all carriers, with no power in the Government to protect the company against the competition and rivalry of the ships of other nations for the carrying trade. It finds the iron ships of England in possession of nearly 70 per cent. of the foreign carrying trade of this country; that the tonnage of English ships is taxed only 1 per cent. upon the net income of the ship; that to ascertain the tonnage of an English ship only the space occupied by the cargo is measured; that the cost of the English ship is about one-fourth less than an American-built ship, and that some English lines of ships are carrying the mails at an annual compensation of about $3,200,000. This American company, like all Americans, is anxious to spend its capital in our own country, for ships built here by our own mechanics and workingmen, out of American material, and to run them under the American flag. But on examination they find that the cost of building the ship in an American ship-yard, by better-fed and better-paid American mechanics and workingmen and the higher-priced material, makes the cost of the American-built ship one-fourth more than the English ship. It is also found that the annual tax on the tonnage of an American built and owned ship is 30 cents a ton, whether it is running or tied up in the dock, and that the whole ship is measured without any allowance of space for machinery or otherwise.

Besides, the State and city tax levied on American built and owned ships, like other property, is in New York 2½ per cent. on the value of the ship, and more or less in other States.

Is it not manifest that the difference in the original cost, and in English and American taxation, and the other differences mentioned have and will always destroy the inducement to become American ship-owners and the hope of successful competition and profitable running of ships built in America, registered, and carrying the American flag, in our foreign trade, under existing navigation laws? It is unreasonable to hope for any change in our favor until ship-owners who are citizens of the United States are placed upon terms of equality in the cost, ownership, and running of their vessels with those other ship-owners with whom they must compete upon the ocean.

There is a wide difference of opinion as to the ability of American ship-builders to construct iron steamers in American ship-yards at the same cost of such vessels built on the Clyde. Mr. John Roach, the greatest American ship-builder, and a man of acknowledged capacity and skill in that business, stated in an elaborate speech before the national convention of ship-owners and ship-builders at Boston in October last, that the difference in the cost of building iron steamers in American ship-yards and on the Clyde was only 10 per cent. Why then is it true that during the year ending June 30, 1879, but 193,031 tons were built, including all the schooners, sloops, canal-boats, and barges, and that less than one hundred thousand tons were suitable for foreign trade? Why is it that prior to the introduction of iron steamers, when vessels were built of wood, American ship builders and owners excelled the world in supplying ships for the foreign carrying trade? The American supply of material for the construction of iron steamers is as abundant as it is in England, and it must be the absence of a demand for American-built iron ships by those who have the capital to invest in ship-building for the foreign carrying trade, that is the sole cause of the idleness of our ship-builders and the surrender of the foreign carrying trade to English and other foreign vessels. Why is there no demand for American-built iron steamers? Mr. Roach, in the same speech from which I have quoted, furnishes the answer. He says:

"The truth is, that taxation on the ship, high rate of interest, and the difficulty of concentrating capital in this country, are at the root of the evil in this matter. Taxation is what has compelled American merchants to sell their ships and put them under a foreign flag. Steamship business is done by large companies, and when you start a company the taxation is too great to be borne. English capitalists readily invest their money in ship operations under the English laws, but they naturally hesitate about risking it under the practically prohibitory shipping-taxation laws of this country. "Put the difference in annual taxation," which continues during the whole life of the ship, beside the difference of 10 per cent. in the cost of construction of American ships built in this country, and say which is the more likely to prevent our merchants from owning ships. It would seem to be enough that the interest on American capital should be 6 per cent. while in England it is only 3, without adding such a tax. Beside, the ship carrying the English flag is not compelled to carry the mail unless it sees proper to do so, and getting for its service fair compensation, while the American ship is compelled to carry it for merely the letter postage. But this is not all. The American ship is more costly to build, because 90 per cent. of the cost of construction is labor, and American labor is dearer than European labor. But so is the American labor required to run the ship dearer. In fact, the labor required in building is only a drop in the bucket. The number of days' labor required to man a 3,000-ton iron steamship for two years is about equal to the number of days' labor to build her, while the life of such a ship of the first class is twenty-five years; therefore, there are more than twelve times more labor required in the running than in the building of the ship. It is the plan of deceit to put forward the little fact that we can not build, and try to conceal the big fact that we can not run ships when we have them, unless the barriers of taxation, &c., which I have mentioned, are removed, and an American policy adopted equally as favorable to the building up of a commercial marine as the policy adopted by other nations."

Then I proceed:

The question recurs, what is the remedy?

1. Provide by law that "all materials for the construction, equipment, or repair of vessels of the United States may be imported in bond, and withdrawn therefrom under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; and upon proof that such materials have been used for such purpose, no duties shall be paid thereon. And all vessels owned wholly by citizens of the United States shall be entitled to registry, enrollment, and license, and to all the benefits and privileges of vessels of the United States."

2. "That as property invested in shipping derives its protection from the Government of the United States, and as such property is subject to Federal taxation, it should be exempt from all local and municipal taxation by special act of Congress, leaving the net income only subject to such taxation."

3. Repeal of the law levying a duty upon tonnage.

4. Change of the navigation laws, so as to allow any citizen, company, or corporation of the United States to purchase iron steamships wherever they can be built or purchased the cheapest, with the right to register, enroll, and license, and sail them under the American flag, the same as if they were constructed in an American ship-yard.

5. That iron steamships so purchased and owned, and registered, licensed, and enrolled shall be engaged by contract with the Government to carry the mails of the United States to foreign countries, and allowed for such service reasonable compensation.

All that can be expected from this Congress is an appropriation of $1,000,000 to be expended by the Postmaster-General in increasing and improving the mail facilities of the United States with such foreign countries as he may select, having reference to the increase and improvement of our commerce and carrying trade with such countries. Shall the appropriation be made? It is opposed by some Senators because we can compel the carrying of mails under existing laws for the postage, which, I am informed, amounts annually, for our entire foreign mail carrying, to about $200,000. And it is insisted that all over the present compensation would be naked subsidy.

We might have saved millions paid annually to railroads for overland mail service if such service had been required free of charge as one of the conditions of our land grants and other Government aid to railroads. But no such right was reserved and we are now paying millions to railroad corporations made rich and powerful by the bounty of the Government. We have shown no such liberality to our ship-owners, but after burdening them with taxation, and allowing no freedom in the race with rival foreign nations for the ocean carrying trade of our own country we compel them to carry the mails for a mere trifle when compared with the millions paid railroads for similar service. And it is not unreasonable to estimate that when American ship-owners establish the several lines of free ships between the important ports of this and foreign countries anticipated by the proposed amendment, that the increase of our trade and commerce will so enlarge our mail necessities and facilities that the amount appropriated will not exceed just compensation for the service.

Other Senators oppose the appropriation because it is not to be expended for carrying our foreign mails on American-built ships, owned, manned, registered, and run according to our navigation laws. In other words, it is insisted that we shall continue an experiment that is already an established failure, of competing upon a free ocean against free ships purchased at far less cost, and running comparatively free from taxation or other incumbrances or restrictions carried by American-built steamers. How has Germany within the last decade increased her tonnage from 166,000 tons to 950,000? How have Norway and Sweden within the last twenty years increased their tonnage from 20,000 to 850,000 tons? How has Austria, with her limited seaboard, grown from no ship to 220,000 tons? The answer is plain and simple and undeniable that each of these countries have permitted their citizens to go into the markets of the world, on the Clyde or elsewhere, and purchase ships where they can make the best bargains, and when so purchased they are unloaded of burdensome taxation and prohibitory restrictions, and entered into a free fight in an open field. If Germans and Swedes and Norwegians and Austrians can succeed in the struggle for the ocean carrying trade, why can not Americans?

When and where was American genius, skill, and enterprise unequal to any demand or emergency when left to an open field and a fair fight? But it is suggested that other countries pay their ship-owners liberal compensation for carrying their mails to foreign ports. Not one in a hundred of English ships have any mail contracts whatever. Neither do the lines having the advantage of mail contracts monopolize transportation on account of their ability to carry freight at cheaper rates. But I am willing to favor liberal compensation for ocean mail service, and place it on terms of equality with our overland mail service by railroads. I doubt very much whether compensation for mail service, however liberal, will produce any largely beneficial results. I have no idea such inconsiderable aid would enable merchants and capitalists who wish to engage in our ocean carrying trade with other countries to compete with the cheaper built and comparatively untaxed and unincumbered ships of England. As John Roach says, we must go to the root of the evil, and, in my poor judgment, the only way to do so is to legislate as I have proposed. But all we can do now is to vote the appropriation to ships owned exclusively by citizens of the United States, wherever purchased, and try the experiment.

Those were my views in 1881, soon after I became a member of this body. They are my views to-day. What indorsement did I have of those views by Democratic Senators? I read from the same RECORD what Mr. Garland said of that subject, on the same page:

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, I do not care to enter into a discussion of the merits of this question further than to say that I am in entire sympathy with the proposition contained in the amendment. The only objection I have to it is that it does not include all that it should. The masterly presentation of the case to which we have just listened from the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] relieves me of the necessity of saying anything at all in favor of the amendment if it was properly before the Senate. I could not add anything to what he has already so ably said; and I am perfectly willing to let the argument of the question rest upon his speech on that side. I simply point to the speech as the man did who had a prayer copied at the head of his bed, so as to save time, simply saying when he went to bed, "Lord, those are my sentiments."

That is one member of the present Cabinet. I will now read from what my colleague [Mr. MORGAN] said upon the subject of the amendment I offered, found in the same RECORD, page 1459:

Upon turning to the Statutes of the United States on this subject I find that every provision contained in the amendment offered by the committee has been substantially made. Every provision of general law in reference to the transportation of mails to foreign countries is found substantially in the existing legislation upon that subject; but of course the special stipulations of this amendment and the special provisions in reference to the use of this $1,000,000 are not found in any law; but the convenient use, the just application of this amount of money which we are now asked to appropriate for the purpose of paying for the transmission of mails across the ocean, is a subject properly within the power of the Senate to regulate upon a general appropriation bill. It is not necessary that we should go before a committee and have a separate bill passed authorizing us to establish foreign mails, because under existing laws the Postmaster-General has the power to establish foreign mails; or to fix rates of postage, because under the laws he has the power to fix rates of postage; or to declare that the mails shall be carried in steamships, for under the existing law he has the power to declare that the mails shall be carried in steamships. Every substantial provision in this amendment except the mere regulation of the method of its execution is found in the existing statutes. I will now call the attention of the Senate to some of these laws.

"SEC. 4007. The Postmaster-General may, after advertising for proposals, enter into contracts for the transportation of the mail between the United States and any foreign country whenever the public interests will thereby be promoted."

There is a general law which makes the whole bosom of the ocean a mail-route, and leaves it to the Postmaster-General to select what ports of the United States the mails shall leave, and at what ports abroad they shall arrive. It is left entirely to his own discretionary declaration to designate those mail-routes which are established under this act as being common to all the ports of our country and all the ports of a foreign country, the ocean being the great way upon which the mails are to be transmitted.

I submit that if the Congress of the United States were to engage itself for a month in providing mail-routes across the ocean, it would not after all have made a system as full and as broad and as comprehensive as that which is contained in section 4007, for Congress in specifying the mail-routes would merely limit the number, whereas section 4007 places no limit on the number of routes or the ports to or from which the routes shall be established, but lays every port open to the access of the mails from abroad, and enables the Postmaster-General to send steamships out of any port of the United States to any port abroad.

Certainly, therefore, in the matter of the establishment of post-routes there is no new general legislation in the amendment; but the amendment falls within and is intended to complete and effectuate a provision of law which is now upon the statute-book. It does not undertake to create a new system or to create new mail-routes.

"SEC. 4008. The mail between the United States and any foreign port, or between ports of the United States touching at a foreign port, shall be transported in steamships; but the Postmaster-General may have such transportation performed by sailing vessels when the service can be facilitated thereby."

The amendment provides that the mail shall be transported in iron steamships. Neither do the two sections that I have read nor any other sections confine the Postmaster-General to a specific manner of carrying mails abroad, but the amendment provides an additional means of carrying them abroad, which is that he shall designate the ports from which these lines are to be established, as he has the right now to do, and the mails shall be carried in iron steamships.

"SEC. 4009. For transporting the mail between the United States and any foreign port, or between ports of the United States touching at a foreign port, the Postmaster-General may allow as compensation, if by a United States steamship, any sum not exceeding the sea and United States inland postage; and if by a foreign steamship or by a sailing vessel, any sum not exceeding the sea-postage, on the mail so transported."

The amendment provides simply that you may add to that, and appropriates $1,000,000, so that the Postmaster-General, instead of paying in postages under the discriminating rule as between American and foreign ships, may pay in money out of the Treasury of the United States, precisely as we pay a contractor who carries the mail over a railway or on a star route. It is the addition of $1,000,000 to the fund from which is to be drawn the support of our foreign mail intercommunication, and that is all that can be said of it.

Some remarks have been made about the doctrine of subsidy contained in this amendment. If you leave it to stand where it is as offered by the committee, Senators claim that it is a subsidy. If you put my amendment upon it, then you say it is not quite so much of a subsidy, but yet some argue that it is a subsidy even after that is put upon it. Let us see what Senators who have been so anxious about subsidies have done on this very bill, and let us see what Democrats in the House and in the Senate, who as yet have a majority of both bodies, have done in reference to the matter of voting subsidies to foreign ships and foreign countries. I will read a proviso in the appropriation bill which follows the appropriation I have just read:

"Provided, That the Postmaster-General is authorized to pay to the colonies of New Zealand and New South Wales so much of the cost of the overland transportation of the British closed mails to and from Australia as he may deem just, not to exceed one-half of said cost; and the sum of $40,000 is hereby appropriated for that purpose."

What is that? The two colonies of New Zealand and New South Wales have made by colonial legislation a subsidy of $450,000 per annum to two lines of steamships sailing between those colonies and San Francisco. One of the lines is an American-owned line, and the other is a British line. The American mails are carried upon these steamships, and we pay the sea postage under this very appropriation to those ships for carrying that mail. In addition thereto we subsidize them to the extent of paying one-half of the cost of the transportation of the British mails clear across this continent upon our railroads, in order that we may compensate the British Government for having extended to them such a large amount of subsidy.

Something has been said about John Roach and Brazil. John Roach did receive a subsidy from Brazil, and the Brazilian Government made it a condition of that subsidy that the American Government should pay an equal sum—$100,000 I think it was. We refused to do that upon the ground that we were subsidizing John Roach, an American ship-builder. What have we done in this bill except to subsidize a British line to convey the mails from New Zealand and New South Wales to San Francisco by paying half the expenses of the transportation of the British closed mails across this continent?

Mr. WALLACE. It is not a British, but an American line.

Mr. MORGAN. That makes it only so much the worse. We are subsidizing an American line, then, that carries the British mails.

Mr. WALLACE. We are not subsidizing them; we simply give them the mails to carry.

Mr. MORGAN. We give them the sea postage for the transportation of these mails, and this bill provides for that. In addition to that, we give $45,000 for the transportation of those mails closed across this continent in order to give them that advantage. It can not be that that is a special subsidy. It is nothing but a subsidy, and Senators who put that on the bill and recommend it here rise on this floor and inveigh against an amendment which does contain no feature of a subsidy, but leaves these mail contracts open to competition in bidding just as much as the star-route contracts are left open to all American citizens. We confine what we are doing to American citizens as contractors, but we say they ought to have the right to buy their ships wherever they can buy them for this particular purpose, and after they have been bought for this particular purpose and while they are employed in this particular service they ought to have the liberties, rights, and privileges of American-built ships.

Now I read from what my friend the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] said on that occasion, to be found on page 1510 of the same RECORD:

Mr. BUTLER. I simply desire to say that if the yeas and nays are called on the motion to amend made by the Senator from Alabama I shall vote that the amendment is not in order. I desire, however, to say that I am in entire accord with the principle of that amendment, and if my friend from Alabama will bring it in as a separate proposition I shall vote for it with a great deal of pleasure. But I do not believe it is in order, and therefore shall vote that it is not in order.

I will now read what my friend the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY], then chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, said on the subject of the amendment:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads endeavors to do its duty, and so I believe every committee of this body endeavors to do its whole duty to the country; and so far as I am concerned, I hold myself responsible, not to the Senator from Kentucky, but to the people of the State which sent me here and to the people of this country for my acts, and they will compare with those, I think, of the Senator from Kentucky.

Sir, the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads believed this measure was a wise one and in the best interest of the country. The Senator from Kentucky thinks otherwise. Am I to charge that because his judgment does not agree with mine, therefore he is endeavoring to build up the interest of some one man as against all others? I am proud that it is not in my heart to believe all men who disagree with me are acting in bad faith. I have learned where men can best learn that fact, that honest men may honestly differ. I give to those who differ with me on this proposition credit for as much sincerity as I have in the position I take. I believe that this measure is in the best interest of the country, and therefore I advocate it; and the Post-Office Committee, of which I have the honor to be chairman, by a large majority took that view of the question and so reported, and we are willing to test the sense of the Senate and go before the country on that. Whether the Senator from Kentucky be right or whether we be right is a question to be settled after the measure is passed.

Mr. President, the difference between the amendment I reported from the Post-Office Committee in 1881 and the amendment now before the Senate is that while my amendment appropriated a million of dollars and allowed Americans to make a purchase anywhere they could get them cheapest of the steamers with which they were to carry the foreign mails, the present amendment appropriates $800,000, and requires the steamers in which the mails are to be carried to be not only owned by Americans, but to be built in American ship-yards. I should prefer that that limitation be not put upon this amendment, but it shall be no reason why I shall not give it my support.

The principle upon which I stand is that the foreign-mail service deserves just compensation as much so as the coastwise mail service, river mail service, or railroad mail service. To illustrate, you make up the mails of the United States for Alaska, for the Sandwich Islands, for Japan, for China, and for Australia. Those mails are carried from the different parts of the United States by rail to San Francisco, and the railroad companies receive about 55 cents per mile for carrying those mails to San Francisco. When they are delivered at San Francisco the Alaska mail is taken by a coastwise steamer from San Francisco to Alaska and is paid over 67 cents a mile for the same mails that the railroads carry to San Francisco for about 55 cents, and the steamers that leave San Francisco with the United States mails for the Sandwich Islands, for Japan and China and Australia, are paid 5 cents a mile for carrying the mails to those foreign countries.

Again, the United States mail is made up for Cuba. It goes by rail to Tampa. The railroad company receives 55 cents a mile. When it reaches Tampa a steamer takes it from Tampa to Havana for 5 cents a mile. The same steamer brings back the mail from Cuba for the United States to Tampa at 5 cents a mile, and when the railroad takes it to distribute through the United States it gets 55 cents a mile. I say there is no principle or policy upon which that can be justified. It is public service rendered the Government and people of the United States, and the same rule of compensation should be applied to all such contractors.

Now, the consideration that controls me in my vote for this appropriation is that it meets the demand upon this Government for just compensation in the same measure that is paid by the Government of the United States to railroads and coastwise steamers and steamboats on the rivers. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], who has charge of this bill, in a speech he made in support of it, assigned the reasons for this appropriation. If any Senator understands the objects and purposes of this appropriation I concede to him the right of understanding not only the views of the committee from whom he reported this bill but his own reasons that control him in making this appropriation. I read from the RECORD of May 12, 1886 [see Appendix, page 128], containing the speech of the Senator from Kansas, which was delivered May 4, 1886, in support of this appropriation, in which he said:

Mr. President, the theory upon which the committee acted in reporting this amendment, I think I can safely say, was not that it was a subsidy according to any proper use of that term, but it was applying to the transportation of the foreign mails of the United States precisely the same rule of compensation and the same rule of procedure as is now applied as it has been for years to the transportation of the inland mails of the United States. A great deal has been said about the fact that there is to be no competition, and I presume that in many of the cases and perhaps in most of the cases in which we shall transport our foreign mails by means of American steamships there will be no competition; but neither is there competition in the railroad carriage of the inland mails of the United States. Neither is there competition on most of the steamboat lines by which the mails are carried on the inland waters of the United States. The Government in other words in regard to transportation of this kind fixes what is a fair compensation and pays it without requiring competition.

I call the attention of the Senate to section 4002 of the Revised Statutes fixing the rate of pay upon railroads for carrying the mails, furnishing, as I think, a complete illustration of the rule which the committee sought to have applied to the carrying of foreign mails. That section provides the rate of pay as follows:

"That the pay per mile per annum shall not exceed the following rates, namely: On routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mails per day of 200 pounds, $50; 500 pounds, $75; 1,000 pounds, $100; 1,500 pounds, $125; 2,000 pounds, $150; 3,500 pounds, $175; 5,000 pounds, $200, and $25 additional for every additional 2,000 pounds, the average weight to be ascertained, in every case"—

according to the plan named in the succeeding portion of the section. Under the practice of the Post-Office Department the lowest price paid to any railroad now is forty-two dollars and a half a mile per annum, no matter how small an amount of mail is carried, the rates having been reduced somewhat by a succeeding statute. The price that is paid for carrying on the smaller routes has no relation whatever to the postage received on the mail carried. There is no comparison sought to be instituted between the amount paid to the railroad company and the amount received by the Government. In point of fact, on all these routes which carry 200 pounds of mail or less the amount received by the railroad company is in excess of the entire receipts of the Government as postage on the mail thus carried.

When we come to deal with the carriage on railroads like the Pennsylvania and the New York Central, which carry the great mails leaving the city of New York, we pay only one-half for carrying 2,000 pounds what we pay for carrying 200 pounds or less on the smaller roads. In other words, where the carriage is very large, and where a very large carriage at a small rate of pay can be made profitable to the railroad company, the Government reduces the rate; but when it is dealing with the railroads in the interior portion of the country, where the carriage is small, it fixes a price totally different without reference to the weight or value of the mail carried. It is fixed at a rate deemed fair, and it is fixed without competition. The question of competition has never entered into the relations of the United States to the railroads in reference to the carriage of the mails.

The carriage of the mails upon the inland waters of the country, including the coast-line service, as the Senator from Iowa reminds me, is almost wholly without competition. It is a service, too, which carries very little mail and at a very high figure. This service costs nearly $600,000 per annum, and is paid for at the least price attainable. No doubt the form of bidding is gone through with, but in a majority of cases only one person bids, for on most of the rivers not more than one suitable steamer runs. Practically no element of competition enters into this service, and the cost of it is out of all proportion to the revenue it yields. It is far more a subsidized service than the foreign-mail service will be in case this amendment is enacted into law.

Now, we seek to apply precisely this same rule to the carriage of mails between the United States ports and foreign ports. As the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] well said yesterday, the law itself recognizes a distinction already, and always has made a distinction in favor of American steamships and a discrimination against foreign steamships, because in section 4009 of the Revised Statutes it is provided that—

"For transporting the mail between the United States and any foreign port, or between ports of the United States touching at a foreign port, the Postmaster-General may allow as compensation, if by a United States steamship, any sum not exceeding the sea and United States inland postage; and if by a foreign steamship or by a sailing vessel, any sum not exceeding the sea postage, on the mail so transported."

The difference between sea postage and sea and inland postage is about as 2 to 5. In other words, the law now provides as part of the settled policy of the Government that American steamships which carry the United States mails may have more than twice the amount authorized to be paid to foreign steamships for the same service. That has not proven sufficient, and the committee seeks in proposing this amendment to further extend this principle, already applicable generally in our foreign-mail service, to the carrying of our foreign mails with a view to encourage greater frequency, speed, and security.

There is no authority given to the Postmaster-General to pay extravagant prices. No one has risen in his place here to say that $1 a nautical mile for the outward trip is too great a price to be paid. I take it, therefore, that there is no dispute as to the reasonableness of the price proposed to be paid; that if we are to favor American steamships the price named in the amendment is a fair one, or at all events that it is not excessive and will not be burdensome upon the Government.

A great deal has been said about our obligations to the tax-payer, and that in matters of this kind any dollar we take from them which is not absolutely necessary is robbery. Mr. President, I agree to that; but what is necessary must be left to a wise discretion to be exercised by Congress. The same Senators who have spoken so earnestly upon this subject and who have characterized this proposition to pay $800,000 as robbery are here consenting to the proposition that we shall pay to a railroad mail line running from New York to Jacksonville, Fla., $291,000, more in proportion than we pay to any other mail line in the United States, in order that the communities along that line and the communities beyond the terminal point of that line, to wit, at Key West and the foreign community at Havana, may have a more speedy and more frequent delivery and distribution of the mails than they would have if we applied to that line the general rule which we apply to all other railroad lines in the United States. If that is the exercise of a wise discretion, wherein is the payment of $800,000 to produce a similar result in the carriage of our mails between our ports and foreign ports robbery?

The United States receives each year a large sum of money from its foreign mail service beyond the cost of that service. I believe the net results to have been during the last year over a million and a half of dollars, because we appropriated only $375,000 for the service and received $2,078,000 from it. But whatever the sum may be, there is no one who has addressed himself to the question but says there is a profit. Why should we not apply that profit to the extension of this useful and necessary service?

When we come to deal with what is known as the free-delivery service we find that it is established in one hundred and seventy-six of the cities of the United States. The service taken all together yields a profit, but every single one of the cities in which that service is rendered, except seventeen, shows a deficiency. That is to say, only seventeen yield a profit, all the rest of them returning a deficit, yet the whole service results in a net profit to the Government, and the Postmaster-General has proposed in his last report that it shall be further extended—extended to still smaller cities than now, to entail a still greater loss of revenue—and he puts it upon the ground that this can be afforded because the seventeen cities yield profit enough to pay not only the deficiency now existing but also that which will be created by extension to other places. Therefore he proposes to take from New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Cincinnati, Chicago, Louisville, Saint Louis, and so on, the net revenue which they give to the Department for the purpose of extending the service to towns where that service will be carried on at a loss. I do not complain of this; but why is it that we may do all these things with reference to our inland mail service, everything of this kind within our discretion at home, but the very moment we seek to apply any of these rules, conceded to be useful and proper and necessary internally, to our foreign mail service, we are met with this great cry about the robbery that is involved?

Mr. President, it would seem as though upon this statement, which can not be gainsaid—it does not rest upon my authority; it stands upon the law and the universal practice of the Department under it—that there ought to be nothing here to contend about in regard to this appropriation of $800,000 to give greater and better mail facilities between this country and South America and the other countries whose trade we are seeking.

I have wondered why it was that when we come to this particular branch of the question, all at once we divide and get into the most earnest and anxious contention in regard to what is proper to be done. I think it is because for now nearly or quite a generation we have devoted ourselves so exclusively to the internal affairs of this country, to the development of its internal commerce, to the extension of its lines of railway, to the settlement of new communities in the far West, to cultivating home trade for our manufactures, and all the other things which have led to the enormous growth and development of the country, that we have come to exclude ourselves wholly from the consideration of those things which pertain to our relations with foreign peoples and to our trade with them.

Great Britain furnishes an example of exactly the opposite character. In generations her policy has been wholly external. Her statesmen know the byways of international affairs better than they know the highways of home affairs, and she gives foremost attention to what concerns her subjects in foreign lands, including the establishment of the swiftest possible communication with them. This external policy has been so consistently and always pursued as, while developing her trade enormously, to also draw her statesmen from the consideration of domestic affairs to such an extent when she is confronted, as she is now, with a very serious matter of domestic concern, she is as much at sea as to the treatment to be accorded to it as we are when we come to consider questions that relate to the extension of our foreign intercourse and trade. What reason can be suggested why the United States should not have adequate mail communication with South and Central America and with other countries with whom we desire to have better trade relations? And why should we not be willing to give as adequate compensation for our foreign as for our domestic mail service, in order that it may grow better in speed, in frequency, and safety? Are not there essentials in the domestic service as well as elements which make the mails a better instrumentality of trade?

What section of the country will derive the greatest benefit from this appropriation if made? The greatest and most direct benefit will come, if it is to yield any benefit at all, to the Southern States. It is conceded that if we are to have foreign trade of any very great proportions, the most sure field for its development is in South and Central America. The mouths with which we shall speak to those countries are the harbors and the cities upon the Gulf of Mexico—Galveston, New Orleans, Mobile, Pensacola, Tampa—and on the South Atlantic—Savannah, Charleston, and Wilmington—not only because of the less distance between them and the countries to be reached, but because the South is in a particularly favorable natural and industrial condition to meet the wants of the people in South and Central America. It is making to-day cheap cotton goods successfully, the goods with the greatest amount of material for the smallest amount of labor, and which by reason of this fact are the most attractive to the people whose necessities and tastes require them, the class of goods of American manufacture which are to-day sold in Manchester, the seat of England's cotton manufacture, and also in India.

If we can sell in these markets in competition with Manchester's own mills we can do the same if we have proper means of communication in South and Central America. The Southern States not only manufacture each year an increasing quantity of this class of cotton goods, but also an increasing quantity of a better article of cotton goods. The South is to be, if the natural law of development is to work out its perfect work, the seat of the great cotton manufacture of the United States. More than all that, it has within its limits, within easy reach of tide water and connected with tide water by streams that are always open, great deposits of coal and iron, with which the commerce of the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea and the South Atlantic can and will be supplied, if there shall be established frequent and certain and safe steam communication.

Mr. President, the amount of benefit, the extent of the advantages in the great work now before this country of opening and developing our market with foreign countries to be derived from this appropriation is a matter about which we differ. I am free to confess that I can not satisfy myself that any great benefit is to result in the line of development of our foreign trade on account of this appropriation.

Senators who oppose this appropriation as just compensation for our foreign-mail service say that such legislation has been tried in the past and failed; that liberal subsidies have been paid by the Government of the United States to steamship lines to foreign countries, and that no good whatever resulted therefrom. I can understand how we may have failed in the past, and why the same amount of aid or less aid will bring valuable results at this time.

Heretofore American capital and American energy have been devoted to railroad building, to mining, and to manufacturing; but to-day these sources of investment have all been filled up and they are now overflowing. The competition growing out of the extent of our railroad system, of our manufacturing and mining, has so reduced profit as to cause capitalists to direct their minds to some other field for investment. This competition among American industries has caused the supply of the productions of the country to go far beyond the demand, and to-day, on account of the surplus of our productions and our inability to find a demand for them in the American market, the public mind of this country is absorbed in the consideration of what remedies we shall resort to to open up our trade with foreign countries.

The European markets are all closed against us; they have been preoccupied by England, France, and Germany; and the only field that lies out in full view of this country is that in Central and South America. I am willing in every way possible to give encouragement to all enterprises that are to be directed to the development of this field in these foreign countries for the consumption of our productions. How much this will benefit us in that direction, I am unable to say. I think it ought to be a great deal more. I am willing to extend, even if you were to call it subsidy, for this great purpose that is now of most vital importance to this country, any amount of constitutional aid that promises beneficial results.

I have the honor of representing a State that has a vital interest in the development of our trade with Central and South America and the West India Islands and other countries that are not preoccupied by England and France and Germany. In November last there was a convention held at the city of Tuscaloosa of over two hundred able, intelligent, representative men, who are familiar with the resources of Alabama. I know each one of these delegates personally, and I desire to read to the Senate the memorial to Congress in which they set forth the resources of the State of Alabama and the vast importance of development of our river system, with a view to furnishing cheap transportation to the Gulf, so as to find a market for our products in Central and South America:

This publication contains a memorial to the Congress of the United States and the deliberations of a convention of more than two hundred representative business men of Alabama and adjoining States, met together to consider the important subject of river and harbor improvement, looking to the speedy development of our rich coal and iron fields, which lie so close to the Gulf, and accessible by water ways so susceptible of improvement, and to bring into market the fertile lands watered by these streams, so fitly located to carry their bountiful products to the trade of the seas.

And the undersigned committee respectfully ask the thoughtful attention of the reader, not only to the map, but also to the memorial and the several communications in these pages (from prominent men of scholarship and scientific knowledge, giving reliable and accurate information upon the subjects treated, and information valuable to business men, and valuable to the representatives in the nation's councils from every locality. Indeed, this section of the country is destined at an early day to play a conspicuous part in shaping and controlling the commerce of this portion of the world), and in furnishing cheap coal and iron to the sea-going service of the United States Government.

I read from the memorial:

It is a matter well known that through the harbor of Mobile the agricultural productions of many States are sent to markets abroad, and the convergence of many railroads to the port of Mobile gives it an importance with regard to direct trade with all the neighboring nations of the Gulf of Mexico and the South Atlantic.

This is a matter in common with many other ports on the Gulf of Mexico. In addition to this, and rapidly becoming far more important to the great interests of the whole United States, is the development that at this point, where almost all of the water ways in the State of Alabama pour their floods into the Gulf, is found the nearest and cheapest port to which the immense mineral treasures of the State can be transported.

The rivers which finally fall into Mobile Bay spread out over the State like a fan, touching Northwestern Georgia on the east, and entering the eastern side of Mississippi. All of these rivers traverse immense coal fields, the full extent and richness of which has not yet been fully determined, although enough is known now to justify the assertion that they are unsurpassed in the known earth.

Besides the coal deposits, beds of iron ore, surrounded by every facility to be worked and used by man, are found contiguous to the coal and near all of said rivers.

These coal and iron deposits are rapidly attracting the attention of capitalists in this country and in Europe, and their development in the last ten years has been such as to create surprise in the minds of men habituated to the study of the mineral resources of the world.

For many years the coal used by vessels in navigating the waters which wash the shores of the West Indies, Mexico, and all the South American states on the eastern side of that continent, has been brought from Europe, except a small fraction furnished at very high rates from Chili.

With water transportation, which the improvements of the rivers in Alabama will give, this entire traffic can all be turned to the port of Mobile, and coal of a superior quality, and at vastly cheaper rates, furnished to those who need it.

* * * * * * *

The many able papers submitted to the convention from its committees, and which are contained in its printed proceedings, demonstrate fully these propositions:

First. The existence of large and inexhaustible deposits of coal and iron and other minerals in the State of Alabama, near and along the line of the water ways which flow into Mobile Bay.

Second. Also, that along these rivers outside of the means of transportation by railroads there is produced large amounts of cotton and grain which should be the subject of export from said port of Mobile.

Third. That the whole country traversed by said rivers is covered with forests, almost in their virgin state, of the finest timber, suitable for commercial purposes and for ship-building.

Fourth. That all of these things apply strongly to the Tennessee River, with the addition that it flows through several States besides Alabama.

Fifth. That the channel leading to the port of Mobile can be made, with a moderate expenditure of money, of sufficient depth to admit vessels capable of carrying all the immense freight which the country will produce and the rivers bring to it.

Sixth. That the improvement of the rivers of Alabama will have the effect to put at the port of Mobile the best and cheapest coal in the world, sufficient in quantity to supply all the neighboring nations and all the vessels that sail from any of those ports, as well as those of the United States, so as to greatly enrich the whole country.

Seventh. That the water ways of Alabama will not only be of immense benefit to the commerce of this country and of the world in time of peace, but will also be of incalculable advantage to the United States in time of war.

I read from a speech made in that convention by Hon. A. O. Lane, mayor of the city of Birmingham:

We must not forget that the productive coal area in Alabama is nearly half as great as that of the whole of Great Britain. The coal measures of Alabama are 2,600 feet in thickness—nearly 500 feet greater than those of any other State in the American Union. It is easily mined by means of drifts and slopes, the mines often draining themselves, and the coal, in rich, thick seams, cropping out on the very banks of the rivers. It ships well, and is admirably adapted to steam, coke, gas, and domestic uses.

And yet, in the face of all these facts, Alabama does not ship a single pound of coal into Mexico and the Central and South American States. She is forced to stand idly by and see this magnificent trade, worth millions of dollars, and which nature ordained should be hers, gobbled up by British bottoms, from coal-fields five times as far away as Alabama's products. Coal is put on board ship in England at $2 50 per ton, while here in Alabama it is put on board cars at, say, $1.25 per ton; and then it costs $2 more per ton to ship it to Mobile, and then, perhaps, it has to be lightered down the bay to deep water. Now, suppose we could transport our coal on barges to the Gulf at a cost of 25 cents per ton, Alabama would soon hold this munificent trade, to which she is so justly entitled by natural advantage and geographical position. Thus not only would Alabama be enriched, but it would be a tardy but glorious triumph for the American merchant marine.

And how is this cheap transportation to be secured? Our rivers must be opened up to navigation. Millions are spent every year in providing cheap transportation from the East to the West. This is reversing nature, and nature is wiser than man. Natural and manufactured products are generally the same on parallels of latitude, and hence there is no very great demand for interchange of products on those parallels, while the natural currents of trade are from North to South for the interchange and barter of all those products, natural and artificial, indigenous, so to speak, to semi-arctic and semi-tropical spheres. Now, nature sends our rivers coursing from North to South, and they must have an outlet to the sea. It is of paramount importance to us to have accessible Southern markets, because the North is already supplied with almost everything we manufacture.

The Mobile Bay receives our noble rivers. Her channel must be deepened so as to float the largest freight steamships of heavy tonnage and great draught. Then her principal feeders—the Warrior, the Coosa, and the Cahawba—must be opened up to navigation into the very heart of the coal belts of Alabama. Mobile should be the focal center, sending out life-blood into all the great arteries of our Commonwealth, and receiving back fresh vitality from every commercial pulsation. By means of jetties at some points, and locks and dams at others, all the principal rivers of Alabama leading to Mobile Bay can be made navigable year in and year out. What a consummation that would be! Then, indeed, would Mobile again become the pride of the Gulf States. We would see her docks crowded with ships from every clime, laden with cotton and fruits and timber and coal and iron. Her pristine grandeur and glory would return with renewed and increased splendor. She would soon whiten the seas with ships of her own build. The reduced cost of coal and iron would enable her to drive out the British products from Mexico and the Central and South American states. She would soon have a national arsenal and heavy ordnance manufactory, impossible for inland cities, because cars can not haul the immense guns, and railroad bridges can not support them. These industries would fill the city with skilled artisans. Foreign and domestic trade would flow in upon her, and she would soon become one of the livest marts, as she is now one of the fairest cities that ever rested on bay or gulf or sea.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, in the chair). The Senator from Alabama will suspend. It is the duty of the Chair to announce that the hour of 2 o'clock has arrived and to lay before the Senate the unfinished business of Friday last, being the bill (H. R. 7021) to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads within the State of Kansas and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that unanimous consent be given to the Senator from Alabama to proceed.

Mr. HALE. Let the unfinished business be laid aside until the present matter is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senator from Alabama may conclude his remarks.

Mr. HALE. In order that the present matter may be finished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In order that the present subject may be considered and finished. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Alabama will proceed, the Post-Office appropriation bill remaining before the Senate.

Mr. PUGH. I continue:

And if there is one thing on this green earth with which I have no patience, it is to have a long homily on the Constitution when my State is crying aloud for the energizing force of Government aid to stimulate her waning industries. But for such monumental folly our State would now be threaded with railroads and traced with navigable streams from Georgia to Mississippi and from Tennessee to the Gulf. I can almost hear the croakers saying now we can not do anything; it is needless to try it.

* * * * * * *

If I were deputed by his satanic majesty, and forced to send a curse upon this State, and given power to choose my own instruments of waste and desolation, I would never select locusts, that sometimes sweep over Europe, darkening the heavens, or grasshoppers that march through the West, leaving desolation in their track, or floods that now and then make portions of Louisiana a vast waste of waters, or cyclones that bring terror to the stoutest hearts, or cholera that sweeps away its thousands, but leaves the living in health and vigor. No; I would choose rather a horde of croakers, whose croakings, and croakings, and croakings are more dismal than the croaking of frogs in marshy ponds; and then, without awaiting results, I would repeat the work, thorough and complete, in killing the hopes, and sapping the energies, and benumbing the industries of the people.

I now read from the report which was made from the committee on mineral resources of Alabama by General Joseph W. Burke, chairman, to that convention:

Mr. McCullough, an English writer of the highest authority, speaking of the value of coal as an element of English prosperity, says: "Our coal mines are the principal source and foundation of our manufacturing and commercial prosperity, and no nation, however favorably situated in other respects, not plentifully supplied with this mineral need hope to rival those that are. Our coal mines have conferred a thousand times more real advantages on us than we have derived from the conquest of the Mogul Empire, or than we should have reaped from the dominions of Mexico and Peru."

The coal area of the United States is estimated at 192,000 square miles. Of this large body the Alabama coal fields contain 5,380 square miles; the Warrior 5,000; the Cahawba 230, and the Coosa 150 square miles.

These divisions take their names from the respective rivers—Warrior, Cahawba, and Coosa—which flow through them. From these streams branch out in all directions innumerable creeks, subdividing the coal measures, and affording, especially in the case of the Warrior, many miles of deep water nine months in the year, thus enabling the coal to be mined far up in the interior and floated to the main stream. Human skill could not have devised a more perfect system of internal canals, or auxiliary water courses than nature has provided on the Warrior.

Branching off in all directions, those creeks cut their way through the measures, and in many cases flow over solid beds of coal.

Twelve years ago the total coal production amounted to but 10,000 tons. In 1880 the output increased to 600,000 tons; in 1882, to 1,100,000 tons; in 1884, to 1,500,000; and it is believed that the product of 1885 will not be less than 2,000,000 tons.

For the same period the production of pig-iron increased from 60,000 to 600,000 tons. This unparalleled industrial advancement was mainly made possible by the construction of a single line of railway, managed with sagacity and the very personification of enterprise. To the construction of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad is this magnificent coal-field chiefly indebted for its wonderful development, its thriving mining towns, its populous agricultural colonies, and the city of Birmingham. And yet this line but skirts the very verge of the Warrior field on the east. The Alabama Great Southern Railway runs through its Southern border, and the Georgia Pacific Railway, built to its western and eastern boundaries, is located centrally through the basin over a gap of 40 miles. The coal of the Locust Fork, or eastern part of the field, is renowned for its valuable qualities for coking, steam, gas, and forge purposes. The great Pratt seam furnishes the greater body of the coke which is used by the furnaces in Birmingham.

The Warrior seam furnishes the very finest steam coal; the Newcastle, gas coal of an excellent quality. In addition to these mines are the Jefferson and the Black Creek seams. The Locust, or Little Warrior, River and its tributaries penetrate all those seams. On the Mulberry Branch of the Big Warrior the coal changes its character entirely. Here it is hard, compact, lustrous, breaking into cubes, clean, and not affected by the weather. It is in this part of the field that occurs the cannel coal spoken of by Professor Tuomey, State geologist (1865):

"This, of all the coal in the State, will best bear transportation on account of its superior hardness," said this distinguished scholar.

Along the banks of the river, in the counties of Tuscaloosa and Walker, the coal outcrops for miles, and may be loaded in barges at the very mine entrance. Dipping toward the river the seams drain into it, as the coal in many places has an elevation of but 3 degrees, just sufficient for drainage. The seams already discovered, which may be mined with profit and transported by water, are five in number, the smallest seam being 3 feet 2 inches, and the largest 8 feet 4 inches.

In many places three of those seams may be found superimposed on each other, and visible to the eye on the river bank, two above the reach of high water. It is this part of the great Warrior basin that is most accessible by water. In it may be found all classes of bituminous coals, and it is thought to be the only part of the field in which cannel coal has been discovered. Its mineral wonders are almost incredible. "Notwithstanding the definite character and value of the information presented here, no one feels more sensibly than I do how very inadequately it represents this magnificent formation," wrote Professor Tuomey in the Geological Report of Alabama in 1850. Its variety of coals, the ease and cheapness with which they may be mined, their great value for commercial purposes, and the convenience of the mines to the Gulf of Mexico, render it a national reproach that those magnificent deposits should be closed by law to human enterprise, which is actually the case.

THE CAHAWBA FIELD.

The Cahawba coal field has an area of about 230 square miles, and lies in the counties of Bibb, Shelby, and Jefferson. Its general direction is from northeast to southwest. It is drained by the Cahawba River.

The field is now being worked at the following points: At Briarfield and Blockton, in Bibb County; Helena and Aldrich, in Shelby County, and Henry-Ellen, in Jefferson County.

The mines at Briarfield and Aldrich are on the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad; at Blockton, on the Alabama Great Southern; at Helena, on the Louisville and Nashville; at Henry-Ellen, on the Georgia Pacific, or on branches from these roads.

There are now seven or eight seams being worked in the field, varying in thickness from 3 to 7 feet; and there are several more that can be worked advantageously. Almost the entire area of the field is underlaid with workable seams.

The mines in operation find a demand for all that they can mine.

Mr. Richard P. Rothwell, the eminent mining engineer, after a thorough examination of the coals of the Cahawba field, says:

"The Cahawba coals are of a remarkably fine quality, being chiefly distinguished for their dryness, small amount of ash, and large amount of fixed carbon. Some of the coals make an excellent coke, suitable for blast-furnace use, and, as some of them are dry-burning coals that do not coke, they would probably work raw in the furnace.

"The coals are also distinguished for their hardness, freedom from sulphur, and never-slaking quality.

"For steam, gas, and domestic use they rank high in the markets, and are sold largely in Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas."

THE COOSA FIELD.

The Coosa field has an area of 150 miles, and is chiefly situated in Saint Clair, Calhoun, and Etowah Counties.

Until a very recent date this field was entirely undeveloped. The construction of the East and West Alabama and the Georgia Pacific Railroads through it has brought it into more favorable notice; and the Government improvements on the Coosa River, now in progress below Greensport, in Saint Clair County, Alabama, will cause it to take an important position as a very potent factor in the industrial development of Northern Georgia and North Alabama.

The seams of coal in this field are from 3 feet to 5 feet in thickness, and the product is justly regarded as excellent for steam purposes.

Of all the coals in the State that of the Coosa is highest in carbon and lowest in combined volatile matter, and, should it prove successful as a furnace fuel, this part of the State will become a very important iron-producing center, iron ores of rare quality being found in abundance side by side with the best limestone.

There is one remarkable fact connected with the Alabama coal fields which, in relation to their geographical location, gives them enormous advantages over that of any other bodies of coal in America.

England is enabled to supply the world with cheap coal, owing to the fact of the location of her principal mines near tide water.

The Alabama coal fields are the only great body of coal on the Atlantic coast of America so situated as to enable the miner to load his coal-barge on the river banks of the Warrior, Cahawba, and Coosa Rivers, and float them to the tide, the physical obstacles to their progress being of course first removed.

It may be said that the same may be accomplished by the way of Pittsburgh and the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers; but while this is a physical fact, the great distance of Pittsburgh from the Gulf of Mexico, the vicissitudes of climate—frost in the winter and heat in the summer—with low water, make this practically nugatory, as Pittsburgh has never yet been able to export coal out of New Orleans.

The opening of the Warrior, Coosa, and Cahawba Rivers would increase the coal export trade of the United States 3,000,000 tons, and leave all parts of the Gulf independent of Great Britain.

OUR IRON INDUSTRIES.

"Unless all evidence and calculation are at fault, the iron and coal regions of Alabama, within range of cheap production, are practically inexhaustible," says a distinguished writer of this State. The marvelous growth of the iron industry in Alabama is almost equal to that of coal. At first her valuable ores were reduced by charcoal, making iron of quality equal to the best product of Sweden.

After the discovery of coking coal in the vicinity of Birmingham, a remarkable impetus was given this industry, which has made such great progress that it is estimated that the manufactured products of iron in Birmingham alone amount to $20,000 per diem. The cheapness with which iron may be made in Alabama is owing to the fact that the coal, ore, and fluxing material are found in many places within sight of the furnace-stack. The ores are rich in iron, easily mined, and found in the most luxuriant abundance. The Red Mountain, from which Birmingham draws the great supply of her ores, takes its name from its magnificent veins of red fossiliferous ores, and is literally a mountain of iron, extending from Bibb County, Alabama, to the Georgia line, a distance of over 125 miles. On the Louisville and Nashville and Alabama Great Southern Railroads, and the Mineral Railroad of Birmingham, the brown hematite, or limonite, ores exist in great abundance. It is from these great mineral deposits that Birmingham draws her wealth, and her right to the appellation of "The Magic City."

On the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad the iron industry is in a healthful and progressive condition, and on this great line of railroad have sprung up towns and villages from its establishment. The city of Anniston is a notable example of this, increasing in five years from a small village to a large and prosperous town. On this line of railway there are in Alabama ten furnaces renowned for the character of their product, making daily an average of 400 tons of pig-iron of a very excellent quality, and used in the manufacture of car-wheels, bar-iron, and other branches of iron manufacture where "pig" of the best character is desired; and Shelby, Anniston, Briarfield, and Tecumseh high-grade irons are known all over the country.

It is a fact worth noting that during the recent prostration in the iron trade, with its steady and constantly increasing depression since 1880, but one furnace in Alabama suspended operations, and much of our iron found its way into the great markets of the East, being sold there, after having been hauled 800 miles, $1 a ton lower than Pennsylvania iron.

The matter of cheap transportation affects our iron products equally with our coal; and when this problem is solved, Alabama will lead the markets of the world in the cheapness and excellence of both these commodities.

Now, I desire to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to the address of the board of management of the North, Central, and South American Exposition at New Orleans December 9, 1885, on the subject of our foreign trade with the countries I have named:

NEW ORLEANS, December 9, 1885.

To the press and public of the Gulf States:

By the board of management of the North, Central, and South American Exposition.

The Gulf of Mexico is the great central sea across which must flow and reflow a large portion of the commercial interchanges which will result from the consummation of this new policy.

The magnitude and importance of the subject can best be appreciated by a glance at a few facts and figures.

TRIBUTARY COUNTRIES.

It is nearly surrounded by the two leading American Republics—Mexico and the United States.

The remainder of the Gulf is bounded by the forty principal West India Islands, thirty-six of which are owned by European powers, and none by Mexico and the United States.

In a broader sense nearly all of the commercial world is tributary, for this sea is midway between North and South America—the Occident and Orient—and is on an air line from Liverpool to Australia.

TRIBUTARY RIVERS.

The Mississippi and its forty-two principal tributaries, which first border or intersect twenty-one States and Territories, and are navigable to an extent of 15,710 miles, converge, unite, and flow into the Gulf.

In addition to this, there are at least two thousand more miles of tributary navigable rivers in Texas, Louisiana, Alabama, and Mississippi.

TRIBUTARY RAILWAY.

The great trunk lines tributary to the Gulf at New Orleans, Galveston, Mobile, Pensacola, Vera Cruz, and other points, such as the Illinois Central, Southern Pacific, Texas and Pacific, Louisville and Nashville, New Orleans and Northeastern, Louisville, New Orleans and Texas, Houston and Texas Central, Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fé, Mobile and Ohio, Mexican, and other roads, have a total mileage nearly equal to that of the tributary rivers, and intersect a nearly equal area of tributary States and Territories.

TRIBUTARY GRAIN FIELDS.

The grain products of the twenty-one States and Territories intersected by the Mississippi River system contrasted with those of the whole United States were, during the last census year, 1882, as follows: Eighty-nine per cent. of the corn, 76 per cent. of the oats, and 74 per cent of the wheat.

TRIBUTARY COTTON BELT.

The cotton crop of the United States during the present year is estimated at 6,650,265 bales, of which 4,657,918, or 70 per cent., was grown in the following States, either resting directly upon the Gulf, or to a greater or less extent tributary to it:

	Bales.
Texas	1,493,519
Mississippi	954,931
Alabama	853,120
Arkansas	529,872
Louisiana	511,350
Tennessee	260,576
Florida	53,550

To this should be added the tributary cotton-fields of the Gulf States of Mexico, which, although comparatively undeveloped, are capable of producing enormous crops.

TRIBUTARY PINE BELT.

The total amount of merchantable standing pine in the six Gulf States was during the last census year, 1880, as follows:

	Feet, B. M.
Florida	6,615,000,000
Georgia	16,778,000,000
Alabama	21,192,000,000
Mississippi	23,975,000,000
Louisiana	48,213,000,000
Grand total	184,281,500,000

Contrasting the pine supply of these States with that of Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota the result is as follows: Merchantable standing pine of Michigan, but 35,000,000,000 feet, or but a trifle more than half that of Texas; merchantable standing pine of Minnesota, but 6,100,000,000 feet, or less than one-seventh that of Louisiana; merchantable standing pine of Wisconsin, but 41,000,000,000 feet, or less than that of Louisiana, and less than two-thirds that of Texas.

To this should be added the mahogany and other hard-wood tributary forests at and near the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. Also, the india-rubber trees, which grow there in great abundance.

TRIBUTARY COAL FIELDS.

Of the estimated coal areas of the United States, amounting to 195,000 square miles, 157,000 square miles, or 80 per cent., are in the States intersected by the navigable rivers which flow into the Gulf.

To this percentage might be added a portion of the coal areas of Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, for their products are transported in immense quantities on barges down the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers.

TRIBUTARY IRON DEPOSITS.

The immense iron deposits of Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, Missouri, Ohio, and even of Western Pennsylvania, are, to a greater or less extent, tributary to the Gulf, for they are connected by navigable water ways, and form a convenient base for the manufacture of railway iron, mining machinery, farming implements, &c., which Spanish America so greatly needs.

TRIBUTARY SUGAR BELT.

During the last census year, 98 per cent. of the sugar crop of the United States was produced in a single Gulf State—Louisiana.

To this should be added the sugar plantations of Cuba, from which were exported to the United States alone, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, sugar to the enormous amount of over 1,000,000,000 pounds.

Also the rich sugar lands of the other West Indies and of the Gulf States of Mexico.

TRIBUTARY INTEROCEAN ROUTES.

When the Gulf of Mexico is connected with the Pacific by a transit line across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, the commerce of the world will be tributary. The opening of this route will shorten the voyage (now around Cape Horn) as follows:

	Statute miles.
Between New York and San Francisco	10,768
Between New York and Hong-Kong	8,767
Between New Orleans and San Francisco	12,442
Between New Orleans and Hong-Kong	10,503

The construction of the projected Florida Ship Canal will shorten the distance between New Orleans and New York 571 statute miles each way, or 1,142 miles on the round trip.

TRIBUTARY MANUFACTURES.

The manufacturing industries of the States tributary to the Gulf are comparatively undeveloped, but the rapid strides made during the past few years at Birmingham, Ala., and at other points in the South indicate very clearly that a tidal wave of Northern capital and industrial skill is flowing in this direction.

The unsupplied markets of the non-manufacturing countries of Spanish and Portuguese America are at our very doors, and the South, should hereafter endeavor to supply that demand. Cotton and iron manufactures are the principal commodities needed in those markets, both of which the South can produce to unlimited extent.

TRIBUTARY STEAMSHIP LINES.

While the Gulf has numerous tributary steamship lines engaged in its foreign and coastwise trade, such as the Morgan, Cromwell, West India and Pacific, New Orleans and Central American, North German Loyd, New Orleans and Belize, New Orleans, Honduras and Guatemala, Mexican Transatlantic, and other lines, they are but the forerunners of many others which will soon be needed on the connection of the Gulf with the Pacific at the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, and as a result of the new commercial tidal wave toward Spanish and Portuguese America.

TRIBUTARY COMMERCE.

In estimating the commerce which in the near future will be tributary to the American Mediterranean we should not be governed by precedent, for the new conditions which will arise from the opening of the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, the practical prolongation of the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean, the union of the Atlantic and Pacific, and the commercial union of the three Americas, will so revolutionize the commerce of the world that the prestige of the American will soon rival if not eclipse that of the European Mediterranean.

Very respectfully,

ALEX. D. ANDERSON, Commissioner.

S. B. McCONNICO, President.

Important facts and statistics highly instructive on this same subject were also published by the board of management of the North, Central, and South American Expositions, which I will not detain the Senate by reading but have them incorporated in my remarks:

The board of management of the North, Central, and South American Exposition list showing December 8, 1885, the leading object of the exposition, which is new markets for surplus manufactures.

How transcendently important it is can best be appreciated by reference to a few facts and figures:

The foreign commerce of the United States during the first century of its existence was mainly with Europe. As the result of a hundred years of trade, the direction of our present annual exports is as follows:

Exports to Europe and adjacent countries on the east, 81 per cent.

Exports to American countries on the south, 10 per cent.

Exports to British America on the north, 5 per cent.

Exports to Pacific countries on the west, 4 per cent.

This one-sided nature of our commerce may be seen by a glance at the accompanying diagram, illustrating the general course of steamship lines.

Our exports are also unsymmetrical in quality, 74 per cent. being the products of agriculture, and only 15 per cent. the products of manufacture.

Of our total annual manufactures, which during the census year 1880 were $5,369,579,191 in value, but 2 per cent. find foreign markets. This is, indeed, an astonishing state of affairs—a defect in our commercial relations with the outside world which must be cured—a weak spot which must be built up and strengthened.

But we need not look to Europe for adequate outlets for manufactures, for it is well supplied and has a surplus of its own for export. We must rather look to the open, unsupplied, and inviting markets of Spanish and Portuguese America, and the countries surrounding the Pacific Ocean.

THE TWENTY CONTINENTAL COUNTRIES OF SPANISH AND PORTUGUESE AMERICA.

On the continent south of the United States are fifteen Spanish-American Republics, the Portuguese-American Empire of Brazil, and four European colonies.

They have a total population of 40,000,000 consumers and an area of about 8,000,000 square miles, or more than double that of the United States.

In climate, resources, products, supply, and demand they are the reverse and complement of the United States. Commercial exchanges with such countries are, therefore, in accordance with sound laws of trade and political economy.

They are exceedingly deficient in manufactures.

They need our railway iron and supplies, farming implements, cotton and woolen goods, boots and shoes, sewing-machines, telegraph and telephone supplies, clocks, and watches, notions, and a thousand and one products of our invention and skill.

We need their coffee and sugar, tropical fruits, hard wood, fiber plants, and other raw materials.

In brief, these countries represent twenty American Indias, whose unsupplied and inviting trade fields we will find most profitable to occupy with our surplus energy, skill, products, and manufactures. At present, however, our share of that trade is disgracefully small. Their total annual foreign commerce, exports and imports of merchandise combined, is in value about as follows:

The Republic of Mexico	$55,000,000
The five Central American republics	24,428,000
The nine South American republics	348,646,000
The four European colonies	31,950,000
The Empire of Brazil	215,061,00
Total	675,085,000

Of this total trade the United States controls but $126,822,000, or less than one-fifth part, the lion's share being monopolized by Great Britain, France, and other European powers.

Of the total annual imports of these twenty countries, which amount to $303,812,000 in value, we supply but one-seventh part.

THE FORTY PRINCIPAL WEST INDIA ISLANDS.

Facing the southern coast of the United States are the various West India Islands, of which the forty principal ones are owned as follows:

Cuba, Porto Rico, and one other by Spain.

Jamaica, Barbadoes, the Bahamas, and fifteen others, by Great Britain.

Martinique, and four others, by France.

St. Thomas, and two others, by Denmark.

St. Martin, and five others, by the Netherlands.

Tortuga, and two others, by Venezuela.

St. Bartholomew, by Sweden.

Hayti and San Domingo, independent.

These islands have a total area of about 100,000 square miles and a population of about 4,000,000 souls.

Their total annual imports are about $116,000,000 in value, of which but $31,000,000, or less than one-third part, is supplied by the United States.

TEN NEGLECTED PACIFIC MARKETS.

A few weeks before his assassination, in an address to the graduating class at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, President Garfield said:

"The Pacific is yet to be opened, and you, gentlemen, will be the ones to scout it for us. Before long you will sail through the isthmus to open up the Pacific."

The significance of this remark may be appreciated by a glance at the trade statistics of the various foreign countries surrounding the Pacific, and facing the west coast of the United States.

Their annual imports of merchandise, as reported by the State Department, are about as follows in value:

Japan	$29,296,000
China	112,632,000
Hong-Kong	115,834,000
Philippine Islands	18,032,000
Dutch India	55,485,000
Siam	6,500,000
Straits Settlements	73,174,000
Australia, New Zealand, and Tasmania	118,600,000
Total	529,553,000

Of this total demand we supply but $20,497,000 in value, or less than 4 per cent.

This serious defect in our commercial relations with the outside world can be cured by the construction of interocean transit lines across the American isthmus, three being already projected, as may be seen by a glance at the accompanying diagram.

At present, steamships in sailing from New York or New Orleans to the Pacific markets, have to go around distant Cape Horn. The distance between New York and Hong-Kong by way of Cape Horn is 20,359 miles. When the Isthmus of Tehuantepec is open this distance will be reduced to 11,591 miles, making a saving of 8,768 miles each way, or 17,536 on the round trip.

The opening of this isthmian route will also practically extend the Mississippi River, with its 16,000 miles of inland navigation, to the Pacific Ocean; in other words, it will bring the neglected Pacific markets into direct communication with the Mississippi Valley.

When this is accomplished we may expect our due share of the foreign trade of those countries.

This, Mr. President, is all I have to say as stating why I support this appropriation. I suppose it will have very little weight in the great scale that we are now pressing upon the subject of opening up our foreign trade, but whatever it is I am willing that my vote shall contribute it.

The main reason why I support this appropriation I have already stated, because it is nothing but just compensation for public service rendered by American ships, and I am not willing to discriminate between the carriers of our mails on the ocean, on the land, and on our rivers. I am willing to try this experiment and to increase it if I see valuable results in the line of the development of our foreign trade; and whether it does or not I shall always be prepared to vote an amount something like a proper measure of compensation for this mail service.

NEW LIGHT-HOUSES.

Mr. McMILLAN. I desire to submit a conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is pending a conference report now, on which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] has submitted a motion.

Mr. McMILLAN. That will lead to discussion, and I ask that it be laid aside informally for the purpose of disposing of this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is asked to lay aside the pending matter informally in order to consider a conference report submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. McMILLAN]. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5862) providing for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal at San Luis Obispo, Cal., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 17, after the word "Hill," insert the word "provided;" in line 18 strike out the word "which" and insert the words "the structure;" and the Senate agree to the same.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. PLUMB, that the Senate further insist upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5887) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

Mr. PLUMB. Several Senators notified me that they intended to speak on this proposition. I do not wish myself to take the responsibility of detaining the Senate now if they are not disposed to speak. I believe I shall ask that the vote be taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas that the Senate further insist on its amendments and ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I would not say a word but for the fact that I am one of the Senate conferees on this question. I am not going to be tempted into a debate on free ships and tariffs or the effect of subsidies on commerce, but will content myself with a plain statement of the pending question. When the Post-Office bill was before the Senate and the subsidy to a few American steamship companies was under discussion I made my objections to it known, and not only mine but those of the Department for whose benefit it professed to be urged. I was defeated, and do not propose to ask the Senate to reverse its action; that is not the question before us for consideration now. The House sent us a clean appropriation bill making provisions for the postal service in all its branches for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, limited strictly to the estimates of the Post-Office Department. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, after full consultation with the Postmaster-General and his assistants, substantially indorsed the action of the House, and the bill would have been a law more than a month ago but for the steamship-subsidy amendment which originated in the Senate as an amendment to the bill, and was passed I may say against the protest of the Postmaster-General, not in the interest of the postal service, but for the purpose, as its friends avowed, of aiding American ship-building and American commerce.

Differing as I do with the friends of the measure as to its wisdom and beneficial effects, I do not propose now to seek to convince them that I was right or that they were wrong. After the President of the Senate decided the proposed amendment to be in order, it was entirely competent for a majority of the Senate to pass it and ask the House to agree with them. If the bill to increase the Army or Navy, the educational bill, the general pension bill, the oleomargarine, or any other bill had been decided to be in order as an amendment to this Post-Office appropriation bill, any or all of them might have been passed by the Senate in that form and sent to the House for its concurrence, and if the House had agreed with the Senate the bill with any or all of these measures incorporated in it would have gone to the President for his approval. But the House in the exercise of its undoubted right has disagreed in the most pronounced and emphatic manner with the Senate in regard to the subsidy this body saw fit to attach to the Post-Office appropriations for 1887.

They appointed conferees, who have met us twice in conference and have assured us in the most positive and unequivocal terms that the House will not agree to the proposition we have made. Indeed, we knew that from the record without any assurance. It must be conceded that if the Senate had passed the steamship subsidy as an independent measure and it had been rejected by the House in the way this amendment has been, no Senator would for a moment contend that there would be either any just ground for complaint or any reasonable hope of inducing the House to reverse its action, and I hardly think any one will assume in the face of the protests of the President and the Postmaster-General against the need of such legislation so far as the mail service is concerned that the failure to pass the subsidy inserted by the Senate will embarrass the postal service for the next fiscal year, however much it may impair the prospective fortunes of a few favored corporations or individuals who happen to own American-built ships, while it will save the tax-payers $800,000. The Senate may therefore as well look at the proposition as it is; it is a simple one: Will we refuse to pass a fair, clean, just bill, which meets the approval of both Houses, and provides for the postal service for the next fiscal year, to the entire satisfaction of all our officials because the House disagreed with the Senate in regard to a subsidy which has nothing to do with the original bill which both Houses approve or with the service we are providing for?

I hardly think a majority of the Senate is prepared to stop the mail service of the country for a year because the House, in the exercise of its undoubted right, disagrees with them on a proposition of that sort. I admit that in times of high party excitement, when passion rather than reason controlled the action of men, attempts have been made by one House to coerce the other. Things have been done by both parties that neither are proud of. No such condition of things exists now, and there is nothing in our past experience with subsidized steamship lines, either in the methods pursued or in the results produced by them to induce Senators to resort to violent coercive measures against the House of Representatives because it refuses to tax the people in order to enrich them. I could turn to many debates on this floor in which Senators on both sides asserted, in the most emphatic manner, that while one House had the right to submit any proposition to the other as an amendment to any pending bill which was in order under its rules, it was the duty of the House proposing it to recede from it as soon as it was convinced that the other House was opposed to it. That neither House had any more right to attempt to coerce the other into an agreement when the proposition was submitted as an amendment to a pending bill than it would have if it had been sent to it as an independent measure. The excuse for presenting propositions as amendments when the rules permit being to secure consideration by that method, when, if presented as an independent measure, it probably would not or could not be considered at all. This subsidy submitted by the Senate to the House has been elaborately argued there and rejected, as we all know, in such a way as to leave no doubt that the assurances given by their conferees that the rejection is final may as well be accepted at once.

All I desire to say further is to call attention, among other things, to a statemant made on this floor when the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] was urging the building of new ships on a naval appropriation bill and the then Senator from Delaware, now the Secretary of State, and others were opposing it. The Senator from Maine said on the 10th day of April, 1884, and I believe it is the true solution:

> Then, setting aside the question of order, is this not a reasonable thing for us to do in the relations of the two Houses? I want to remove, if I can, the feeling the Senator has that the Senate is now doing anything that may look like coercing the House. I agree fully with him that that can not be done by either House, but I do think, and I hope he will support me in this, that it is legitimate and fair and not encroaching upon the other House to put on this appropriation bill this amendment, which our rule allows us to do, simply to bring the matter before the other House.

The then Senator from Delaware, Mr. Bayard, expressed his entire assent to that proposition and so did a number of others, and again after a good deal of debate no one stated it more strongly than the Senator from Maine when he repeated as an assurance to the Senator from Delaware that there was no intention to press the House further than to obtain a hearing, and if a refusal to agree with the Senate followed a withdrawal of the proposition. Mr. HALE said:

> Yes, I certainly do. I agree fully with the Senator from Delaware that there should be the utmost courtesy and regard for courtesies between the two Houses. Nothing should be done by either House knowingly that is in any way a monition, to say nothing of a menace, to the other; but either body under the rules has the right to put on measures in order to call the attention of the other House to them and in order that the two Houses may if possible get together and settle them in a conference or by vote; nothing more.

That is all I care to say. No Senator here will for a moment believe after what has taken place in the House and in conference that there is any chance for the House to agree with us. The Senate is driven, therefore, to the alternative of either refusing to make appropriations for the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, because the House will not agree to the subsidy, or it has got to endeavor to coerce the House into it after it has expressed itself in the most unequivocal terms that it will always reject it.

The Senate passed it. The Senator from Alabama or any other gentleman is wasting his time in arguing what we ought to have done. I opposed it. I was beaten, and so were those who agreed with me, but neither he nor any majority of the Senate has any power to make the House of Representatives agree with us; and they have, as the RECORD shows, by a majority larger than the vote cast for the subsidy—much larger—declared that they will not agree to that, and we have no power to coerce them; and if the Senate seeks to stop the postal service of the Government and the mails of the country because it can not get the House of Representatives to agree to a subsidy, that is the alternative that many more votes of insisting will lead to.

Mr. PLUMB. Before the Senator from Kentucky takes his seat I wish to ask him if he is not making the statement too broad as to action of the Senate in proposing to amend House bills? Do we not every session amend House bills in the way of increasing appropriations, changing them, and so on, even in matters on which the House has already disagreed, with a view of calling their attention again to matters of this kind which the Senate deems important, with a view to giving them an opportunity to rectify what we believe to be mistakes?

Mr. BECK. We do, and do it properly, and we ought to do it. We nave done that in this case. We have had two conferences, and we have seen their action and know what it is. I simply mean to say that I regard it hopeless to press the matter any further on them. The Senator knows that as a conferee, though differing with him, I have stood by him and expect to stand by him in the conference hereafter to maintain the action of the Senate; but I think we may as well look the facts in the face.

Mr. PLUMB. I thought the Senator was stating the proposition rather broadly that when the House dissented from anything the Senate ought not to still further insist.

Mr. BECK. Oh, no. I beg pardon. I said that when we had pressed a matter to a point where we had positive assurance that they were opposed to us and on a call of the yeas and nays on a measure like this there was 98 majority for the dissent of the House and only 80 votes cast against it, that when their position was so pronounced and when their conferees advised us that there was no chance to agree, then we must determine the other question: shall the bill pass without the amendment, or will we refuse to pass the bill altogether unless they agree to the amendment? I think we are about driven to that.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I agree in the proposition of the Senator from Kentucky that where there is a deadlock between the two Houses somebody in the end must give way, and the body that proposes a definite, marked, significant amendment to an appropriation bill or any other bill has upon it the burden of showing its essential strength in order to convince the other House; and it may be that upon this wise proposition which the Senate Committee on Appropriations reported and the Senate voted upon the bill, the other branch of Congress may adhere to its position and the Senate in the end have to give it up for the time being; but it will only be for the time being. This policy of the United States Government interposing, as every other civilized government in the world that has commerce and foreign trade has done, to encourage and stimulate and increase that foreign trade and commerce will prevail. The House of Representatives may throw itself across the pathway of this movement and may be able to divert it, but it will not end with this session of Congress or with this Congress. The people of the United States have become not only an overproducing people, furnishing millions upon millions of the products of the farm and the shop and the mine and the manufactory, which surplus products are desired and needed by our neighbors especially upon the American continent, but the American people have become more than an overproducing people, and the industries of the United States, fostered as they have been, protected as they have been, are to-day able to compete in producing cheap products with foreign nations, so that if a fair opportunity and a fair field is opened for gaining the commerce of these neighbors of ours in the Central and South American states we shall obtain that commerce, and having once got it shall be able to keep it.

Of all the great products of labor in the United States into which the uses of machinery largely enter the United States can furnish untold millions to these people as cheaply as Great Britain or France or Germany. Many of the products from iron and steel, cotton goods of the cheaper kind, manufactures from leather, agricultural implements of all kinds, that the people in Brazil and Chili and Peru and Venezuela and the Colombian States and the Argentine Confederation are stretching out their hands and demanding, we can send to them at prices as cheap as our European competitors; and but one thing is wanted, and that is transportation, regular, continuous, and as swift as possible. The history of every nation that has extended its commerce is the history of enterprise in the very direction that the Senate is now pursuing.

I am not troubled by the point of order or by the consideration in the nature of a point of order that the Senator from Kentucky has advanced, that this ought not to be put upon a Post-Office appropriation bill, that that is a clean service for the postal convenience of the American people, that it ought to be left there, and that this subject ought not to be introduced here. Why, sir, it has been done by other countries always; the increasing of their communication with other nations has been by aid given to commercial lines as a feature of their postal service. And, Mr. President, the whole Post-Office bill that is reported year by year and passed by Congress and approved by the President of the United States is, to use a word which Senators and others object to, a system of subsidies from beginning to end.

For years Congress aids and assists in appropriations which are actual subsidies for routes in different parts of the country which would never exist but for the appropriations given by Congress. Hundreds and thousands of miles under the star-route feature of the appropriation bills are made by the Government and kept up by its appropriations, where the needs of the communities through which those lines run are in no way commensurate with the expense in which the Government involves itself in maintaining them, because the theory of the whole star-route service is that communication shall be increased for the convenience of the population of the United States, and the question as to the weight of the mails or the extent of the wants of the people does not in any degree measure the appropriations that we make. We are aiding them and subsidizing them constantly. But the moment that any question arises with reference to encouraging our commerce with foreign peoples, to open a market for our overproductions, to enrich the American manufacturer, and the American farmer, and the American laborer, and the whole country as a country, that moment the Senator from Kentucky and those of his school of thinking set themselves squarely in the way to thwart, to oppose, and to defeat.

As I said, the whole postal appropriation bill goes on the theory not simply of carrying the mails for the price that the letters carried shall be paid for, but as subsidies to routes. The Postmaster-General in an official letter dated June 16, in response to a Congressional resolution of inquiry respecting the mail service on inland waters, discourses thus, and I should like the Senator from Kentucky, who is so sensitive upon subsidies, to listen to what the Postmaster-General says about this internal system of ours and our appropriations for it—— of inland water service are each governed by peculiar circumstances, and it is impossible that there can be any uniformity of rule or compensation regarding them. The carriers who render the service would, in many instances, not be found on the route at all but for the Government contract, and would in few instances be found making the regular trips which the Government requires. Wherever there is either passenger or freight traffic sufficient to keep a carrier in existence, independent of the mails, the latter will be found to be generally transported at a moderate price, notwithstanding the exaction by the Government of regular trips at stated hours subject to deduction or fine for any omission or failure. Higher prices are necessary on those routes where the carrier would not exist, or if to be found at all, would make only irregular trips but for his employment in the postal service.

> These routes—

That is, Congress provides money in the appropriation bill, and where there is less postal communication, less mail carried, there the Government pays its largest prices. If that is not a form of subsidy, to which nobody objects, I am unable to penetrate the meaning and the action and operation of our postal system as exemplified and illustrated by this letter of the Postmaster-General. I have been making some examination into the extent to which this trade with South America and the Central American states may be carried, as shown by the commerce which is now opened and being carried on between us and these countries. There is a line running now from New York to Brazilian ports. It has three ships. It takes in its regular trips the products of the American States to Brazil and finds a ready market. It is a profitable venture for the producers of these goods who send their products by this line, and it is interesting to see how broad and extensive already has sprung up this commerce. I have here the manifest of one of the ships of this line, and it furnishes a most interesting document.

Mr. FRYE. The manifest of one voyage?

Mr. HALE. Yes; this is the report and manifest of a cargo laden at the port of New York on board the American steamship Advance, whereof James R. Beard is master, bound for St. Thomas, Barbadoes, Pará, Pernambuco, Bahia, and Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. That single ship carried the products of twenty-six different States. Her cargo amounted to $155,200, and it represented the labor of the farm and the shop and the mine and the factory of twenty-six different States. This extension of commerce is not a thing that is to benefit monopolies, it is not a thing that is to build up already great accumulated fortunes, but it is to furnish the outlet and the market for the labor of the people of the United States.

It is interesting to look over this list from the different States showing what they sent. Here is California sending an invoice of canned pears; Connecticut sends clocks, axes, revolvers, rifles, cartridges, locks, and plated ware; Delaware sends canned fruit. Dakota, far away as she is, not yet admitted to the Union, had its venture in that ship that sailed from New York for Brazil in tin, the product of her mines. Georgia, a Southern State, which my friend before me [Mr. BROWN] so faithfully represents, who realizes the dawning greatness of that great Commonwealth and its interest in this question and in kindred questions—Georgia sends on this single ship blue drills, gray drills, Augusta plaids, colored cotton drills, fancy drills, sheeting, shirtings, tickings. Iowa, far away in the Northwest it would not be suspected that it would be immediately touched and affected by this commerce, but yet to-day stands ready if it is increased and opened to pour the resources of her great fields and products into this stream that shall flow down to our Southern brethren and neighbors—Iowa sends galvanized barbed wire and plows. Illinois sends butter, hams, corned beef, bacon, iron castings, hardware, scales; and Indiana flour from her mills; Kansas corn-meal; Louisiana cotton-seed oil and cotton gins; Maine codfish and lobsters. If they do not destroy these, if we can properly protect them, there is no end to the market for these our products.

Minnesota sends from her mills, which furnish a product that is the wonder of the world, to the South American states, flour. Michigan sends flour, furniture, ores, sugar-mills. Maryland, right on the coast where the line touches, sends lard, cotton-gin, oysters. Massachusetts, from her innumerable shops of her particular labor, sends bleached sheetings, colored cottons, bleached duck, tea, printing-presses, type. New York sends drugs, medicines, maizena, sewing-machines, soap, water-meters, leather belting, cotton clothing, lubricating oil, lard oil, hardware, flour, freezers, and straw paper. New Jersey sends butter, sewing-machines, flour, granite ware, rubber goods, spool silk. New Hampshire sends prints, shirtings, sheetings, colored cottons.

North Carolina—and I remember that one of the Senators from North Carolina asked me when this debate was up before in the Senate whether that State showed in this list and was interested in this question and in this commerce, and on the single ship that I struck into at random I find that North Carolina sends resin and turpentine. Ohio sends household utensils and maizena. Oregon, far off Oregon, sent down an artesian well and driver with all its parts ready for use; Pennsylvania, petroleum, agricultural implements, axes, stoves, glassware, pumps, locomotive car-wheels and brakes, hollow ware, and charcoal iron; Rhode Island, edge-tools, jewelry; Vermont, prize sheep for breeding. Almost everything is found in this one ship. Virginia, waking up, starting anew, entering in upon the field of enterprise and production, sends flour, corn-meal, rye flour. Wisconsin sends flour. I present this manifest to go in the RECORD in the form in which it is prepared.

Segregation of total values of each separate State's manufacture or products, extracted from certified copy of United States custom-house manifest of American steamship Advance, sailed from New York June 5, and from Neport News, Va., on June 8, 1886, for Brazil and West Indies.

J. M. LACHLAN,
Manager U. S. and B. M. S. S. Co.

Now, there is what a single ship is doing, representing the products of twenty-six States, and the demand is constantly increasing down there for our products.

The Senator from Kentucky will say—perhaps some other Senator will say—if there is this demand, this need for our products, and if this trade has already sprung up without governmental aid, why pay out money from the Treasury in this direction? This is the answer to that: The ship whose manifest I have given, this line of ships running from New York to the Brazilian ports and touching at other ports, is to-day in competition with foreign ships and foreign lines that can afford to transport goods from France, Germany, and Great Britain for a mere nothing in order to drive our lines out of the business, because their governments so generously subsidize them. The Advance, whose manifest I have here, and the other ships of this line, have to carry at such a rate that it is barely living, and other ships and other American lines have not the encouragement to go into the enterprise because of the competition of greatly subsidized lines of other countries.

Mr. President, it is a fact that so cheaply can they afford to carry freight from European countries to the South American ports that to-day flour, bacon, hams, butter, and cheese are sent from here to England and Holland and there transshipped to the South American countries. Why is this? Because the English Government sees with an unerring eye that the money which they pay in generous subsidies is a matter of the smallest account compared with the great commerce that is opened by these cheaply transporting lines to their people, and that every dollar they invest in sustaining and encouraging a well-conducted line of steamships from their ports to South American ports brings back to their people in the increase of commerce and in the marketing of their productions $10 for every one that they invest, and the American Government is the only government representing a great and enterprising people that has failed to realize this.

We started once years ago, in days of Democratic ascendency, when this very scheme was inaugurated, under the lead of a most intelligent Southern statesman, and began to aid American lines in the direction that Europe was then aiding her lines, in order to maintain and increase our commerce. The moment that that was done, and the American Congress embarked upon the experiment of subsidy to the extent of $1,600,000 in one year, Great Britain put her lines up $6,000,000. Great Britain put hers up four times as much as ours, in order to drive out our lines and our ships from the ocean. Then a timidity seized upon Congress, and the experiment was abandoned, and all this rich mine of trade and commerce, that has been growing incalculably in the Central and South American states, was turned over to Great Britain. Then her neighbors, witnessing her success, France, and more lately Germany, entered upon the same field, under the same terms and through the same policy. Germany has built up with some of these countries, by encouraging and sustaining lines of transportation, a commerce equal to that of Great Britain.

So in the mean time we, busied with other things, subsidizing without stint at home, developing internal commerce, paying postal routes inordinately not for carrying the mails but for the convenience of our own people, paid no attention to this great field until at last, awakened up as by a fire-bell in the night, the American Congress begins to realize that the condition of the country is such that we must find a market for our increasing overproduction of American labor.

Mr. PLATT. One end of Congress.

Mr. HALE. Yes, as the Senator says, one end of Congress; but it will not stop there. This is not a question that is going to be put down either by an administration that is hostile to it or by one branch of Congress that opposes it. If the measure is defeated here, it will rise again.

While I am about it I will put in connection with the other schedule the schedule of the American steamer Finance, of the same line, sailing from New York February 16, 1886, telling the same story that the other did:

Here is a very curious illustration of the benefit already derived from the enterprise of the gentlemen who have started this Brazilian line and are running it without our aid.

The great product of Brazil, as everybody knows, is coffee. She exports more than half of the entire amount of coffee consumed upon the globe. She sends to the United States more than $40,000,000 worth of coffee every year. With no American lines running from our ports to the Brazilian ports, British and French steamers would do this business and bring to us the coffee that our people demand upon their breakfast tables, that which has become a necessity of life. If there was no competition, and if there were no American lines, the foreign lines would make their own rates, and their freight charge would be added to the cost of the coffee, and the American consumer, the American laborer, would pay for it in the coffee that he drinks in the morning at breakfast.

What is the history of the operation of a line of our own steamers put on here? There are brought from Brazil to the United States every year about 2,000,000 bags of coffee, coming in bags. The old freight that used to be paid to foreign lines bringing coffee to our ports ran from 75 cents to a dollar a bag; and so much was added to the value of every bag of coffee bought by an American importer and consumed by the American people. What was the result of this American line being put on in competition with the foreign lines? The price of freight per bag fell to 60 cents, then to 40 cents, and lately coffee has been brought at an average as low as 10 and 15 and 20 cents a bag. The result of the establishment of that little line of American steamships carrying our products there, bringing Brazil's product to us, has been that in the article of coffee alone about $1,000,000 have been saved to the consumers of the United States. So great was the benefit of this cheapened transportation not only to us but to Brazil, that in their course of governmental business they were ready to give a subsidy, because they received it back ten times over in the increased markets and call that would arise for their more cheaply furnished products. But as much as the benefit was to them it was infinitely greater to us, and direct, and capable of mathematical demonstration.

Here is this line running, and any day the competing lines that have not been able to drive this line out of business may put down their freights, falling back upon their generous governmental subsidies, and drive our ships from the waters. Great Britain has an eye keenly alive to this. I do not believe there was a Senator present who did not listen with interest the other day to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] as he stood in the aisle and told the story of the attempt that Great Britain is now making to seize upon and control the commerce of the Pacific and drive from the waters of that great sea every American line that is engaged in transporting the products of our country to Asia and Asia's products here in connection with their lines of railroad which are being completed across the Dominion to the Pacific ports of British America. Great Britain stands ready with an enormous subsidy to lines of steamships that shall be put on to connect with that railroad system, and cheapened by a low rate of freights, sustained by that subsidy, they can continue that traffic until they drive every American ship from those waters, because Great Britain knows every dollar that she invests from her treasury in the way of subsidy brings back $10 to her people in a market for their products.

Mr. PLATT. And she has already a steamship line at both ends of that railroad.

Mr. HALE. Yes; as the Senator from Connecticut says, the management is already negotiated and completed for lines of steamship to connect with each end of that road, and subsidized without stint almost by the British Government. No British statesman, no British member of the House of Commons, where all this policy is considered and continued and maintained from year to year, ever ventures to rise in his seat and on the plea of economy and of the danger of subsidy dare to interpose a word against this broad and generous course pursued by the British Government.

If the American Congress goes on in the way that it has been doing of late years and fails to appreciate the magnitude of this question and fails to rise to the importance of the occasion, it will be seen, under increased subsidies by European governments, that the few American ships which to-day are engaged in this commerce will be driven from the waters of the globe. They can not stand the competition. It is a question of transportation. The question of production, as I have said, has been settled; the question of a market has been demonstrated; the question of the desire of those people to take our products has been manifested and has been completely disposed of. It is a question of transportation, of the encouragement of American lines of American-built ships, American-sailed ships, carrying American products, under the beneficent encouragement of the American Government.

This policy has great difficulties to contend with. The House of Representatives with its Democratic majority is against it. It refuses, and insists on refusing, and repeats its refusal to embark in this policy, and spends its time on other projects, to which I will not allude. The administration is hostile to it. The Senator from Kentucky in the debate here six weeks ago declared in terms that his opposition, which was fearless and tireless, represented the administration; that the President was opposed to the policy; that the Secretary of the Treasury was opposed to it; that the Attorney-General was opposed to it; that the Postmaster-General, as everybody knows, was opposed to it; and so it has to contend with this perhaps greatest of all difficulties.

Sir, the time will come when the American people will demand that an administration shall be wise enough and broad enough and far-sighted enough to realize and comprehend this great subject. They will demand an administration which will not spend its time upon little details and smaller considerations, but will have that breadth of statesmanship, that knowledge of the resources of the American people, that knowledge of the demands of American labor, and that knowledge of this vast field which lies open and ready for us to occupy that should characterize an intelligent administration of the affairs of the American people.

I wish that the President could be taken away from some of the things to which he is no doubt honestly giving his time. Let him give less time to the examination and consideration of the subject of a pension to some poor old soldier, and study up this question and learn something of this great field that is open to the American people. Let the heads of his Departments examine into it. Let the Postmaster-General, who acknowledges in the letter which I have read that our postal system is a system of subsidies, awaken to the importance of this subject, and let him see and know and realize that the American people will have a Postmaster-General who will not put the clamps upon American enterprise, and who will not, when the people from South and Central America are asking for our products, stand in the way of every movement that tends to extend this trade.

So I say that while this enterprise may go away and may amount to nothing in this Congress because of the hardihood and density of the opposition, the time will come when such will not be the case, when these lines will be encouraged, and when a constant and increasing stream of commerce carrying our products to these neighbors of ours will in return bring back theirs that we need, and the whole country will be benefited.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] that the Senate further insist on its amendments to the Post-Office appropriation bill, and ask for a further conference, on which question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] was called away from the Senate Chamber quite unwell, and asked me to pair with him on this question. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. MCMILLAN. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. Both are absent from the Chamber, sick. My colleague would vote "yea," if he were here.

Mr. CAMDEN. I wish to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. KENNA], who is detained from the Chamber to-day on account of sickness, with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. MILLER. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. I am told by Senators that he would probably vote "yea," if he were here. I do not know as to that; but as this is not a political question I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BLAIR (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. I withdraw my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who has a general pair with me, authorized me to transfer that pair, which I now do, to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. If the Senator from Alabama were present, I suppose he would vote "nay;" and the Senator from Colorado would vote "yea" if he were present. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. HEARST. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. STANFORD].

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 12; as follows:

SCHOONER OUNALASKA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith inclose a report from the Secretary of State, with its accompanying copies of papers, relative to the case of the American schooner Ounalaska, which was duly condemned by the Government of Salvador for having been employed in aid of an insurrection against that republic, and was subsequently presented to the United States. It seems that an act of Congress accepting the gift on the part of this Government is necessary to complete the transfer, and I recommend that legislation in this sense be adopted. It further appears that one Isidore Gutte, of San Francisco, has sought to obtain possession of the condemned vessel, and I therefore suggest that a second provision to the law accepting her be made giving authority to the Court of Claims to hear and determine the question of title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication, with accompanying paper, from the Secretary of State in relation to the distribution of the award of the late Mexican Claims Commission in the case of S. A. Belden & Co. against the Republic of Mexico.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, June 28, 1886.

CONFERENCE ON HOUSE PENSION BILLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the following bills and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon:

A bill (H. R. 7165) to increase the pension of Manhattan Pickett;

A bill (H. R. 1462) granting a pension to Addie L. Macomber;

A bill (H. R. 3463) granting a pension to Mrs. Hannah Babb Hutchins; and

A bill (H. R. 4544) granting a pension to Ann E. Cooney.

By unanimous consent, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bills disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. BLAIR, Mr. SAWYER, and Mr. WHITTHORNE.

KANSAS RAILROAD GRANTS.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7021) to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads within the State of Kansas, and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes; which was ordered to be printed.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the veto by the President of what is known as the Des Moines River lands bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, in the Chair). The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 150) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes. The Chair will state to the Senator from Kansas that the regular order is the bill relating to land grants.

Mr. BUTLER. I was going to ask the Senator from Kansas to yield to me with a view of taking up the bill (S. 980) granting the right of way to the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad Company. If the Senator is not anxious to proceed with the regular order, I should be very glad to have that bill disposed of to-day.

Mr. PLUMB. I think we can get through with the Des Moines River lands bill within an hour or so anyhow. It will lead to very little debate, I think; and the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], who desires to speak on the question, wants to go away; so that it becomes very material to his convenience to have the matter disposed of now. I think we can get through with it in an hour or two.

Mr. BUTLER. I should be very glad to have the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad bill disposed of. It has been partly proceeded with by the Senate. Of course it is a matter of great annoyance to me to have an unfinished measure on my hands, and I am sure that it can be disposed of in three-quarters of an hour. So far as I am concerned I will agree not to open my mouth about it, but take a vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PLUMB. Under the circumstances I must insist on the Des Moines River lands bill. I have no objection to the bill which the Senator from South Carolina has in charge coming up at at any other time, and I should be glad to help him bring it up; but I think there is ample time to dispose of the Des Moines bill this evening.

Mr. BUTLER. I have given way about half a dozen times, and I am very anxious to get the bill through. I want to leave the city myself, and this is the matter of principal interest which is detaining me here. If the Senator will permit me to go on with it, as I said a moment ago, I am quite willing to take a vote on it without any discussion whatever so far as I am concerned.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from South Carolina will allow me to suggest that I know that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] desires to speak, I think at some length, on the bill he has in charge, and it is a matter not likely to be disposed of without debate.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Senator from Nebraska does not propose to speak at any great length. However, I desire to be heard when the bill is under consideration, and I do not think it can be disposed of between now and the usual hour of ndjournment.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 980.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that the Senator from Kansas has submitted a motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending motion is that submitted by the Senator from Kansas, who declines to yield, the Chair understands.

Mr. PLUMB. That I think is a privileged motion, and in view of all the circumstances I can not consent to yield, on account of the convenience of Senators who desire to speak on the matter.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I move that the matter to which the Senator from Kansas refers be informally laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion now before the Senate is the motion of the Senator from Kansas to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 150. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

Mr. BUTLER. Of course I can not ask the Senator further to yield, but if that motion is adopted I shall then ask the Senate to lay the matter aside informally with a view of taking up the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Now I ask that the pending bill be informally laid aside for the purpose of proceeding with the bill to which I have referred.

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. ALLISON. I will assist the Senator some other time to get up his bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I have been having that kind of assurance for the last ten days, and every time I ask for help it is always withdrawn in favor of something else. I should be glad to have the Senator's powerful aid, but he never seems to bring it to the rescue.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has agreed to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 150) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

Mr. INGALLS. No, not the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. The veto message.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The veto message of the President will be read.

Mr. INGALLS. Has not the message been read once?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been read once heretofore.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not think it necessary to read it again. The pending question is, Shall the bill pass notwithstanding the objections of the President?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think if we are going to consider the veto message of the President it ought to be read. It may have been read hastily before, but we are now going to deal with the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the message being read again? The Chair hears none, and the message will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I return herewith, without approval, and with a statement of my objections thereto, Senate bill No. 150, entitled "An act to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes."

This proposed legislation grows out of a grant of land made to the Territory of Iowa in the year 1846 to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Des Moines River."

The language of this grant was such that it gave rise to conflicting decisions on the part of the Government Departments as to its extent, and it was not until 1880 that this question was authoritatively and finally settled by the Supreme Court of the United States. Its decision diminished the extent of the grant to a quantity much less than had been insisted on by certain interested parties, and rendered invalid the titles of parties who held, under the Territory or State of Iowa, lands beyond the limit of the grant fixed by the decision of the court.

For the purpose of validating such titles and to settle all disputes so far as the General Government was concerned, the Congress, in the year 1861, by a joint resolution, transferred to the State of Iowa all the title then retained by the United States to the lands within the larger limits which had been claimed, and then held by bona fide purchasers from the State; and in 1862 an act of Congress was passed for the same general purpose.

Without detailing the exact language of this resolution and statute, it certainly seems to be such a transfer and relinquishment of all interests in the land mentioned on the part of the United States as to relieve the Government from any further concern therein.

The questions unfortunately growing out of this grant and the legislation relating thereto have been passed upon by the United States Supreme Court in numerous cases; and as late as 1883 that court, referring to its many previous decisions, adjudged:

"That the act of 1862 (C. 161, 12 Stats., 543) transferred the title from the United States and vested it in the State of Iowa, for the use of its grantees under the river grant."

Bills similar to this have been before Congress for a number of years, and have failed of passage; and at least on one occasion the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate reported adversely upon a measure covering the same ground.

I have carefully examined the legislation upon the subject of this grant, and studied the decisions of the court upon the numerous and complicated questions which have arisen from such legislation, and the positions of the parties claiming an interest in the land covered by said grant; and I can not but think that every possible question that can be raised, or at least that ought to be raised, in any suit relating to these lands, has been determined by the highest judicial authority in the land. And if any substantial point remains yet unsettled, I believe there is no difficulty in presenting it to the proper tribunal.

This bill declares that certain lands which, nearly twenty-four years ago, the United States entirely relinquished are still public lands, and directs the Attorney-General to begin suits to assert and protect the title of the United States in such lands.

If it be true that these are public lands, the declaration that they are so by enactment is entirely unnecessary; and if they are wrongfully withheld from the Government, the duty and authority of the Attorney-General are not aided by the proposed legislation. If they are not public lands because the United States have conveyed them to others, the bill is subject to grave objections as an attempt to destroy vested rights and disturb interests which have long since become fixed.

If a law of Congress could, in the manner contemplated by the bill, change, under the Constitution, the existing rights of any of the parties claiming interests in these lands, it hardly seems that any new questions could be presented to the courts which would do more than raise false hopes and renew useless and bitter strife and litigation.

It seems to me that all controversies which can hereafter arise between those claiming these lands have been fairly remitted to the State of Iowa, and that there they can be properly and safely left; and the Government, through its Attorney-General, should not be called upon to litigate the rights of private parties.

It is not pleasant to contemplate loss threatened to any party acting in good faith, caused by uncertainty in the language of laws or their conflicting interpretation; and if there are persons occupying these lands who labor under such disabilities as to prevent them from appealing to the courts for a redress of their wrongs, a plain statute, directed simply to a remedy of such disabilities, would not be objectionable.

Should there be meritorious cases of hardship and loss, caused by an invitation on the part of the Government to settle upon lands apparently public, but to which no right or lawful possession can be secured, it would be better, rather than to attempt a disturbance of titles already settled, to ascertain such losses and do equity by compensating the proper parties through an appropriation for that purpose.

A law to accomplish this very object was passed by Congress in the year 1873. Valuable proof is thus furnished, by the only law ever passed upon the subject, of the manner in which it was thought proper by the Congress at that time to meet the difficulties suggested by the bill now under consideration.

Notwithstanding the fact that there may be parties in the occupancy of these lands who suffer hardship by the application of strict legal principles to their claims, safety lies in the non-interference by Congress with matters which should be left to judicial cognizance; and I am unwilling to concur in legislation which, if not an encroachment upon judicial power, trenches so closely thereon as to be of doubtful expediency, and which at the same time increases the elements of litigation that have heretofore existed and endangers vested rights.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 11, 1886.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, by far the greater part of the Senate are not only very familiar with this subject in all its forms, but much more so than I am. My predecessor in the Senate, Mr. Lapham, in attention to the just rights of many of his constituents, gave to this subject a full consideration, and left nothing unheeded in his examinations and nothing omitted in his presentation of their rights.

My attention was for the first time called to this subject about the time that the veto message of the President came in. Before that I had no knowledge on the subject, and when the bill passed this body as it did, and passed the House of Representatives also, I had no knowledge of its pendency.

An examination of the subject has satisfied me that the President is entirely right in his finding the reasons for returning the bill to this body for reconsideration. In examining the debates in which the Senators from Iowa and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and Mr. Garland, then a Senator from Arkansas, participated, the whole light which could be thrown from one side and the other upon this bill has been reflected from luminous minds and by careful research. The interest of my constituents in the greater part of the lands which are involved in controversy makes it quite my duty to examine their rights and to present them, and without hesitation. I may say that after having made the examination I can see no answer which can be made to the reasons of the President, or to the reasons which have been advanced in previous debates in this body on this subject adverse to the bill.

I find running through the former debates what I shall now concur in fully, a general regret on both sides, by the advocates and the opponents of the bill, a very sincere regret, that competing claimants for the same land, both claiming under titles directly or indirectly from the United States, should thus be in competition. In ordinary relations where a grantor has made inconsistent grants by inadvertence the remedy is complete under the warrantees that the evicted tenant can have his remedy against the landlord. I am not disposed to undervalue in the least the rights of these claimants if they are sincere and honest in their claims. Under the course of legislation and under the course of administration of the lands by the officers of the Government there has been confusion, and are or have been competing claims. I believe that it is the duty of the Government under such circumstances to make a patient and generous examination into the situation, and I do not think that the question of the amount which might be drawn from the Treasury in meeting these competing claims and satisfying the disappointed parties relying upon the action of the Government should be a question for rejecting the proposition.

The title by pre-emption or by the homestead law is as good as any other title. Its origin, its circumstances, and the reasons and the uses of the legislation should give every degree of support to a title thus claimed. The claimants here against the title of those whom I now in this argument represent insist that they, if not in law, yet in equity, in the favor of this Government at least, should be put upon a basis that would enable them to accomplish the purpose on which they have relied in their attempts to gain a title. By whatever means consistent with the rights of property and the observance of law and the Constitution, at whatever cost to the United States, a due consideration should be given to such pretensions. At various stages running through now twenty-five years or more this subject has been treated of in law, in administration, in discussion, and in attempts to pacify if not to satisfy these competing claims.

In the mean while the natural resort and, as I think, not only the natural but the necessary determination of legal rights has been pursued in case after case through the courts of the United States up to the final determination in them of the Supreme Court of the United States. I shall not only find a complete legal determination of the rights of the claimants under the original grant of 1846 for the improvement of the Des Moines River in these statutes and in the proceedings of Congress giving affirmation and renewed affirmation to these statutes, a complete and perfect legal title, but I shall find in the consecutive decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States a decisive, conclusive, and uniform acceptance and insistance upon that legal title.

If that is so, then the question must first present itself, how in the sense of changing or regulating the execution of the law as now existing and its interpretation by the courts of this country should it find access to this Chamber or to this Congress?

I shall not insist upon so full a presentation of the nature of this controversy as I should need to do for my own satisfaction were not the Senate in possession of the topics more completely, as I have already said, than I am myself.

The interest and the dissension arise in this way: Congress as early as 1846 made a grant of lands in Iowa upon the Des Moines River to aid that State in the completion of a system of improved navigation of that river. A grant was made of so many sections upon one side and the other of the river, and the improvement was to be below the forks of the Raccoon River, I think, and the question was whether the grant given was limited to the sections or the lands on the sides of this river below the Raccoon Fork or not. Whatever indeterminateness or carelessness there might have been in the definition of the grant it was in Congress, and these parties now disputing were not responsible for any such obscurity. It was held that the grant did cover the lands above the Raccoon Fork. It was held also by other administrative action that it did not. Then again the first plan was again accepted; and so it went back and forth for a considerable time in the treatment of this topic by the officers of this Government having charge of it.

In 1859, in a suit then pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, it was for the first time, as I understand, determined legally that the grant did not extend north of the Raccoon Fork, and thereupon what had been obscure and had been disputed was as matter of law settled, that the grant had not embraced the lands north of this fork. Then in 1861, after this determination, Congress by a joint resolution of the 2d of March, 1861, conferred this grant according to the interpretation of its including the lands above the fork to the State of Iowa to inure to the benefit of its honest grantee. Prior to this determination by the court in 1859, and prior, of course, to this confirmatory act of Congress, the Des Moines Navigation Company, having completed so far as it had done its duties in the improvement of the river, had settled with the State concerning that work and concerning the stipulated benefit or compensation, and these lands had been vested in the Des Moines Navigation Company by the authentic action of the State of Iowa. Upon the passage, therefore, of this act of 1861 there came to be, as we claim and as the courts have decided as we suppose, a good title in the company under the action of the State of Iowa and under the operation of the resolution of Congress of March 2, 1861.

In 1862 a bill was passed here covering and governing the same subject, but also some other relations to the interests of Iowa in regard to its railroads, and this again was a confirmation of this grant on the construction which embraced these lands in dispute, and thereupon again there came to be an absolute and complete and settled title.

Still later, in 1871, by a new act then passed, brought into existence by reason of some relations to railroad grants for the aid of Iowa and in furtherance of its just right to participate in these lands for improvements, as I understand, a new confirmation was given to this title.

There having been a large discontent and disappointment there to men who had counted upon the plot of land that they occupied as, if not secured, at least to be secured to them under the laws of the land, an effort was made on the part of Congress to ascertain what the extent of persons interested, the number of acres involved, and the value of the property thus in jeopardy in the competing claims, and a commission was appointed which as I understand had for its purpose the informing of Congress what the actual state of these claimants was and how much was involved. These commissioners were appointed under an act of March 3, 1873, by which three accomplished gentlemen, one of Minnesota, one of Iowa, and one of Ohio, were made commissioners to "ascertain the number of acres, and by appraisement or otherwise the value thereof, exclusive of improvements, of all such lands lying north of Raccoon Fork of the Des Moines River, in the State of Iowa, as may now be held by the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, or persons claiming title under it adversely to persons holding said lands, either by entry or under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, and on what terms the adverse holders thereof will relinquish the same to the United States."

Here was an honest and a generous effort in its design to accomplish a pacification of the disputes and to throw upon this Government the responsibility that should belong to it as growing out of the obscurity or inattention of its legislation. In the report of this commission is a complete statement of the names of the settlers, the description of their property, of the character of their claim or initiatory step, the dates, &c., of all the proper and necessary methods of accomplishing a good title, and an appraisement of the value per acre and of the adverse owners' terms to the United States per acre. It is found that there was involved in this as the total number of acres 39,510; average appraised value per acre, $10.22; total appraised value, $404,228.49; average owners' price per acre, $14.35; total owners' price, five hundred and sixty-three thousand and odd dollars. Congress seems to have been dismayed or discouraged by the amount that would be required to pacify these claimants. I will occupy no further attention with this part of the matter than what I understand to have been the disposition of these claimants.

Of these 344 persons, it is stated to me upon what I regard as good authority, I may say undisputed, only 12 filed their claims prior to March 2, 1861; that is, only this small number of the 344 had commenced their steps toward securing a title by homestead or pre-emption before the resolution of March 2, 1861, was passed. Prior to May 1, 1880, I am assured that over 270 persons had bought their claims from the navigation company, leaving but 74 not settled with, and it is believed only 10 or 12 are now unsettled with.

I bring this to the attention of the Senate as showing how the matter stands in regard to these dates, when certainly, as it seems to me, it was clear that the title to this land was confirmed by the United States and was no longer in the public domain.

The course of litigation went on, and I shall not recount either the suits or read the decisions, but I think I am quite justified in saying that, as was stated by Senator Garland in his place and by Senator MORGAN in his place, all the questions that it could be supposed it was possible to raise as to the legal rights of these conflicting claimants had been passed upon and determined.

If any one will point out to me the right or the method of asserting these homestead or pre-emption claims against the title made under the State of Iowa to the Des Moines Navigation Company by the United States in their legislation I shall be happy to consider it; but I do not know that when this was challenged in the last debate in the last Congress in this body then that an attempt was made to do so.

Of course that there should be a body of land in dispute is injurious to all concerned. It is always injurious to the neighborhood, to the development of the State. These lands, I am told, are as fortunate and fertile perhaps as any equal amount of the favored land of that great State of Iowa; and all who are involved in either the discouragement or despair of failing in lands which they thought they could gain are entitled to full and ample consideration; but the question of the method to be adopted and pursued to that end brings us now to what is a very simple and a very intelligible proposition.

If it be true that the United States now has any title in this land, if it now constitutes a part of the public domain, the United States can assert by such methods as the law opens to the United States the maintenance of that title; and when that title has been established and by determination the land has come back into the public domain, then I suppose not a single voice would be raised against entertaining and disposing of just claims that have rested upon this dormant title that is finally established, as it would be in the case I have supposed, in the United States.

But this bill does not proceed upon that proposition. Pending the course of legislation and pending the course of judicial determination, such as it is, for a series of years an attempt has been made to put these claimants or the United States in their behalf upon a footing which the law and the courts did not give them. Several times in past sessions the bill has passed one or the other of the bodies of Congress, but not until now has it passed both Houses and been presented to the President for his sanction to its becoming a law. His examination of it has led him to think that for grave reasons, very tersely and yet very comprehensively stated in this message of the President, this disturbance of the courts and of the law and reconsideration by the United States of legislation which has been determinative of this point should not be allowed.

I ask now attention to the bill itself, and then I shall perhaps have done all that I need to do in this behalf.

The bill begins by reciting what is thought to be the basis of the enactment, which I need not read. I might not think upon my own examination of the case that it was altogether properly recited, but that might be perhaps an error on my part. Certainly the Public Lands Committee have intended to be accurate and faithful. The last whereas is:

Whereas there are many settlers who, believing that the said lands were public lands, entered upon the same in good faith, and with the consent of the Department of the Interior, as pre-emptions and homesteads, and since so doing, and after receiving patents, have been held by the courts as trespassers, or that the lands were reserved from settlement.

Now you have the situation directly stated. The courts have held these people trespassers, and they ask now for aid from the United States in legislation to put them on some better footing:

Therefore, be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all the lands improperly certified to Iowa by the Department of the Interior under the act of August 8, 1846, as referred to in the joint resolution of March 2, 1861, for which indemnity lands were selected and received by the State of Iowa, as provided in the act of 1862, are, and are hereby delared to be, public lands of the United States.

That is an enactment that these lands above Raccoon Fork that had improperly been treated administratively as included in the grant, and that had been treated also in the legislation of the 2d of March, 1861, and in the subsequent legislation, and that had been dealt with in the courts under the solemn and frequent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, are to be taken up by legislation now, and the initial, the fundamental, and absolutely necessary proposition to sustain the rest of the bill is this enactment that these lands thus disposed of, thus held by claimants, thus possessed under title made through the United States and the State of Iowa, are to be now made and considered public lands of the United States. Although the mild phrase "are declared" is used in this clause, if it means anything it means are decreed to be public lands of the United States.

We have no declaratory law under our Constitution that can affect property and rights of property deinde as of date from the original grant or action. We have no power in Congress to disturb the titles of land, whether gained under homestead or pre-emption, or under grants, or under the ordinary forms under which transmission of land is made. We have no power to change that title. It can not be done. If it is done for public use, it must be by condemnation and compensation. If it is to deprive those who have rights of their existing rights, it can only be done by due process of law, and it can not be done now under the fourteenth amendment, except under the equal protection of the law to all.

But here is an invasion in the most direct form, by absolutely decreeing that the property as now vested by law, if it be vested as the courts have decided, if it be vested as the owners occupying it claim it and assert it to be, shall be taken from the freeholder and resumed to the United States as its property for public uses. And yet in the discussion before the Senate a year ago in the Congress of that date the assertion of Senator Garland and of Senator MORGAN was that there was no footing whatever upon which to establish a proposition that was to transfer to the public domain what by law and by judgment was not the public domain, and it might as well be attempted in reference to any land that was held by any man under whatever title.

Now let us see the purpose. Does the United States undertake to resume these lands and keep them for public use as its lands? No; it undertakes to throw a title or claim of title under which the United States may assert and litigate these competing titles. Does it do it as it might do, by permitting the officers of this Government in the Law Department to undertake the prosecution of the right according to existing law? No; it not only condemns by transferring the title from the present possessing owners to the United States, but it then proceeds to determine the grounds of determination in the suits that may spring out, either private or public, from this new legislation, the rules and principles upon which the possession of the land is to be determined.

It is restored to the public domain—

Provided, That the title of all bona fide settlers under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with pre-emption or homestead claimants, are hereby ratified and confirmed, and made valid.

That is to say, all these lands that are vested in the citizens of New York and of Ohio and several other of the States of the Union, that are theirs now, that have been decided to be theirs in fee-simple absolute, shall not be disturbed by the United States unless there is a counter-claim. This is legislation about land and about title. It is not a disposition of what belongs to the United States. If that be so, it can now determine by its own litigation without the aid of any legislation what the titles may be. Now we come to the further proviso. After having shown that we shall be ratified in all our claims where there is no counter-claimant, the further proviso is:

Provided, further, That the claims of all persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, entered or remained upon any tract of said land prior to January, 1880, not exceeding 160 acres, are hereby confirmed and made valid in them, their heirs or their proper assigns, and upon due proof thereof, and payment of the usual price or fees, where the same has not been paid, shall be carried to patent.

This statement of the persons that are thus to derive patents against the claimants whom I represent are not persons that have gained under the pre-emption law or under the homestead law any title that those laws are calculated to give; nor is it limited to those who went on in good faith while there was obscurity and while there was uncertainty in the administration by the land offices. But up to 1880, after the legislation of March 2, 1861, and that of July 12, 1862, and March 3, 1871, and after all these litigations and all these public decisions, if a party can bring himself, not on a footing that the courts will determine, but on a footing that the United States as dominant owner of the fee shall accept as good reason, the bounty and favor of the Government is extended. How does it read?

That the claims of all persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, entered or remained upon any tract of said land prior to January, 1880.

They are to have a better title and deprive us of our title made under the original legislation and the decisions of the courts. Of course this proviso can have no legal footing in the courts, and it can have no lawful support in the legislation of Congress unless the principal fact be that the land is now in the United States without this legislation. None of these contrivances, first of establishing an apparent title in the United States, and, second, of confirming to us those lands that were not disputed, and then confirming to all that did dispute or put themselves in the position of being occupants or claimants at any time previous to 1880 and saying they are to have the better title, can stand the test of scrutiny. The action must rest upon taking the claimant's property as derived under existing laws and decisions and giving it to others that under existing laws and decisions have no such title.

There is a further proviso:

Provided, further, That the title of all bona fide claimants under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, settled upon the said lands prior to January, 1880, are confirmed and made valid.

This is circumlocution, for it comes to this, that the act declares that these lands are the property of the United States and have been since 1846, because it was there the vice was, in the grant that was construed wrongfully, we will say for the sake of the argument, ever since 1846, and that you now propose to give them not according to the title of bona fide claimants under the statutes and under the laws of Iowa, but to people that have got the footing, or desiring, or planning, or hoping that they might come to a title that would be good.

The President has pointed out that this is, as he words it, so nearly trenching at least upon the established rights of property—I do not quote his words—that Congress should not undertake that method of dealing. I am under no obligation to maintain any such reserve. I, in my view as a lawyer and under an examination of the decisions, can not but treat this bill, however good may be the motives and however desirable certain ends might be gained by proper means, this encroachment upon the rights of property and the right to maintain them according to existing law in the courts of the country, is a subversion of the constitutional provisions as well as of the principles of justice.

Mr. President, I might occupy your attention with reading the clauses of these acts of Congress; I might draw your attention to the decisions of the courts in full, as I believe in previous discussions in this body this detail and this analysis have been carefully spread before the Senate; but I have said enough, in addition to the very competent and careful treatment of the subject in the message of the Executive, to show you that upon views which approve themselves to my judgment and my examination the passage of this bill should be prevented.

Much has been said in previous debates on the part of the learned Senators and others who espoused the cause of the bill and faithfully and carefully and intelligently exposed the mischiefs now existing and the desirability of their being terminated. As I said before, I heartily concur in that view; but I have before me now a single bill, and I can not find in that any of the opportunities to do justice or to encourage hope. I have not the least expectation that if this act should become a law the claims made by the United States or made by these claimants could find hospitable reception in the courts of the United States for their decision, and I can not suppose that it can be now raised as a claim that a declatory law of Congress can prevail with the courts of this Union on any point to change the law as existing at the time the declaratory act is passed in reference to anything that has taken place before.

I find in one of the principal newspapers, the Iowa State Register, of Saturday, April 17, 1886, a statement of a resolution with recitals that passed the senate of that State unanimously, as it is stated, and it is supposed would have passed the other house had there been time for its consideration. I ask that the Secretary will do me the favor to read this.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas many of the settlers upon the so-called "Des Moines River lands," located above the Raccoon Fork of that river, entered upon the same in good faith, with the intent to make pre-emption or homestead entries, in accordance with decisions of the Department that the same were public lands and subject to pre-emption and homestead entry as such; and

Whereas by repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States the lands so entered upon by such settlers have been held to have been reserved from such entry as lands embraced in the Des Moines River grant of August 8, 1846, and the title hereto to have passed, by virtue of the joint resolution of March 2, 1861, "to quiet title to lands in the State of Iowa," and an act of Congress of July 12, 1862, entitled "An act confirming a land claim in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes," to the State of Iowa for the benefit of bona fide purchasers thereof from said State; and

Whereas a bill for an act entitled "An act to quiet the title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes," passed by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States at its present session has failed to become a law by reason of the veto of the President, the reason of such veto being, as maintained by the President, want of power in Congress to enact the same: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate of the State of Iowa (the house of representatives concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to use their best endeavors to secure the prompt enactment of a law whereby full and complete indemnity shall be provided for all persons who in good faith, with intent to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, have entered upon any of the lands for which indemnity lands have been selected and received under and by virtue of the adjustment and settlement referred to in the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, entitled "An act confirming the title of certain lands," and which lands so entered upon, under decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States heretofore made, were not subject to such entry for the reason that the same were reserved from entry and sale as belonging to the Des Moines River land grant of August 8, 1846: Provided, That such indemnity shall not in any case be for any greater quantity of land than 160 acres.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, as the grounds on which I have put this argument admit of no qualification, if I am correct in the views I have presented, it is hardly worth while to insist very much on the imprudence of this legislation in encouraging hopes, in keeping alive dissensions, and in relieving the parties whose interests are undoubtedly so near and valuable to them, from being longer tossed about in conflicting legislation; and it must be apparent that under such a law as this no parties who understand their rights, or are advised concerning them, would surrender this litigation except by the determination of the courts of the land. How much better then to consider the matter, as it now should be, as determined and finally settled; that it is for Congress to relieve from this mischief, which Congress alone is reponsible for.

The second section of the act is a peculiar one, and furnishes the operative mode of carrying out the propositions of right and of law which are contained in the first section. The second section provides:

That it is hereby made the duty of the Attorney-General, within ninety days after the passage of this act, to institute, or cause to be instituted, such suit or suits, either in law or equity, or both, as may be necessary and proper to assert and protect the title of the United States to said lands and remove all clouds from its title thereto—and until such suits shall be determined, and Congress shall so provide, no part of said lands shall be open to settlement or sale except as hereinbefore provided. And in any suits so instituted any person or persons in possession of or claiming title to any tract or tracts of land under the United States involved in such suits may, at his or their expense, unite with the United States in the prosecution of such suits.

That is, the title of the United States—

This is anomalous, and, it seems to me, indicates its own incongruity. This statement is that the lands belong to the United States, that the Attorney-General shall commence a suit for the United States to resume these lands and clear up these titles. So much is very well if the United States has a title. Then it proceeds that on this land belonging to the United States, to be asserted and restored to the domain as the property of the United States, individuals may join as coplaintiffs of the United States in asserting title in which they have no right, and the whole of which is in the United States. By these circuities it is attempted to disguise the directness of the proposition that the United States means to take back this land against the grantee and the claimants under the grantee as of the original title of the United States in the year 1846.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, this bill affects a great many interests in the State which I in part represent and a great many people in that State, and therefore it is an important bill, to be considered with care and with the intelligence which the subject requires. But it is important in another aspect. The President of the United States has sent to us a message objecting to the passage of this bill, and by that message has made it necessary that two-thirds of the votes of both Houses shall be secured in order to enable it to become a law.

The Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] very properly says that this case is a new one to him, that he had not heard of it until about the time of the Presidential veto. It is also, as appears from this veto message, a new one to the President, and I am satisfied from the statements in the veto message as well as from the statements made by the Senator from New York to-day in support of that veto, that neither one has sufficiently studied this case so as to understand the facts fully or the decisions of the courts fully.

I dislike of course to occupy the time of the Senate in going over the details of this case, but the importance of the subject requires that I should review, and I will do so as briefly as possible, the suggestions made by the Senator from New York, and the reasons given by the President for withholding his approval of the bill.

This grant of lands now the subject of controversy was made to the State of Iowa in 1846, just forty years ago, for the purpose of improving the navigation of the Des Moines River from its mouth to the Raccoon Fork, which river falls into the Des Moines at the point where the city of Des Moines now is. That grant allotted to the State of Iowa five alternate sections on either side of that river from the mouth to the Raccoon Fork. There is not on the language of that law, at least so say the Supreme Court of the United States, the slightest doubt as to the legislative intent in passing it, that there was no purpose in the Congress of the United States in making the original grant to grant one acre of land above the Raccoon Fork. The State of Iowa also so regarded it, and it was so regarded by all the officers of the Government at Washington, including the Secretary of the Treasury then having control of the public lands of the Government for nearly three years after the grant.

Three years after the grant was made some ingenious persons in Iowa—and we have a great many of them there—conceived the idea that the grant could be so construed as not only to extend to the Raccoon Fork but to the source of the Des Moines River, which would have carried this land-grant far away into the State of Minnesota; and a pressure was made upon the then Secretary of the Treasury to induce him before he left his office to write a letter putting a construction upon the grant that it extended to the northern boundary of the State of Iowa.

Mr. DAWES. What Secretary?

Mr. ALLISON. The Secretary at that time was Robert J. Walker. He wrote his letter just before retiring from office. It is perfectly apparent that he gave this subject very little consideration, and that it was a letter to satisfy a pressure made upon him by those then exerting an influence in the political affairs of the State. The honorable Thomas Ewing, of Ohio, came into the Interior Department, which was just then organized, and to which the Land Office was assigned, and reversed the decision of Robert J. Walker, holding that this grant only extended to the Raccoon Fork. Then there was a decision invoked of the Attorney-General, and the contest continued some two or three years, until Mr. McClelland became Secretary of the Interior, and he conditionally, as all the records show, certified a portion of these lands to the State of Iowa above the Raccoon Fork.

The State of Iowa proceeded, under a board of public works established by authority of law, to make this improvement, and from time to time as it expended money upon the improvement to the extent of $30,000 lands were certified or allotted as the original grant authorized on the basis of $1.25 per acre.

The State of Iowa continued in its own behalf to proceed toward the completion of this improvement until December, 1853. It found then that the grant of lands above the Raccoon Fork was in very great doubt; it found the expenditure larger than it had supposed it would be; and a New York corporation came along and organized itself under the laws of the State of Iowa, we having a general incorporation law, and proposed to the then Legislature of the State of Iowa and the officers having control of this improvement that if they were put in charge and could receive the lands that the State was entitled to under the act of 1846, and could have the absolute and unlimited control of the river from the mouth to the city of Des Moines for sixty years, and authority to levy such tolls and charges for the transportation of traffic over this improvement as they should choose to charge, and also authority to charge rents for the water-powers that had been and were to be created along the river, they would take the land grant from the State of Iowa and they would complete this improvement. The Legislature of the State of Iowa authorized this contract to be made with this New York corporation, excluding liability on the part of the State beyond the grants and concessions made in the contract.

The New York corporation proceeded with this improvement, and it also immediately proceeded to Congress to secure an enlargement and construction of the land grant whereby it could be made to extend not only to the Raccoon Fork of the river, not only to the northern line of the State of Iowa, but along the entire route of the river many miles into Minnesota. They made an effort here through two or three sessions of Congress, and upon one of those bills and questions growing out of its consideration a distinguished member then from the State of New York was reported by a committee of Congress for expulsion, and I believe was not expelled for the reason that he resigned, because of some supposed relation to the effort of this company to secure an extension of this grant from the mouth of the Raccoon Fork 400 miles in a northwestern direction that was regarded as improper. That effort failed; and when the company failed to secure legislation at the hands of Congress extending the grant, they abandoned the improvement in 1856 practically, and refused to expend any more money upon it.

When the State of Iowa made a settlement with them it was disclosed by the reports that they had expended in actual work upon the improvement $185,000 up to the end of the year 1856, and that they had actually received and had patented to them 53,000 acres of land, worth from $8 to $10 per acre, or $530,000, at the time the money was expended or the improvement abandoned.

The State of Iowa before making this contract with the Des Moines River and Navigation Company had already sold to settlers and to bona fide purchasers for cash 53,000 acres of the conditionally certified lands north of the Raccoon Fork; so that when the decision of the Supreme Court in 1859 appeared it was at once supposed that that was the end of the Des Moines Navigation Company. It was supposed that the railroads would carry the grant, and that the land not carried by the railroads would go to actual settlers.

When the State of Iowa made the contract in 1853 with this improvement company the conditional certifications that were made by the General Land Office and by the Secretary of the Interior of course were turned over to the company as assets.

As the Senator from New York says, they claimed this grant to extend beyond the Raccoon Fork and there was a large interest. I will not undertake to state now who the corporators were, but there was a large interest then in the State of Iowa and in the State of New York to obtain such a construction of the laws as would secure this enormous grant to a company that expended in construction upon the improvement but $185,000 in money and left the river worse at the end than it was at the beginning when they undertook it, the State of Iowa having expended already nearly $400,000 upon it, and in 1856 they abandoned this improvement.

This land grant extended from the city of Keokuk, or in the neighborhood of that city, in Iowa, being the southeastern corner of the State, in a northwesterly direction diagonally across the State of Iowa.

In 1856 the Congress of the United States granted to the State of Iowa four grants for railroad purposes extending across the State of Iowa in an easterly and westerly direction. It so happened that two of these land-grant railways crossed the Des Moines River above the Raccoon Fork and within the point claimed by the Des Moines Navigation Company. So it became then a question of importance to the railway companies whether the grant of 1856, comprising a belt 10 miles in width and 10 miles in length along their lines, should go to the railroad companies or whether it had already been granted to the State of Iowa under the act of 1846, and inured to the benefit of the Des Moines River and Navigation Company under their contract with the State; and the contest went on between these companies in the courts for some years.

I wish to show the Senate how these settlers in the mean time were ground to powder beneath the upper and nether millstone of this navigation company claim and the claim of these two other incipient corporations who were seeking to build railways across the State of Iowa from east to west and seeking all possible under their grants.

In 1859 the question came before the Supreme Court of the United States as to whether the grant made to the navigation company extended above the Raccoon Fork, and the Supreme Court of the United States, I believe Judge Catron delivering the opinion, decided that there ought not to have been a question with reference to the true construction of the grant, that it only extended to the mouth of the Raccoon Fork, and that by no ingenuity of construction could it go beyond that. This was in 1859.

The representatives from the State of Iowa came here in 1861 and asked of Congress that a joint resolution should be passed, protecting whom? Protecting the bona fide purchasers from the State of Iowa, that is those who purchased from the State prior to January, 1854, or December, 1853, not the navigation company; and the navigation company could have made no reasonable pretense of being a bona fide purchaser, as I shall show presently in this argument. I have before me that joint resolution. It provided—

That all the title which the United States still retain in the tracts of land along the Des Moines River, and above the mouth of the Raccoon Fork thereof, in the State of Iowa, which have been certified to said State improperly—which have been certified to said State improperly by the Department of the Interior as part of the grant by act of Congress approved August 8, 1846, and which is now held by bona fide purchasers under the State of Iowa, be, and the same is hereby, relinquished to the State of Iowa.

That was the decision of the Supreme Court—

That joint resolution was intended to cover, and did cover, only the lands which had been sold in good faith by the State of Iowa to the people who went upon them and settled there. I have not time, of course, to go into the numerous and multifarious documents upon this question, but I have examined them with care. Governor Kirkwood, who is personally well known to many of the gentlemen in this body, having served in it with fidelity and ability, was then the governor of our State. The Commissioner of the General Land Office called upon him as governor.

I may say at this point, because I wish Senators to bear it in mind, the United States have never dealt with this navigation company. The Government of the United States have had no relations with the navigation company. Our entire treatment of this case has been with the State of Iowa.

Governor Kirkwood was called upon to certify the number of purchasers under the resolution of 1861. He certified to 53,000 acres, and no more, as being comprised within the grant of 1861; so that the Senator from New York is greatly in error when he suggests that this navigation company, its successors or assigns, his constituents, have any benefits through the joint resolution of 1861. They were as firmly and as absolutely excluded from the resolution as language could exclude them. If it had been proposed here or anywhere to confirm the title of this corporation, which had proved faithless to its contracts with the State of Iowa, there could not have been a man found in the State of Iowa who would have advocated the joint resolution of 1861.

Mr. DAWES. What does the Senator mean by conditional certifications?

Mr. ALLISON. I mean by conditional certifications that Mr. Secretary McClelland in his letter giving the certifications stated that he would leave the question to the courts as to whether the grant extended beyond the Raccoon Fork, and by this gave notice to everybody that there was doubt about it.

That is the history of this case down to 1861. However, I should state that in 1858, after a great deal of controversy between the Legislature of Iowa and the corporation called the Des Moines Navigation Company, there was a final settlement and adjustment with that corporation, and the State of Iowa made a quit-claim deed to the corporation of all the lands that it owned or claimed under this conditional certification of the Secretary of the Interior; and it was also provided that if the Supeme Court—because this settlement was made in 1858, before the decision of the Supreme Court had been reached with reference to the extent of the grant—if the Supreme Court should decide that the grant extended to the northern boundary of the State the navigation company was to have none of it beyond the amount already certified conditionally as I have stated, but it was to go to a railroad company which at that time had partially built a line of railway along the Des Moines Valley toward the city of Des Moines.

The Senator from New York says that the people of whom he speaks, those claiming the grant under this action of Iowa, were benefited by the legislation had in 1862. I have the act of 1862 before me, and I wish to show to the Senate that instead of its being a benefit the Congress of the United States left the navigation company where it belonged, to treat with and to deal with the State of Iowa, because the United States had no relation to it. The act of 1862 provided—

That the grant of lands to the then Territory of Iowa for the improvement of the Des Moines River, made by the act of August 8, 1846, is hereby extended so as to include the alternate sections (designated by odd numbers) lying within 5 miles of said river, between the Raccoon Fork and the northern boundary of said State; such lands are to be held and applied in accordance with the provisions of the original grant, except that the consent of Congress is hereby given to the application of a portion thereof to aid in the construction of the Keokuk, Fort Des Moines and Minnesota Railroad, in accordance with the provisions of the act of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, approved March 22, 1858.

That being the act under which this settlement was made with the Des Moines Navigation Company. I wish to call the attention of Senators to these further significant provisions in this act of 1862.

And if any of said lands shall have been sold or otherwise disposed of by the United States before the passage of this act, excepting those released by the United States to the grantees of the State of Iowa under the joint resolution of March 2, 1861—

I should like to ask the Senator from New York if his constituents got title under the act of March 2, 1861, what possible benefit could the act of 1862 be to them, because if the act of 1861 was to operate upon them it was absolute and conclusive upon everybody thereafter, as respects all the lands claimed by the navigation company—the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to set apart an equal amount of lands within said State to be certified in lieu thereof.

Then comes the proviso which grants to the State of Iowa in trust indemnity for any loss it or its grantees sustained by the decision of the Supreme Court limiting the grant to the Raccoon Fork:

Provided, That if the said State shall have sold and conveyed any portion of the lands lying within the limits of this grant the title of which has proved invalid, any lands which shall be certified to said State in lieu thereof by virtue of the provisions of this act shall inure to, and be held as a trust fund for the benefit of, the person or persons respectively whose titles shall have failed as aforesaid.

I repeat this statute in full:

That the grant of lands to the then Territory of Iowa, for the improvement of the Des Moines River, made by the act of August 8, 1846, is hereby extended so as to include the alternate sections (designated by odd numbers), lying within 5 miles of said river, between the Raccoon Fork and the northern boundary of said State; such lands are to be held and applied in accordance with the provisions of the original grant, except that the consent of Congress is hereby given to the application of a portion thereof to aid in the construction of the Keokuk, Fort Des Moines and Minnesota Railroad, in accordance with the provisions of the act of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, approved March 22, 1858. And if any of said lands shall have been sold or otherwise disposed of by the United States before the passage of this act, excepting those released by the United States to the grantees of the State of Iowa under joint resolution of March 2, 1861, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to set apart an equal amount of lands within said State to be certified in lieu thereof: Provided, That if the State shall have sold and conveyed any portion of the lands lying within the limits of this grant the title of which has proved invalid, any lands which shall be certified to said State in lieu thereof by virtue of the provisions of this act shall inure to, and be held as a trust fund for the benefit of, the person or persons respectively whose titles shall have failed as aforesaid.

Approved July 12, 1862. (United States Statutes at Large, 1862, page —.)

What was that? It was that if these lands which had been improperly certified to the State of Iowa still belonged to the State and the State was under an existing equitable obligation to treat with these people, then the lands should be given to the State and held as a trust fund for the purpose of making that settlement and adjustment. The Des Moines Navigation Company so understood it, because, following the act of 1862, the Legislature of the State of Iowa in 1864 dealt with the questions and trusts imposed by the act of 1862. The Legislature of Iowa, having familiar knowledge of the conduct of the corporation and knowing how much money it had put into this improvement and what it had received, absolutely refused to set apart one single acre or one single dollar of the proceeds of the land to the corporation as indemnity under this trust created by this act of 1862 for its benefit, if any equitable obligation existed.

I say to the Senator from New York that the Government of the United States, so far as this corporation and its grantees are concerned and so far as the State of Iowa is concerned, has amply and fully complied with every obligation, because the United States granted lands here to be held in trust to secure them for any losses that they might sustain, to be judged by the State of Iowa, as the trustee of the United States; and the State of Iowa, as such trustee, familiar with all the circumstances of the case, not only refused to grant them the indemnity granted here as a trust but ceded the land granted to the Keokuk and Des Moines Railroad Company, as the contract of 1858 with the navigation company provided it might do.

I think I have made it clear that the acts of 1861 and 1862 which the Senator from New York quoted as confirmatory of the title of which he speaks are in so many words an exclusion of the idea that the navigation company, or its assigns, have any status with reference to these lands.

Now, what happened following the decision of the Legislature of Iowa in the disposal of the lands included in the act of 1862? When the Des Moines Navigation Company found that they could get none of these lands from the State of Iowa (because the Government was dealing with the State of Iowa, not with the company), they proceeded to make up a case in the courts of the United States for the purpose of seeing whether they could not secure some decision that would save them with reference to these lands. They went to the courts, not of Iowa, but to the circuit court of the southern district of New York, first beginning a case which was tried before Judge Shipman, the case of Burr vs. The Navigation Company, both parties being alike in interest; and both parties having the same interest and the same title substantially, they made up a suit. The first case was Burr vs. The Navigation Company, which was tried before Judge Shipman, and Judge Shipman charged the jury that upon these statutes the navigation company had no case. They were not satisfied with that and they made up another case known as the Walcott case.

Mr. GEORGE. Who were the parties in these cases?

Mr. ALLISON. The Des Moines Navigation Company.

Mr. GEORGE. Who was the other party?

Mr. ALLISON. The nominal party was Burr in the first case, and the other was Walcott, being the treasurer, I believe, of the navigation company and being an owner of the land by virtue of having it segregated and set apart to him as a stockholder in the company.

Mr. GEORGE. It was a suit by the company against itself?

Mr. ALLISON. It was a suit by the company against itself. The decision of 1859 having decided that the grant did not extend above the Raccoon Fork, in 1863 the Secretary of the Interior certified a portion of these lands to the railroad companies under the grant of 1856, so that Mr. Walcott came in and sued the Des Moines Navigation Company for the consideration money on the ground that because the Secretary of the Interior had certified these lands to the railway company his title had failed, the tract which he had nominally purchased of the navigation company being within the grant to one of the railroads. So the direct question involved was whether the railway company owned these lands by virtue of the certification of the Secretary of the Interior and the act of 1856.

Mr. GEORGE. But neither the railway company nor the State of Iowa were parties?

Mr. ALLISON. The State of Iowa was not a party. When the case finally got into the Supreme Court I believe the railway company intervened by a sort of argument with reference to it, claiming to have some interest; but it came at a late day, and after the record was fully made up, knowing, as I believe, nothing of the case until it appeared in the Supreme Court.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a curious thing in the Walcott case. I have examined the record on file in the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court, and that record was made up practically by the same attorneys, as I have stated, and in the same interest. They set up title, as the Senator from New York sets up title, under the grant of 1862, and in reciting that grant they left out the proviso entirely, so that when the record came to the Supreme Court, and when it appeared before Judge Nelson, who decided the case on the circuit in New York, it appeared to Judge Nelson that this act was cited in the record without the proviso, which declared that if the title to any of these lands had proved invalid then they, the navigation company, should have indemnity, and that these lands were set apart as a trust fund. That question was not before the court. It was neither before Judge Nelson nor before the Supreme Court, and Walcott in his pleadings stated that he was a bona fide purchaser and the navigation company admitted that he was a bona fide purchaser and that his title was good under the joint resolution of 1861. So that this question of bona fide purchaser, the turning point in the case, was admitted in the pleadings and formed the basis of the decision.

Mr. GEORGE. Did the case made pretend to set out the statute under which the parties claimed?

Mr. ALLISON. They set out a portion of it.

Mr. GEORGE. Did they pretend to set out all?

Mr. ALLISON. They set forth the act of 1862, without intimating or indicating to the court that they had only partially set it out.

Mr. GRAY. They were public statutes, were they not?

Mr. ALLISON. The United States statutes usually are; but I am speaking of the record. I suppose that when a lawyer pleads a statute as the foundation of his case the court is very likely to take that statement when both sides agree to it.

Mr. GEORGE. In the case made in the record were the statutes set out in totidem verbis, omitting that proviso?

Mr. ALLISON. They were, omitting the proviso. In other words, a part of the statute was set out and not all of it.

I wish to call the attention of the Senator from New York and of the Senate to what that decision is. That decision says nothing about this navigation company. It gives no title to the navigation company. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], who is giving me attention, will see with reference to these public-land statutes that the statute of 1856 recited that the railroad grant did not carry with it any lands heretofore reserved by the United States. The court simply decided in that case that the statute of 1856 provided that that grant should not touch reserved lands, and these lands were at the time of the passage of that act partially reserved or wholly reserved, at least sufficiently reserved for the purposes of the law from sale because of the grant of 1846, and they were not open at that particular moment of time to pre-emption and settlement; so that they were not included in the grant to the railroad company, and that the railroad company did not have title to the land, and because thereof Walcott's title had not failed; and that was the only question decided in the case. So the case of Walcott, although made up between the same parties, simply decided that the railroad company was not entitled to these lands.

That was the first case, and there have been numerous cases. I will not undertake to state them or even to enumerate them, but there were several cases which were decided afterward hanging wholly upon the Walcott case. There was the case of Crilly. Some Senators may have some knowledge of Mr. Crilly. The case of Crilly went to the court, and Crilly feels aggrieved because of the decision.

What was the decision in Crilly's case? It was that although Mr. Crilly was a pre-emptor and went upon the land in 1855, yet because of this reservation under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior, and because of this withdrawal from sale at that time, Mr. Crilly could not be a lawful pre-emptor under the pre-emption law, and they set aside his patent upon the bare, naked technicality that if the lands had not been reserved from sale by the authority of the Interior Department Crilly would have carried his pre-emption by all proper and just inference with reference to that decision. That was the decision in the Crilly case.

Mr. GEORGE. They only decided that he was not entitled to the land?

Mr. ALLISON. They only decided the single question that he was not entitled to hold that land, because he was not a pre-emptor, the land having been exempt from sale at that time. So, running along through the cases, the next one of importance is the case of Baker vs. Williams, with which I have no doubt the Senator from New York is familiar. That was an important case. It was a railroad case; a case wherein the Cedar Rapids and Missouri River Railroad Company came in conflict with the Des Moines River and Navigation Company; and that case decided, as the case of Walcott vs. the Navigation Company, simply that these lands were reserved from sale at the time the grant was made in 1856, and therefore the railroad company took no title.

Those are the decisions. I sent a moment ago to the Clerk's office to have brought in, and I have before me here, the original act of 1862 as it passed the Senate, showing, if any Senator will look at it, that it was the intention of the Public Lands Committee at that time in reporting and passing the bill to make it absolutely clear and certain that that act should not apply to the lands which are now claimed by the Des Moines River and Navigation Company.

So I affirm that wherever these cases have appeared in the courts they have appeared only as involving practically two questions, first, a contest between the navigation company and the railroad company where the rights of the settlers, or of the pre-emptors if you please, or the homestead settlers, were kept out of view, were not before the court, and their interests were not decided except in the cases I have named, where they excluded them on the ground that they had no authority under the laws of the United States to make pre-emption at the time they settled upon the land because at the time the lands were reserved from sale.

Now, I come to the statute of 1871, which was the next statute upon this question. I have shown that the act of 1862 was an act intended to grant to the State of Iowa, in order that the State might settle with the navigation company if they had any equities, a right to hold this land in trust until that settlement was made, and to grant the residue to the Keokuk and Fort Des Moines Railroad Company, it being understood clearly, as indicated from the statute of 1862, that the railroad company was the beneficiary of the grant, as was originally provided in the act of settlement of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa in 1858.

I have omitted to state that the Secretary of the Interior in 1863 opened up to settlement the lands which the Supreme Court decided did not belong to the navigation company, and which were not included within the railroad grant, because the railroad did not absorb all the lands that the navigation company claimed. There was an interval between the railway grants and the navigation company grants. If the navigation company grant failed there were about 80,000 acres or less in the Des Moines Valley that would not go to the railroad companies, because the lands were not within the granted limits. Therefore the Secretary of the Interior, then Mr. Caleb B. Smith, I believe, opened up these intervening lands to settlement, and these people went upon the lands.

In 1867 when the Supreme Court of the United States decided that the railroad companies took nothing by these grants because of the fact of the reservation, Mr. O. H. Browning, then Secretary of the Interior, again opened up the whole of these lands to settlement. Senators who were familiar with Secretary Browning know that he was a lawyer of eminence, and that he administered the affairs of the Interior Department with care as respects the public domain. He opened up these lands to settlement; so that twice under the decisions of the Supreme Court the lands were opened up to settlement by the executive authority of the Interior Department. Of course they were valuable lands, and homesteaders and pre-emptors entered upon the lands. In 1872 the case of Baker vs. Williams was decided.

However, I want to say one word about the act of 1871. The act of 1871 was nothing more than a confirmatory act of the settlement made between the State of Iowa and the Government of the United States with respect to all these grants. The United States said they would have nothing to do with the Des Moines River grant except to confirm what the State of Iowa had done respecting it, namely, not to allow the navigation company to take an acre of it, and they gave it as they had a right to do, being the trustee, to the railroad company as the settlement provided.

The Senator from New York has read from a report made under the act of 1873. I have the act of 1873 before me; I want to call attention to it that it may be seen what it was proposed by Congress to do under that act. The act of 1873 provided:

> That the President of the United States shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint three commissioners, who shall ascertain the number of acres, and by appraisement or otherwise the value thereof exclusive of improvements, of all such lands lying north of Raccoon Fork of the Des Moines River, in the State of Iowa, as may now be held by the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, or persons claiming title under it adversely to persons holding said lands, either by entry or under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, and on what terms the adverse holders thereof will relinquish the same to the United States.

That law was intended to allow, as this Government has allowed from its foundation, the honest settler to remain upon the land, and if an adverse title springs up to give indemnity to the non-resident holder. That was the case in Georgia; it was the case in Mississippi many years ago, I do not remember the time, when the Government of the United States appropriated more than $100,000 to buy out adverse titles which the Supreme Court had decided to be against the settlers upon those lands. I believe that case was decided in 1820; it is alluded to in the report of the chairman of the committee.

It has always been the policy of the Government, where bodies of land come in conflict with regard to conflicting grants, that the settler, the man who tills the soil, shall have the benefit of holding possession as against the man who holds the adverse title if the United States feel bound in honor to make reclamation or settlement; that the indemnity shall go to purchase the adverse title.

I have gone over these statutes and every one of them. My colleague and myself were in Congress during most of this period. I was in Congress when many of these acts were passed, and they were all passed in the interest of the settlers as was supposed at the time, of the people who hold this land, and they seem to have failed in their purpose most signally according to the argument of the Senator from New York.

By the act of 1873 it was intended that the Government of the United States should find out the value of these lands exclusive of improvements, because it was not pretended that the Des Moines Navigation Company had placed any improvements on the lands, and that the Government of the United States should settle with the Des Moines Navigation Company or its assigns for whatever interest they held adverse to the occupants of the land. The answer at once was made by those who represented this company or who were its assignees, holders of these lands, that they had no settlement, and that they did not desire the Government to indemnify them, and therefore these people went on and valued these lands, and Congress afterward undertook to appropriate money to the occupants of the land, but the bill failed to become a law, and afterward the bill now before the Senate was devised as a remedy for these disputes. These lands may be claimed by large classes of people in New York, but the great owners, who held thousands of acres of them, refused to make an adjustment at the time in reference to these matters as I understand. When the commission went out they made an appraisal of the value of the lands as nearly as they could and gave the names of the settlers, and when that report came back to Congress an effort was made in the other House and here to secure an appropriation for that purpose, which failed as I have stated.

That is the history as briefly as I can state it of this whole transaction. Now, then, who is this Des Moines Navigation Company? It is a corporation that without consideration to the State of Iowa, except as I have stated, and which if this bill shall pass will have received from the State, and not from the Government of the United States, nearly 200,000 acres of land that is worth to-day probably $4,000,000.

Mr. GEORGE. As much as that?

Mr. ALLISON. Absolutely. This navigation company, after these decisions and after its settlement with the State of Iowa, and after it abandoned this work after spending $185,000 in actual construction upon it, so far as it could dissolved the corporation and divided up the lands among the individual holders of the stock and of the bonds of the company, and they were all or nearly all the same persons, in proportion to the amount of lands that each stockholder or bondholder was entitled to hold; so that to-day the men who are opposing this bill, or most of them, are the original stockholders of the Des Moines Navigation Company and their successors, and in some cases their grantees, but in the main they are the men who inaugurated in 1853 the project of securing lands on the Des Moines River not only to the northern boundary of the State of Iowa but nearly 200 miles into the State of Minnesota, and they are the same men who, after they failed to secure the extension of the grant by construction or legislation, abandoned this work upon which the State of Iowa had spent nearly $400,000, and upon which they had spent in actual construction only $185,000.

Mr. GEORGE. For which they had received 53,000 acres of land.

Mr. ALLISON. For which they have received 53,000 acres of land, and this bill gives them the residue.

I am not surprised that the Senator from New York should find fault with the phraseology of this bill, inasmuch as the proviso says that the people holding this adverse title, except where they come in conflict with the homestead settlers and pre-emptors, shall take their title. Although I have no doubt the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands and all his associates on that committee believe that this navigation company is not entitled to an acre of this land, yet this bill is so framed that all the lands that are not occupied by homestead and pre-emption settlers will be by this bill made perfect and complete in this Des Moines Navigation Company, its assignees and grantees.

Mr. GEORGE. How much will that be?

Mr. ALLISON. Two hundred and thirteen thousand acres were originally turned over to this company, according to the statement found in the report. To be deducted from that are whatever number of acres are actually occupied by homestead or pre-emption settlers.

Mr. CHACE. How much is that?

Mr. ALLISON. That is probably sixty or seventy thousand acres. I do not know the exact amount.

Mr. CHACE. That is 60,000 out of 213,000?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. CHACE. That would leave 153,000.

Mr. ALLISON. So that this navigation company, its successors and assigns and its grantees, if this bill shall pass, will gather from the State of Iowa, I repeat, nearly 200,000 acres of land by means of this bill, which to-day is worth, not an acre of it, less than $20 an acre; some of it is worth $200 an acre.

Mr. BROWN. Are these lands above or below Raccoon Fork?

Mr. ALLISON. All above the Raccoon Fork.

Mr. EUSTIS. Why are not the lands forfeited?

Mr. ALLISON. They ought to have been forfeited. This navigation company got their indemnity, as I have shown, by the act of 1862, and Congress turned them over to the State of Iowa to settle with the State of Iowa for their indemnity; but the State of Iowa having knowledge of all the facts and believing then as its people believe now that they have been paid many times for the money they invested in the State, refused to hold that land in trust for them and gave it to another company to build a line of railway, and then came the trial of the Walcott case and the decisions which have followed from that time to this.

Mr. EVARTS. The Senator does not say that the grantees of the navigation company or the navigation company have ever received any land except what was in place according to the original grant made in 1846 as construed and enforced afterward; in other words, no indemnity lands have ever come to the company.

Mr. ALLISON. I so stated distinctly. I stated distinctly that no indemnity lands went to the company. Why? Because the Congress of the United States turned the indemnity land over to the State of Iowa to deal with it as equity required.

Provided, That if the State shall have sold and conveyed any portion of the lands lying within the limits of this grant, the title of which has proved invalid—

What lands were those? They were the lands that the Supreme Court of the United States, in 1859, had said by no pretense could go to the Des Moines Navigation Company. The act of 1862 says further:

Any lands which shall be certified to said State in lieu thereof by virtue of the provisions of this act shall inure to and be held as a trust fund—for the benefit of the person or persons, respectively, whose titles shall have failed as aforesaid.

Mr. GEORGE. I want to know if the Senator from Iowa desires to be understood as saying that the company got 53,000 acres of land below the Raccoon Fork as I understand, worth, as he says, $530,000 for an expenditure of $185,000, and that if this bill passes they will get 200,000 acres of land more?

Mr. ALLISON. I did not mean to say that. I meant to state, as I understand the facts to be, that the Des Moines Navigation Company received 53,000 acres below the Raccoon Fork.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand, but——

Mr. ALLISON. Which land at the time, as shown in the records and statements, was worth from $8 to $10 an acre, or $530,000.

Mr. EVARTS. In 1854?

Mr. ALLISON. They received this land in 1856. It was worth $10 an acre then. The Senator from New York will appreciate this when I tell him that there is scarcely a mile of this land from 50 or 60 miles below the city of Des Moines to Fort Dodge, the northern terminus of this district, that is not underlaid with coal, which is becoming every year more and more valuable, and in the neighborhood of Fort Dodge there are disputed lands not only underlaid with coal, but some of these lands have beds of gypsum upon them many feet in depth, of incalculable value in the future; these gypsum beds covering many miles of territory. So this contest between the navigation company and these railroad companies was a contest between these corporations for most valuable land.

Now, I repeat, if necessary, to the Senator from Mississippi that if this bill shall pass it quiets title to every acre of the lands above the Raccoon Fork that is not actually held and occupied and claimed to be owned by a pre-emption or homestead settler.

Mr. GEORGE. How much is that land?

Mr. ALLISON. It is variously estimated at from sixty-five to eighty thousand acres. So there is over 100,000 acres, the title to which, as I understand, will be settled in favor of the navigation company, or the grantees of that company, some of whom also occupy the land purchased from the company.

Mr. CALL. The navigation company, I understand, that is entitled to nothing will under this bill get a large quantity of additional land.

Mr. ALLISON. It is entitled to nothing as I believe, I mean in equity, but the Senator from New York insists that it is entitled to the whole of the land, and that these settlers, variously estimated at from 500 to 800, shall without further process be turned out of doors for the benefit of these parties who claim to hold these lands by virtue of assignment from the navigation company.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If my colleague will allow me, I will state that the number of settlers there is from ten to twelve hundred.

Mr. ALLISON. I was not aware there were quite so many. I had forgotten the number.

Mr. CALL. Feeling that the settler ought to be protected, why would it not be better to let the veto stand and pass a bill forfeiting the entire grant and protecting the settler?

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senate desires to do that it can be done in this bill by striking out the proviso which the Senator from New York seemed to think was a little incongruous, and I am entirely willing that the proviso should be stricken out.

Mr. HOAR and others. You can not do that.

Mr. ALLISON. Perhaps not. However I will say to the Senator from Florida that in my judgment, as I believe the Committee on Public Lands intended that this bill should be a bill of peace, this is satisfactory to these people in the State of Iowa. They have lived on these lands from ten to thirty years most of them, their children have grown up there, they have cultivated their farms, built their houses and their barns, and they have been in trepidation and fear for nearly twenty years. They are people who have neither the money nor the opportunity to employ lawyers to try their cases. They wanted this one suit that would enable them to go into the courts of the United States and settle once for all whether they were to be driven from their homes ruthlessly, or whether this Government that to-day has in its Treasury more than $70,000 of their money paid in through pre-emption purchases and homestead fees shall see to it that they are protected and cared for in their interests in this Congress, so far as it is in the power of Congress to protect them.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to ask the Senator one question. Why is not the title of pre-emption settlers for twenty years good against everybody else in the world under the statute of limitations?

Mr. ALLISON. That is the reason why the first section is inserted in this bill declaring that the United States shall institute the necessary proceedings to give them the title which they have promised and many of them already obtained.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the statute of limitations as to land in your State?

Mr. ALLISON. Ten years. I should add in answer to the Senator from Mississippi that technically these lands were at the time of settlement reserved from sale, and the courts have held that they could not enter upon these lands because they were reserved, and the first section of the bill cures that defect and gives them a status which they do not now have.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PLUMB. Can we not have a vote to-day?

Mr. HARRIS. I am told that probably there is to be no further debate on the pending proposition; and if so I withdraw the motion I made in order that we may come to a vote.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope we shall have a vote on the bill to-night. Let us finish it. I want to take up an appropriation bill to-morrow.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am quite content to withhold any remarks and let the vote be taken now.

Mr. EVARTS. If Senators prefer that this matter should be concluded to-night, it will concur with my convenience. I propose to reply——

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think we ought to go on to-night if the Senator from New York desires to speak. It is very late now, and I think it is due to the Senator from New York that he should have full opportunity to be heard.

Mr. PLATT. Can we not have an agreement that a vote be taken at a certain time to-morrow.

Mr. EVARTS. I will accede to the wishes of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] submit a motion?

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from New York, having the floor, will yield to me, I will renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You might as well move to adjourn at once.

Mr. EVARTS. My impression is that the Senate will not wish to sit through the matter to-night. So far as I am concerned it makes very little difference. I will go on to-morow if the desire of the Senate is that they should adjourn now.

Mr. GEORGE. What is your desire? I want to conform my action to your desire.

Mr. EVARTS. I think I would make a shorter speech to-morrow than I should to-night.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 29, at 12 o'clock m.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the morning hour for the call of committees be dispensed with, and pending that I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

REPORT OF INTERNATIONAL POLAR EXPEDITION.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw that motion in order that I may submit a report from a committee of conference in regard to the concurrent resolution to print the report of the International Polar Expedition to Lady Franklin Bay.

The SPEAKER. Has the House disagreed to the Senate amendments?

Mr. BARKSDALE. It is a report recommending disagreement to the amendments and agreement to the request for a conference.

The SPEAKER. That requires unanimous consent. The Clerk will read the report, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred House concurrent resolution that 4,500 copies, with the necessary illustrations, be printed of the report of the International Polar Expedition to Lady Franklin Bay, by First Lieut. A. W. Greely, with the Senate amendments, respectfully report a disagreement with the Senate amendments and recommend agreement with the request for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate agree to the foregoing resolution of the House of Representatives with the following amendments:

In line 9, strike out the words "and three thousand two hundred and fifty" and insert "two thousand five hundred."

In line 10, after "Representatives," insert "and 750 copies for distribution by the Signal Service Bureau."

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Senate amendments will be disagreed to and the request for a conference agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. BARKSDALE, Mr. REID of North Carolina, and Mr. FARQUHAR as conferees on the part of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the pending motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

The motion was agreed to—more than two-thirds having voted in the affirmative.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw that motion for a moment to permit me to call up for present consideration Senate bill 1942 and to make a brief explanation of it.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to be exactly fair, and if I withdraw the motion for one gentleman I shall have to do the same for another.

Mr. DUNN. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. REAGAN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill. The Clerk will report the pending paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, there was an agreement that when we reached the point of the bill where we now are general debate should be allowed upon the land question. I would prefer to have that debate at this time.

Mr. BLANCHARD. When the committee rose on Saturday I had been recognized to offer an amendment. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to have the debate before the amendment is offered or afterward?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman's amendment relates to the subject of receivers and registers of the land offices, and can come in after the general debate just as well as now.

The CHAIRMAN. There was unanimous consent, the Chair understands, that when the time for general debate arrived the committee should go back to the paragraph proposed to be amended by the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW].

Mr. MORROW and other members. That was the understanding.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then I understand that I am to be recognized to offer my amendment at the proper time.

Mr. RANDALL. That is understood. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the committee agree to some limit for this debate.

Mr. DUNHAM. I think fifteen minutes would be sufficient.

Mr. RYAN. The gentleman from Illinois may suggest fifteen minutes for himself, but there are other gentlemen on this side of the House who have been promised the opportunity to speak on this subject.

Mr. RANDALL. I mean to execute every promise.

A MEMBER. Let it be an hour and a half.

Mr. DUNHAM. I would suggest the propriety of this bill being passed before the 30th of June, and for that reason we had better not take any unnecessary time discussing it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think an hour and a half ought to be sufficient.

Mr. PETERS. I want a half hour.

Mr. RYAN. I do not think that less than two hours will do.

Mr. McCOMAS. Make it two and a half.

Mr. NELSON. I object to so short a time.

Mr. COBB. This is a very important question and ought to be fully discussed.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not suppose the whole scope of our public land system is to be gone over in this discussion. The debate was intended, as I understand, for a particular part of this bill, and if we can not agree upon some time I shall have to move that the committee rise to limit debate.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Make it two hours and a half, and I think that will be satisfactory all around.

Mr. PAYSON. We ought to have at least three hours.

Mr. PETERS. I think all the argument will be confined to a motion to strike out and to insert. I know that is the case so far as I am concerned.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. REAGAN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of general appropriation bills, and pending that I move all debate upon the land question, as embraced in this bill, be closed in two hours.

Mr. PAYSON. I move to amend by making it three hours.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question upon the motion and amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. MORROW. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry, whether or not this motion affects the preceding agreement as to the thirty minutes to which I am entitled on another part of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. RANDALL. It does not. This motion applies only to the public land question.

The question was taken on the amendment submitted by Mr. PAYSON; and on a division there were—ayes 49, noes 75.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The motion to limit debate to two hours was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed to limit debate; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. REAGAN in the chair).

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate on the land clause of the bill is limited to two hours.

Mr. RANDALL. Of course the Chair will see that the time is equally divided between the two sides.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest, inasmuch as the Chair can not know what side gentlemen are going to espouse in the debate, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania control the time for one hour and some gentleman on the other side control it on that side.

Mr. RANDALL. That would be satisfactory to me, and I would suggest that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] control the hour on that side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. There has been a criticism made to me since the suggestion was made, that perhaps some member of the Committee on Appropriations should control the time on that side. I would suggest, therefore, that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN], who is the older member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations, or the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] control the hour.

Mr. LAIRD. That will be entirely satisfactory to me if I can get a part of the time. I do not care who controls it.

Mr. RYAN. I will take charge of the time and will divide it as best I can among gentlemen.

Mr. COBB. Who will control the time on this side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. MORROW. I believe I am now entitled to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized on his amendment in relation to Chinese immigration.

Mr. LAIRD. How is this? I understood the general debate was to be on the land clause.

Mr. FELTON. There was a distinct agreement that when the committee reached this portion of the bill before the land clause was discussed we should return to this proposition in relation to the restriction of Chinese immigration and that my colleague [Mr. MORROW] was to be allowed thirty minutes.

Mr. MORROW. The section to which I propose to address my remarks is found on page 34 of the bill. I ask the Clerk to read my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 812 and 813 strike out "five thousand five hundred dollars" and insert "ten thousand dollars: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be prepared and furnished to collectors of customs at ports where the same may be required, suitable books of registration and books of preliminary and return certificates, in such form as shall enable the said collectors to conveniently set forth and certify accurately, distinctly, and fully all the particulars necessary to identify the Chinese persons to whom such certificates shall be issued."

Mr. RANDALL. I think the understanding was that we should begin now with the general debate touching the land question. I will cheerfully meet in a fair spirit the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] at a later period in regard to the other matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee agreed to pass over the clause relating to Chinese immigration with the understanding that the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] should be recognized afterward on his amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to going back.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the agreement to be that the clause from line 807 to 815 should be passed over, and that when the land clause was reached that clause should be returned to, so that the gentleman from California might submit his remarks.

Mr. RANDALL. There was no agreement so far as I remember except that the gentleman from California should be heard. I think thirty minutes was the time specified.

Mr. FELTON. Thirty minutes were to be given to my colleague, but there was no understanding that the debate should be limited to that period.

Mr. RANDALL. I want the debate on the land clause to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps the Chair may be in error, but he believes the agreement was that when the land clause was reached the gentleman from California should be allowed to address the committee on the other question.

Mr. RANDALL. But not preceding the debate on the land clause.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the impression of the Chair.

Mr. MORROW. I was recognized in the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] when this matter came up. I was then entitled to the floor, and gave way with a distinct understanding that when we reached this part of the bill I should be recognized.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us go to the RECORD. If that shows that the arrangement is as has been stated I will adhere to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause the RECORD to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

* * * * * * *

Mr. STORM. I reserve a point of order on that proposition as new legislation.

Mr. MORROW. When the Committee of the Whole was first proceeding to consider this bill the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] reserved certain time, a portion of which he has kindly agreed to surrender to me; and I will, if it be agreeable to the committee, occupy that time now.

Mr. LONG. Being entitled, under the agreement made when this bill was taken up, to certain time for general debate, I yield twenty minutes of that time to the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW].

Mr. RANDALL. Let us pass this item.

Mr. RYAN. Let us pass it, and wait until we come to the general debate.

Mr. MORROW. All I want is my twenty-five minutes—five in my own right and twenty yielded to me by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California consent to pass this item for the present?

Mr. MORROW. I understand the amendment is to be passed for the present, and discussion will take place when the general debate is reached.

Mr. RYAN. When we reach the clauses in relation to the public lands, which will be soon.

Mr. RANDALL. It will be observed the gentleman claimed twenty minutes in addition to his five minutes under the five-minute rule, and that was agreed to; but this is the general debate on the land clause.

The CHAIRMAN. It was understood that when the committee reached the land clause the gentleman from California was to have twenty-five minutes on his amendment relating to the restriction of Chinese immigration.

Mr. FELTON. The Chair is correct.

Mr. MORROW. The understanding was that when we reached that clause I was to be recognized.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I desire we shall come to some understanding as to the limit of debate on this paragraph.

Mr. COX. I desire to have five minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX] should have some time, of course. I suggest that the debate be limited to forty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Would that include the time of the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW]?

Mr. RANDALL. My proposition is that the forty minutes shall include everything.

Mr. MORROW. That would not be sufficient, as I am myself entitled to twenty-five minutes. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to agree to an hour.

Mr. RANDALL. Very well; I will agree to an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the time for debate on this paragraph be limited to one hour, including the time to which the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] is entitled. The Chair hears no objection. The Chair suggests that the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] shall control the time on the one side and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COX] shall control the time on the other.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the committee for a short time I will explain as briefly as possible the condition of affairs on the Pacific coast calling for the most effective restrictive legislation that can be devised by Congress for the purpose of excluding Chinese immigration from the country and the necessity for a larger appropriation than is provided for in this bill to carry such legislation into effect. In doing this I shall not weary the committee with any matters not strictly pertinent to the subject-matter under consideration. This bill proposes to appropriate the sum of $5,500 "to meet such expenses as may be necessary to be incurred in carrying out the provisions of the act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese, approved May 6, 1882, including the printing of certificates therein required."

This sum is wholly insufficient for the purpose intended. In 1884 an appropriation of $5,000 was made to meet the expenses of carrying out the provisions of the restriction act for the year 1885. The insufficiency of this appropriation compelled the Treasury Department to exercise such rigid economy in providing the machinery for executing the provisions of the act that the law has been evaded in a most shameful manner. The return certificates furnished to departing Chinamen have been printed so meanly and with such meager detail that instead of preventing further immigration of Chinese laborers as the law intended, the certificates have been used in aid of illegal immigration. I hold one of these certificates in my hand. An inspection of the document will show its useless character. The Chinese Government under the law is authorized to issue certificates to Chinese merchants coming to this country. Under this authority that government prepared and furnished to departing immigrants a certificate containing a description of the person to whom it was issued with the most elaborate detail. Compared with that document our own certificate designed for our protection is utterly worthless.

For the year 1886 no appropriation was made for the purpose of executing the law, and the result has been that the Chinese have been pouring into California at a rate far in excess of the average annual immigration prior to the passage of the restriction act.

In response to the numerous complaints that have been made to the Secretary of the Treasury concerning the inefficient method of executing the provisions of the present law, that officer has replied that there were no funds at his disposal for carrying the law into effective execution. Within the last month the United States district judge at San Francisco is reported as having declared that for the want of funds certain provisions of the law were practically nugatory. I refer to an article in the San Francisco Morning Call of June 13, 1886, concerning the attempt of two Chinamen to land in San Francisco contrary to law. The cases were brought before the United States district judge, who found that they were not entitled to come into the country, but what to do with them was the serious question. The report says:

Judge Hoffman admitted to the reporter that the situation is embarrassing. Said he:

"Although the law which provided for the remanding of these Chinese to the place from whence they came intimates that it shall be done at the expense of the United States, there is no fund appropriated for that purpose. Consequently the only way in which the marshal can obey the order of the court, where a company refuses to receive a remanded Chinaman without the payment of his fare, is for that official to buy the ticket at his own cost and then take chances of being reimbursed by the Government. That is a matter that rests solely with the marshal, though, and I can not compel him to take such a chance. Neither can I order the two Chinamen to be confined in the county jail indefinitely. My idea is, however, that the steamer which brought them here can be compelled to take them away at its own expense, as in law the men can not be regarded as having landed from that vessel. Consequently I will again remand them to China, and when the City of Peking next arrives in port I shall instruct the marshal to place the two men on board of her."

This condition of affairs certainly ought not to continue. The Government should be provided with the means to execute its own laws in a matter of this grave importance. This weakness, hesitation, and uncertainty, if continued, will drive the people of the Pacific coast to desperation, and the consequences may be deplorable.

The Secretary of the Treasury has asked for an appropriation of $10,000 for this particular service, and I know that the sum is little enough under any circumstances. There is a bill amending the restriction act on the House Calendar, and another which has passed the Senate and has been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The people of the Pacific coast have been anxiously hoping that one of these bills should become a law. Whether they are to be disappointed or not I can not say, but I can say that there is no more important matter before Congress than the effective restriction or prohibition of Chinese immigration. The effort so far has been a failure, and it remains for you to say whether you will allow conditions to grow worse before you take active measures to settle this great question.

Permit me to call your attention to a few plain facts, from which you can draw your own conclusions.

DEFECTS OF THE PRESENT LAW.

The defects in the present law relate mainly to the privilege accorded to certain classes of Chinamen by the treaty to go and come at pleasure. This privilege is preserved by the statute to the classes named in the treaty, but with safeguards so insufficient that Chinese laborers are continually obtaining admission into the country under the pretense of belonging to one or the other of the privileged classes.

The provision of the treaty referred to is as follows:

ARTICLE II.

Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants, or from curiosity, together with their body and household servants, and Chinese laborers who are now in the United States shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation.

RETURN-CERTIFICATES NOT REQUIRED OF CHINAMEN WHO WERE HERE ON THE 17TH DAY OF NOVEMBER, 1880, AND DEPARTED PRIOR TO MAY 6, 1882.

It will be observed that Chinamen in the United States at the date of the treaty, to wit, on the 17th day of November, 1880, are allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord. This privilege has been greatly abused in affording an opportunity to Chinese laborers to come into the country who have never been here before, and the opportunity to evade the law has occurred in this way. No method was provided for the identification of those that were here at the date of the treaty, and it was not until May 6, 1882, that Congress passed an act providing for the return-certificate of identification for those departing from the country. In the mean time several thousands had gone away without such certificates, and upon their return they claimed the right to come into the United States on parol testimony showing that they were here on the 17th day of November, 1880, and had departed prior to the 6th day of May, 1882. The question was brought before the courts of the United States and the claim was sustained.

The result of this decision was that not only those came back who were here at the time named, but Chinamen who had never been in the country were instructed by their better-informed countrymen how to assert and support this claim. Maps of San Francisco and other places on the Pacific coast were furnished to new-comers on board ship, so that they might acquire a certain familiarity with the character and location of places, and thus be able to answer questions in a way to indicate a former residence in the country. There is no doubt that many succeeded in evading the law in this manner. As soon, however, as the officers of the Government began a critical examination of the persons making this claim the Chinamen devised a still better scheme in aid of their immigration. The return certificate provided by the present law, although intended to identify the person to whom it is issued, is really a much more useful document, since it may be used to identify any one of many thousands with equal certainty.

There is a remarkable similarity in the size, complexion, color of eyes and hair, and general appearance of all Chinamen coming to this country. It therefore happens that the present certificate of identification issued to a departing Chinaman will do equally as good service as a certificate of admission into the country for a thousand other Chinamen. And since an American return certificate is worth at least $100 in China, the patient, submissive, and frugal follower of Confucius takes one with him on his departure from this country and sells it to a countryman in China at the market price. He then returns, if he so desires, and is admitted on the claim of having resided here at the date of the treaty. Under the circumstances he comes back to us, as can be well understood, with a "smile that is child-like and bland." By the sale of his certificate he has paid the expense of his journey to the graves of his ancestors, or the greater part of it, and there are two Chinamen in this country where there was only one before.

The amendment I propose is intended to cure some of the defects of the return certificate, in giving authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to prescribe such forms as will secure a better identification of the persons to whom the certificates are issued. The amendment will also provide the necessary means for carrying into effect either the present law or any amendatory act that may be passed by the present Congress.

THE CLAIM OF BEING A MERCHANT.

The privilege accorded to merchants has also been abused by persons not belonging to that class. As negative proof was of course out of the question as to the occupation of immigrants many were able to pass without detection. At one time nearly all the vessels arriving at San Francisco from Hong-Kong came laden with Chinamen supplied with certificates from the Chinese custom-house at Canton showing that the holders of the certificates were merchants. These passports were very elaborate and carefully prepared documents, with the photograph of the alleged merchant securely attached. But two vessels a month, loaded to the guards with Chinese merchants, was too absurd a proceeding to continue long. The certificates were refused by the officers at San Francisco, and the Chinamen that were landed were compelled to produce other evidence of their right to come into the United States under the law.

THE TRANSIT PRIVILEGE.

Another way of avoiding the terms of the restriction act has been the claim of being in transit across the territory of the United States. I do not believe that the privilege of transit was intended to be granted to Chinese laborers either by the act of May 6, 1882, or the amendatory act of July 5, 1884, but under a decision of the Attorney-General of the United States and the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury the privilege has been conceded under such terms as to permit the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States without sufficient safeguards being provided against their remaining in the country.

That this plea has been a serviceable one is shown by the report of Special Agent Spaulding to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated November 2, 1885, and the records of the custom-house at San Francisco, from which it appears that the arrival of Chinese passengers at San Francisco, claiming to be in transit, from August 5, 1882, to December 31, 1885, was as follows:

From August 5, 1882, to December 31, 1882	76
During the year 1883	3,498
During the year 1884	3,792
During the year 1885	5,159
Total	12,525

What proportion of this large number of arrivals at San Francisco were in actual transit and how many took their departure from the United States are not known. It is certain, however, that the plea of being in transit has not been made in good faith in many cases, and the increase in numbers of those arriving at San Francisco, from 76 in the five months of 1882 to 5,159 in the year 1885, is significant, and shows that there must be some connection between this traffic and the continued increase of the Chinese population in the United States. It is but fair to say that the present Attorney-General holds that the transit privilege is not authorized by law, but he holds that the correction of the evil requires the action of Congress.

Other defects in the law might be pointed out, but enough has been shown to demonstrate the necessity for further effective legislation to restrict this immigration. The determination on the Pacific coast to have this question settled has never been so emphatic as it is now. There has never been such intense feeling upon this subject as there is at present among all classes throughout that entire region. And if you would know the cause you have only to examine the situation of affairs and consider what you would do under like circumstances.

The situation is far more serious in California to-day than at any other time in the history of the State, and calls for immediate and effective action.

The white adult male population of San Francisco does not much exceed 50,000. The number of votes cast at the last Presidential election was 47,535. Now, compare this with the Chinese population, estimated to be from 45,000 to 50,000, or as large a number as in all the seven colonies of Australasia, with their 3,000,000 of population. This Chinese population in San Francisco is nearly all male and over 21 years of age.

The special committee of the board of supervisors, recently appointed to investigate the Chinese quarter of that city could only find 1,385 females and 722 children in the city, classified as follows:

Women	57	Living as families.
Children	59
Women	761	Herded together with apparent indiscriminate parental relations, and no family classification, so far as could be ascertained.
Children	576
Prostitutes	567	Professional prostitutes and children living together.
Children	87

This statement discloses a condition of things that can not be discussed here. In a Chinese population of nearly if not quite 50,000 only fifty-seven families can be found. You must draw your own conclusions as to the condition of the Chinese population in San Francisco and its effect upon the white male population, which it equals if it does not exceed. In no other civilized community on the face of the globe has it reached such proportions and conditions. If Congress knew the whole truth of this Chinese question and its probable consequences upon American civilization the Burlingame treaty would not be in existence an hour.

The time allowed me will not permit the present discussion of other important facts connected with this immigration. If the bill amending the restriction act is brought forward before adjournment I propose, if I have the opportunity, to submit further facts of a character that should attract the attention of Congress and the country to the magnitude of this growing evil.

For the present I must be content with simply presenting the urgent demand of the people of the Pacific coast that Congress shall take some action toward effectually prohibiting Chinese immigration.

A POPULAR REPRESENTATIVE CONVENTION IN CALIFORNIA DEMANDS AN IMMEDIATE AND ABSOLUTE PROHIBITION OF CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

On the 10th of March last two conventions assembled at the capital of the State of California for the purpose of taking into consideration the situation of affairs as involved in the Chinese question. One of the conventions had met at San José a short time before and had adjourned to meet at Sacramento, inviting a full representation from all parts of the State. The other convention was composed of delegates appointed by the boards of supervisors of the several counties. Both of these conventions were non-partisan, and represented every business, trade, and profession in the State. It was composed of adherents of both of the leading political parties, and I have no doubt included men who could be said to voice the moral sentiment of the State. The two conventions united under one organization, adopted a number of resolutions and a memorial to Congress. The latter was recently introduced in the Senete by Senator MITCHELL, of Oregon, and ordered printed (Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 107). The resolutions are as follows, so far as they relate to action on the part of Congress:

THE PLATFORM.

The report of the committee on resolutions was presented by Hon. Horace Davis:

Whereas the people of the State of California are with a unanimity of sentiment unparalleled in history opposed to the presence of the Chinese in their midst, and are likewise opposed to the further immigration of that race into the United States; and

Whereas this opposition is not of sudden growth, but is the result of more than thirty years' experience; and

Whereas the history of all countries where the Chinese have been permitted to reside among other races is a precise counterpart of our own; and

Whereas the evils arising from the presence of the Chinese are:

First. Their coming is an invasion, not an immigration.

Second. They have no families or homes among us.

Third. Their domestic relations and modes of living are such as forever preclude their assimilation with our people.

Fourth. By education and customs they are antagonistic to a republican form of government.

Fifth. They maintain in our midst secret tribunals in defiance of our laws.

Sixth. The presence of so many adults owing allegiance to a foreign government is dangerous.

Seventh. They deter laboring men from coming to California.

Eighth. The contract system by which they come to this country is virtually a system of peonage, hostile to American institutions.

Ninth. Their presence deters the growth of a reliable labor element among our boys and girls.

Tenth. After subsisting on the lowest possible portion of their earnings they remit the residue, amounting to many millions annually, to China, while the substitution of American labor would retain this vast sum of money in our country.

For these reasons they are a constant and growing source of irritation and danger to our State, and it is necessary that their immigration be immediately stopped, and every lawful measure adopted to remove those among us.

Resolved, That we demand that the Government of the United States take immediate steps to prohibit absolutely this Chinese invasion.

PETITION FROM THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

I might stop here perhaps and ask whether anything more is required on our part to present this question fully to Congress and obtain for it that careful and earnest attention its importance deserves, but I have still a further duty to perform in this matter, which, to me, is one of most impressive significance. The people of California, having determined with remarkable unanimity that the evils of Chinese immigration are past further endurance, have adopted every apparently effective form of expression and declaration to make that determination known to Congress. It has remained, however, for the Knights of Labor to resort to the sacred right of petition in a way that is so formidable and expressive as to indicate the exceeding earnestness of their appeal. They have, with infinite labor, obtained the signatures of fifty thousand citizens of th State to a petition to Congress asking that such action be taken by appropriate legislation or by a change in the present treaty with China as may be necessary to forever prohibit the further immigration of Chinese into the United States.

This petition is the work of an organized army of laborers, loyal to the institutions of the country, devoted to its best interests, and hopeful of the future. They have adopted the method pointed out by the Constitution to ask the Government to protect the laboring classes of the United States, and particularly those of the Pacific coast, against a ruinous and vicious competition. They ask that Congress shall preserve the principles of this free Government for the benefit of those who must support and defend it. They ask that an impending foreign invasion shall be prevented and peace and prosperity assured to all the people. The petition is short and to the point, and I will read it with a few of the names attached thereto.

PETITION.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned, citizens of the State of California, request your honorable bodies to take such action, either by appropriate legislation or by a change in the present treaty with China, as may be necessary to forever prohibit the further immigration of Chinese to the United States:

(Signed by:) George Stoneman, governor; Thos. L. Thompson, secretary of state; John P. Dunn, State controller; D. J. Oullahan, State treasurer; H. I. Willey, State surveyor; W. T. Welcker, superintendent public instruction; James J. Ayers, superintendent State printing; Talbot H. Wallis, State librarian; E. B. Pond, supervisor, San Francisco; W. B. It is evident that no considerable part of the petition can be read, nor can it be printed in the RECORD. It is nearly a half-mile long, and contains the names of the officers of the State, county, and municipal governments of California. It is signed, of course, by the Knights of Labor and wage-workers generally.

Mr. BELMONT. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him whether he does not know that, under the treaty it is not possible to entirely prohibit Chinese immigration.?

Mr. MORROW. I am presenting here the petition of people asking that something shall be done about this matter; and the gentleman from New York, as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, should come before this House with some measure or some proposition which would assure the Pacific coast that there is in this Congress a desire and a sentiment to do something for the working people of this country.

Mr. BELMONT. The Committee on Foreign Affairs has had under consideration the bill introduced by the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW], and therefore I thought it proper to ask him the question whether he did not himself know that under the treaty, which he has no doubt read and considered, it is absolutely impossible to prohibit entirely the immigration of Chinese labor?

Mr. MCKINLEY. What has the committee done?

Mr. MORROW. I understand the construction placed upon the treaty by the gentleman from New York and by the committee which he represents, but the question is, What has the committee done? I am here simply asking that the committee shall proceed to act, and proceed at once. If they bring in here the bill I have introduced, I have no doubt about the effect of such a law. It would restrict Chinese immigration and afford the relief that the people of the Pacific coast demand.

Mr. BELMONT. The gentleman has not yet answered my question.

Mr. FELTON. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs if it is not a fact that his committee have had before them a bill drawn under the treaty, in accordance with the usages of nations, and which obviates entirely the objections suggested in the remarks he has just made; and, if so, I ask him why they have not reported that bill?

Mr. BELMONT. I will answer the gentleman by saying that the bill is already reported to the House.

Mr. FELTON. What bill?

Mr. BELMONT. The bill introduced by the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW].

Mr. FELTON. I am not talking about that. I am talking about another bill, drawn under the provisions of the treaty and in accordance with the views which the gentleman from New York is expressing here.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Chairman, there is a unanimous report by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and it only remains for the House to carry out its agreement with that committee to give it a day for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MORROW. We on this side of the House will aid you in bringing that bill before the House with a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. BELMONT. But will the gentleman from California now answer my question, whether he does not know that under the treaty it is absolutely impossible to entirely prohibit this immigration?

Mr. MORROW. No, sir; the Congress of the United States is sovereign; and if it is the desire of Congress to prohibit this immigration it may do so by legislating in any way, even though it be in contravention of the treaty. There can be no doubt about that.

Mr. WILLIS. It has been decided by the Attorney-General over and over again that Congress can repeal a treaty.

Mr. MORROW. Certainly; Congress can repeal a treaty if it so desires.

Mr. BELMONT. Still the gentleman must remember the language of the treaty of 1880 with China. The words of Article I are as follows:

The United States may regulate, limit, or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it.

Mr. MORROW. I must decline to yield, Mr. Chairman. My time is limited. The gentleman has been very courteous heretofore, and I acknowledge it, but I can not yield further at this time.

In many towns, like Pomona for example, every adult male citizen has appended his signature to the petition I now present to this House. It represents the forces from every trade, profession, and calling enlisted in the cause of redeeming the industrial interests of the country from Chinese usurpation and monopoly. This powerful and urgent appeal should arrest the attention of Congress and secure an earnest consideration of the subject it presents. I shall ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PROTECTION TO AMERICAN LABOR.

The great political question involved in Chinese immigration relates to the declared policy of this Government to protect the interests of labor and guard well the industries of this country. A protective tariff, or a tariff for revenue, with incidental protection, is but a sham and a delusion, if pauper labor can come here and compete with our own laboring classes. Chinese cheap labor is the very worst form of free trade, for it involves no exchange of commodities. The Chinaman lives on Chinese products at the least expense possible wherever he goes, and gives nothing back to the communities of other nationalities on which he fattens. Money paid to him for his labor or his products ceases to be a circulating medium. He breaks the circuit of exchange and the money disappears. He is a parasite on the body-politic. He attaches himself to the vigorous growth of a more generous civilization and absorbs its strength and vitality. Like the daughters of the horse-leech he cries, "give, give," and if you are not prepared to shake him off you should abandon the false pretense of being in favor of protecting American labor. We can not afford to trifle with this grave question any longer. This immigration must absolutely cease. American labor demands and will have protection, and either this or some future Congress must provide the machinery for executing the will of the people on this subject.

The people of the Pacific coast, loyal and devoted to the institutions of this country, have waited long and patiently for a settlement of this great question. The two leading parties have declared in national conventions that we shall not wait in vain. As we stand here the danger increases. Between the dignity of American labor and the vice of Asiatic slavery there is an irrepressible conflict as decided and dangerous as the antagonism between the free labor and slave labor of this once distracted country, and which could only be broken over the "perilous ridges of battle." It rests with us to say whether this conflict shall go on, and, gradually extending its lines, involve the whole country in a common ruin, or whether we will arrest its progress and bar the door to further intrusion.

Every consideration having in view the public welfare demands that we should act promptly and effectively in resisting this unwelcome and dangerous invasion. It is a disturbing element we can not control, and, unrestrained, will produce consequences we can not foresee. Let us, therefore, with such wisdom as we possess, seek to draw around the privileges and benefits of the Republic the protection of the law, and thus demonstrate to the world the value and dignity of American citizenship. [Applause.]

Mr. COX was recognized and yielded ten minutes to Mr. RICE.

Mr. RICE. Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the gentleman from California has at last found an opportunity to utter the speech with which he has been so long laboring, and to give to this House the warnings which seem to burden his heart against the danger of additional Chinese immigration. I am sorry, sir, that he should have reflected upon the Committee on Foreign Affairs of this House, which has given more time to the consideration of this question than to any other that has come before it during the present Congress, and which has reported unanimously a bill calculated to relieve as far as possible the difficulties which the gentleman from California has portrayed to this House. Let me say, sir, at the outset, this is not a question of the restriction of the immigration of Chinese laborers into this country. That immigration has been already fully and carefully guarded against by previous legislation. This House has given to the subject its most careful consideration, and twice, by great majorities, it has passed acts which since then have been operative, and efficiently operative, in regard to this matter. The gentleman portrays the dangers of Chinese immigration. Why, sir, during the less than three years in which the last act passed by Congress on this subject has been in operation, the Chinese laboring population on the Pacific coast has been reduced 21,000.

Mr. MORROW. I desire to say to the gentleman that he is very much mistaken about that.

Mr. RICE. I make the statement on the report of the Treasury official who has made careful inquiry into the subject on the spot.

Mr. MORROW. Yes, sir; and the same Treasury report shows that the Chinese immigration last year was 57, when in fact it was 14,208 into the port of San Francisco alone.

Mr. RICE. I object to being interrupted by the gentleman. I know that he contradicts this statement, but I affirm in the presence of this House that this report is the only authentic, reliable information upon the subject which has yet come to our knowledge, and it comes from a careful, faithful, industrious, honest official appointed by the Treasury Department.

During the time that this last act has been in operation the Chinese labor population on the Pacific coast has been reduced 21,000—reduced so much that there is already complaint on the part of the employers of labor in California that their industries are suffering on account of this sudden reduction of their labor force. It is not, then, a question of restricting Chinese immigration. This has always been restricted—restricted to this great extent that there has been a reduction of one-fourth of the Chinese population within the three years during which the act has been in operation. So much for that.

The gentleman says that there have been coming into this country under this act still a few Chinese laborers—a very few. I do not think they "hanker" much to come from their flowery kingdom into the land of the Pacific coast to meet with such treatment as they have received during the last three or four years.

The gentleman says they go there in transit, and that there is opportunity of evading the provisions of the act. His amendment does not cure that. But there is no danger from that source. Every Chinese laborer who touches the Pacific coast for the purpose of passing through this country, as he has a right to do under the treaty, is at once put under guard. He can not become a part of the population of this country. This report to which the gentleman has alluded so states. There is no trouble about that matter. Let a vessel touch the Pacific coast having on board Chinese laborers whose purpose is to pass to some other country, and that vessel is at once covered by the officials of this Government, and no Chinaman is allowed to land unless he gives, as it were, bail for his return. And there has been no violation of the immigrant act on account of this privilege of transit.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is no longer a question of restricting Chinese immigration; that has already been attended to in the manner we have stated. I doubt not that vague and fictitious statements have been made which have excited many on the Pacific coast as they have my enthusiastic friend who has addressed us just now. But they are baseless. Let those who entertain any fears of that kind read the Treasury report, and let their vain terrors abate.

Just so much as can be done under the treaty provisions of this country has been done; and the Foreign Affairs Committee of this House, instead of being subject to the adverse criticism of the gentleman from California, has devoted itself to the preparation of a bill ulmost identical with that proposed by the gentleman himself, the only modifications being in two or three instances, for the purpose of avoiding infraction of the treaty. That bill has been reported unanimously to this House, and only waits the opportunity to be called up for discussion.

But some say, "Let us avoid the treaty." Says my friend from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], "Congress can repeal a treaty." I say, yes; it can. The king does no wrong. The king can set at naught a contract. The king can avoid payment of his just debts to his subjects. Congress can repeal a treaty. But when this great nation has sought to make a treaty, when it has been deriving from that treaty benefits to itself, and when it has derived from it protection to its merchants and its missionaries in China, and when there is no necessity, no crying wrong and evil arising to our own country from the continuance of the treaty, then it does not sound well, coming from the lips of a gentleman who is seeking to educate our people in lessons of morality and Christian intelligence, to say that this Government should repeal that treaty which itself sought and of which it has thus far been the beneficiary.

But when the question of a repeal of the treaty comes up we will consider that question. In the mean time we have done all that we can. We have done it efficiently; we have done it to the very best advantage; and the only authentic report which comes to us says that the law has been operative to an extreme degree—to such a degree that California is suffering to-day from the reduction of this labor element within its borders.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, I can not properly discuss this question in five or ten minutes. But I desired that in addition to the expression from the chairman of our committee [Mr. BELMONT], who has given this subject most attentive and careful consideration, there should be one other voice in defense of the unanimous action of that committee, which I believe to be justified by the circumstances of the case.

Mr. COX. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FELTON].

Mr. FELTON. Mr. Chairman, in the very brief time allotted to me, but seven minutes, I shall not attempt to discuss to any extent this vital question of Chinese immigration. But you will permit me to say that if there is any question before this House upon which the people of this nation have expressed their approbation it is this. Both of the great political parties in the last Presidential election embodied in their platforms a principle favoring the restriction of Chinese immigration, and upon those pledges and this principle was elected this Congress and this administration.

The object of this amendment is simply to furnish the means to enforce the present restriction act, and the question is, are we willing to keep our pledges to the people?

Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the committee who have reported this bill—and I have great respect for the gentlemen composing the same—I say to them in all sincerity I hope they will depart in this instance from the policy of this Government, which seems to me, with my small experience, to be inconsistent.

Sir, it may be that the American people have a higher order of statesmanship than is possessed by the older nations from whom we come. Be this as it may, it is certain that their policies differ widely from ours. They are eminently practical, and, in my opinion, we are dealing in experiments and theories. For example, while they are straining every sinew to its utmost tension to protect and maintain their commerce, appreciating its direct influence on their home industries, we sit quietly and give them ours—yes, and pay them $150,000,000 per annum for the taking. Having virtually given them our deep-sea commerce, we are now endeavoring, by the aid of a free-register or free-ship bill, to pave the way for their taking our coastwise and inland commerce and thus displacing thousands of our laborers for the benefit of aliens.

While they are stretching around, and to the utmost parts of the earth, for territory on which to settle a redundant population, we are inviting and materially assisting them to come and take possession of our public domain, and thus robbing our children of their natural heritage. While there is no Pacific island too small to be beneath their notice and desire, we are endeavoring to abrogate a treaty that practically gives us the Gibraltar of the Pacific, and which under the treaty has to all intents and purposes become an American colony.

While we are passing tariff laws for the avowed purpose of protecting the American laborer and giving him the time and means in and with which to enable him to become a fit citizen for a republican form of government, we permit the importation of contract labor, the meanest and the cheapest Europe can produce, to compete with. Yes; and with all the pomp and circumstance of diplomatic conventions negotiate and execute a treaty which permits any portion of four hundred and fifty millions of Asiatics to enter this country with all the material rights and privileges of our own citizens and shamefully assent to clauses that deprive the American citizen of corresponding privileges within the flowery kingdom, in which he is not permitted to travel its sacred paths.

And still, consistent in our inconsistencies, while we have a law for the restriction of Chinese immigration, yet we refuse to pass a law to make its operation possible, to appropriate means to execute and carry out its provisions.

In answer to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE], a gentleman for whom I need not say I have great respect, I will say that he forgets not only the 3,000 miles of territory adjoining British Columbia and Canada but also that we have a thousand miles of territory lying contiguous to Mexico; and it is a fact known to us all beyond the Rocky Mountains, and I wish it were equally well known on this side of those mountains, that the Chinese are coming in at times and places to suit their convenience, and in such numbers as they desire. Then we might hope for your sympathy. It is not the port of San Francisco alone that tells this story of the number coming or that needs to be protected. For that reason the statistics my friend relies on are wrong, in my opinion.

Mr. Chairman, ignoring the fundamental and immutable laws underlying human nature, the creation of He who created us all, ignoring the facts and teachings of all past history, we have evolved the sentimental theory of the brotherhood of nations and man, and under it invite a conflict of races and civilizations, one that ever has been, is, and ever will be irrepressible. With the beastly, dastardly, and cowardly massacre of Rock Springs fresh in our memory, a legitimate result of this immigration, history is simply repeating itself.

We will in this House vote an indemnity of $147,000 for the sufferers with a million of the same kind of claims to be hereafter considered, but we will appropriate but the paltry sum of $5,000 to prevent a recurrence of similar outrages sure to occur if this immigration is permitted.

Are we not in fact crystallizing that science of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania—the dismal, the cheap, and nasty?

And, sir, why all this absurdity, this inconsistency? Is it not our insatiate greed for gold, for cheap labor to coin it, to further fill the overflowing purses of the already too powerful at the expense of their less fortunate brothers? Are we not legislating for to-day, regardless of the future and the evils that may follow? And here let me add this Government and its institutions can only be preserved by the aid of justice and a due regard for the rights of all its citizens. Mark the distinction—"its citizens." [Applause.]

Mr. COX. I will yield now five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WORTHINGTON].

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to oppose particularly this amendment or the appropriation of any sum which may be reasonable for the purpose of fairly enforcing the present laws and regulations against Chinese immigration. I think, sir, there is substantial agreement on both sides of the House that this species of immigration is not desirable.

We have tried it and are not satisfied with the result; and now, in the advocacy of any measures that may be opposed to it, we are not inconsistent with our former professions that under our flag the downtrodden and the oppressed of every nation may find a home and a safe refuge. If these people came to our coasts for the purpose of refuge, if they believed that they were oppressed at home, if they came to be relieved from the bonds of servitude, or from slavery, or with a view of making a new home in the New World, I should be one of the last in this House to favor a measure that would in any degree prevent their free immigration. But, Mr. Chairman, it is well known that they do not come for any such reasons. They do not come to seek a home among us because they dislike the institutions of China. They do not come because they believe they are deprived of their rights there; they do not come to acquire citizenship under our flag; but they come simply because they believe they can earn in a little while more money here than at home, and they come with a view of earning that money and with the intention of returning home with their gains so as to be buried in the land of their ancestry.

But, sir, while all of this is true, I can not accord with the suggestions of some gentlemen on this floor that because they are unwelcome immigrants, and because we believe them to be unfair competitors of those who work for wages in our land, that we should feel ourselves at liberty by legislative enactment to violate and disregard all of the sacred obligations of the treaty which we have made. Gentlemen can not forget the fact that China for hundreds of years insisted upon secluding herself and having no intercourse with any of the rest of the world, or any of the so-called civilized nations. They should not forget that it was the civilized nations of the world who knocked at her doors and demanded that the wall of seclusion should be broken down, and that there should be free intercourse, free egress and ingress of the citizens of the civilized world into China. In return for these concessions on the part of China it was agreed that there should be free ingress and egress to citizens of China in our own country. I find by referring to the Burlingame treaty, and all gentlemen present know the origin and purpose of that treaty, Article V provides:

> The United States of America and the Emperor of China cordially recognize the inherent and inalienable right of man to change his home and allegiance, and also the mutual advantage of the free migration and emigration of their citizens and subjects respectively from the one country to the other for purposes of curiosity, of trade, or as permanent residents. * * *

And article 6:

> Citizens of the United States visiting or residing in China shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, or exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may there be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation; and, reciprocally, Chinese subjects visiting or residing in the United States shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, and exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may there be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation.

Now, sir, I say that as a Government we can not afford to abrogate or willfully disregard the solemn obligations under which we have placed ourselves with China simply because we have the power to do so. We can not afford to set aside a solemn treaty entered into by the United States, which claims to be a Christian and civilized nation, with a government which we are in the habit of referring to as a heathen or uncivilized people. Nor is it necessary.

The Chinese Government, so far as we know, has met cordially every proposition on the part of our Government to restrict emigration from their government in accordance with the conditions of this Burlingame treaty. Notwithstanding the fact that under that treaty they were given free intercourse into this country, at the suggestion of our Government a period of ten years was fixed during which time the Chinese laborer could not be permitted to enter the United States. This period I believe will not expire for six years.

Mr. RICE. Six years remain.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. All that we want now is a rigid observance of the present law existing between this Government and China. It is claimed by gentlemen representing the Pacific coast that the law is violated; that those who have lived in the United States and returned to China, and who are entitled under existing law to return to this country, fraudulently dispose of their permits to other Chinese laborers who have never been here, who are thereby permitted in violation of the law to acquire a residence.

Now, the Committee on Foreign Affairs has reported to the House a bill that I believe will effectually prevent this violation of the spirit of the law by the enactment of this species of fraud in future, and have reported it unanimously. There is no dissent of opinion upon that question.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, from the remarks made by the gentlemen who have preceded me in this discussion it is clear that there is no substantial disagreement as to the propriety of this increased appropriation. The question arises as to whether the Department which is familiar with the difficulties encountered in executing the law is the best judge of the amount required or the Committee on Appropriations. The committee have only allowed half the amount called for, and in my opinion have not appreciated the magnitude of the undertaking. In making this remark I do not intend to depreciate its labors, for from the character of its membership I know they have been careful and painstaking. Yet of all laws upon our statute-books, this one affecting as it does our international relations as well as the peace and good order of the whole Pacific coast should be most rigidly enforced. All parties should rest satisfied that Congress intends to make ample provision for its due enforcement.

The unanimity with which the necessity for Chinese exclusion is now conceded by Congress is a matter for profound congratulation. It is an earnest of a well-defined and accepted American policy in her foreign relations. It is such a policy as during President Grant's incumbency assured the speedy and honorable adjustment of the Alabama claims; and which during the present administration brought order out of chaos in the Panama outrages. It is such a policy as inspires confidence at home and commands respect abroad. There is no international tribunal to which contentions between nations can be appealed, therefore prudence and principle dictate that in the assertion of rights we should respect those solemn treaty obligations which constitute the golden rule of personal and international communion.

> To thine own self be true;
> And it must follow, as the night the day,
> Thou canst not then be false to any man, is a sentiment no less appropriate to nations than to individuals. No lust of gain, no sickening sentiment, no mock philanthropy should ever persuade us to disregard the reasonable demands for protection from the people of any portion of this great Government, either through the fear of offending or the apprehension of encountering false sentiment. A government which protects its citizens from oppressions, whether at home or abroad, wins their confidence and commands their obedience; a contrary course leads to rivalries, jealousies, and ultimate decay.

The Mokanna of Chinese cooly influx has time and again obtruded itself upon the attention of our national Legislature. Our friends on the Pacific coast at first hailed with delight the advent of the Mongolian among them, but soon discovered that instead of proving a blessing it was an invasion by an alien and obnoxious race, which, if continued, would drive out and displace the wholesome and stable native population, whose genius and labor only can permanently improve and beautify their magnificent country. By State legislation the Californians sought to turn this tide from their doors, but the courts of the United States decided that emigration was not a question for State regulation, and they were thus driven to seek redress from Congress.

A cynic has said there are no misfortunes we bear with such complacency as those of our friends. This doubtless appeared true to the people of the Pacific States when they appealed in vain to Congress.

COOLY LABOR.

Labor first rebelled against the baneful effects of cooly competition, for the American laborer, with the honorable responsibilities which education and morality give him, with the enlightened civil and social refinements of a wife and children to maintain, with the preservation of civil and religious culture, can not successfully compete with this class who have no patriotism or love for the land they encumber, and whose peculiar and inexpensive habits call for almost no outlay to preserve life. Alien in sentiment, in morals, religion, and education, the Chinese stand a constant menace to the prosperity and happiness of our people. Was it unnatural, therefore, that American laborers should feel dissatisfied, and even rebellious, at seeing these people engaged in striking down their wages, taking their children's bread, and otherwise bringing distress and suffering upon those dearest on earth to them? Hence forbearance ceased to be a virtue, great discontent prevailed, public meetings were held, Chinese immigration was denounced, and riot and bloodshed followed. At first these conflicts were believed to be inspired by "sand-lot" oratory, which inflamed violent and disreputable characters to breaches of the peace and the disorganization of society. About this time one Dennis Kearney, a man of strong natural parts and rugged oratory, appeared upon the scene to add fuel to the flame. In the East he was classed as a socialist and incendiary, a dangerous leader of mobs; and this excitement was believed to have arisen from the narrow prejudice of our race toward a harmless and unoffending people, and sympathy went out to the Chinese. Thus condemnation was aroused against agitation, and opinions difficult to combat were lodged in the minds of persons, who, distantly removed from the scenes of conflict, enjoyed immunity through a harmonious population, and discovered no occasion for demonstrations believed to be the natural offspring of political demagogy and race resentments. It was not then known that the sordid, selfish, immoral, and non-assimilating habits of the Chinese caused them to be recognized as a continual threat to the social and political institutions of the state.

As early as the Forty-first Congresss, an unsuccessful effort was made by the people of California to secure restrictive legislation. Not discouraged by failure, but with an indomitable courage and faith in the justice of their countrymen, which has ever characterized the people of the West, they again appeared with numerous petitions, memorials, and addresses, and continued to clamor for relief until in the Forty-fourth Congress their appeals met with a favorable response. A joint resolution was then passed calling upon the President to open negotiations with the Chinese Government, for the purpose of modifying the provisions of the treaty between the two countries, and "restricting the same to commercial purposes." At the next session of the same Congress a second joint resolution was passed, requesting the incorporation of an additional article to the treaty of July 28, 1868, wherein the right to regulate, restrict, or prevent immigration should be reserved to the respective countries.

CHINESE DIPLOMACY.

Singular to say, while the inhabitants of the Celestial Kingdom had been regarded by us as unused to the customs and manners of the outside world, yet in negotiating this treaty their diplomacy clearly manifested their great superiority over the frank and unpracticed diplomats of the Western world. They early secured as their friend and ally to negotiate the treaty a man whom the American Government had imprudently trusted as her chosen minister to the Chinese Empire.

In our zeal to acquire what we supposed to be great commercial advantages we conceded extraordinary privileges to that kingdom, without obtaining corresponding rights for our own. While we had granted them the unrestricted right to emigrate to our country, and the appropriation of blessings enjoyed by our people, no such reciprocal advantages were accorded to us; on the contrary, we secured the bare permission of trading at certain ports, and permission for our missionaries to preach the gospel on the exterior of their country. And the latter privilege was but as the beauty of ashes to a people whose civilization antedated ours by thousands of years and whose population constitute about one-third of the habitable globe. While we have about nine inhabitants to the square mile the Chinese Government has an average of about two hundred and twelve souls to the same area, and many parts of their country are rugged and barren and inhabited chiefly by a degraded and impoverished people. With such surroundings their natural desire to flock to this land in overwhelming numbers should have been reasonably anticipated and provided against.

Those who may suppose all Chinese are such as the cooly immigrant that seeks to improve his condition among us are egregriously mistaken; for the ruling classes among them are cultivated, scholarly, enlightened statesmen and accomplished diplomats. While many regard them as stupid heathens and idolaters, yet possessing as they do a religion and civilization beyond the records of history, they naturally look down on us as "outside barbarians," rude, materialistic, and progressive, we caring more for the present and future; while they with the rich treasures of ages delight to dwell in contemplation over the past. The Chinaman's purpose is to reside among us only so long as is necessary to improve his fortune, then return to the Flowery Kingdom, and there amidst the bones of his ancestors dwell in stolid contemplation and ease. This is not his country, and he does not desire to make it such. Should he die in this land of "the barbarian," his bones are transferred, that they may not rest in unhallowed soil. As their families do not accompany them to the New World, they are cut off from all the endearments and refining influences of domestic life, and their immorality and degradation can be conjectured but not realized. Except by their bare labor, they contribute but little to developing our wealth, for even their food and clothing are in the main imported from their own country.

It is therefore not unnatural that the people of the Pacific coast, of all ranks and conditions of society, who intend to make those States and Territories their permanent abode, should look with jealousy at the sojourning among them of a race the effect of whose presence is to excite continual friction and retard the prosperity of their section, by discouraging the emigration of those who have the same hopes and aspirations with themselves.

It may be inquired whether we can afford to reverse the traditional boast of this country being the land of the free and the home of the oppressed to gratify the wishes of our friends of the Pacific coast?

To which we answer, this is no longer an open question, for by our treaty with China of November 17, 1880, Article I, it is expressly conditioned that—

> Whenever, in the opinion of the Government of the United States, the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, or their residence therein, affects or threatens to affect the interests of this country, or to endanger the good order of the said country, or of any locality within the territory thereof, the Government of China agrees that the Government of the United States may regulate, limit, or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it.

So that the Chinese Government by her voluntary action has placed a ban upon this class of her subjects. The reasons must have been satisfactory for doing so.

To give an idea of the opinion entertained of cooly laborers by the people of California even prior to the adoption of the supplementary treaty, I invite attention to the following extract from the address of the committee appointed by the Legislature of that State, which memorialized Congress on this subject, and which graphically and ably sets forth the objection to Chinese emigration. The committee say:

> In view of these facts thousands of our people are beginning to feel a settled exasperation, a profound sense of dissatisfaction with the situation. Hitherto this feeling has been restrained, and with few exceptions the Chinese have had the full protection of our laws. The people of this State have been more than patient; the condition of affairs as they exist in San Francisco would not be tolerated without a resort to violence in any Eastern city. It is the part of wisdom to anticipate the day when patience may cease, and by wise legislation to avoid its evils. Impending difficulties of this character should not, in this advanced age, be left to the chance arbitrament of force. These are questions which ought to be solved by the statesman and the philanthropist, and not by the soldier.

This address was adopted and published on the 13th of August, 1877. Congress had prior to this time appointed a joint special committee to visit the Pacific coast, to examine and report as to the necessity for a change in the Burlingame treaty. After the examination of numerous witnesses, whose testimony covers over 1200 pages of printed matter, and embraces the views of all classes of the community and every variety of interest, the report closes with these words:

> From all the facts that they have gathered bearing upon the matter, considering fairly the testimony for and against the Chinese, the committee believe that the influx of Chinese is a standing menace to Republican institutions upon the Pacific, and the existence there of Christian civilization. * * * This problem is too important to be treated with indifference. It must be solved, unless our Pacific possessions are to be ultimately given over to a race alien in all its tendencies, which will make of them practically provinces of China rather than States of the Union.

So impressed was this committee of the necessity for relief from this terrible scourge that it recommended restrictive legislation on the part of Congress, whether approved by the Chinese Government or not. But the Executive moved with prudence and secured the amended treaty to which I have referred, and maintained the most cordial and friendly relations between this Government and that of China, which I am happy to say has continued to the present time, and which should not be causelessly impaired. The right of this Government to prevent the influx of elements hostile to its internal peace and security can not be questioned, even where there are no treaty stipulations to authorize it. It is the duty of every government to first maintain the peace and good order of its subjects, who maintain and support it, and they have the correlative right of protection.

CONFLICT OF RACES.

Notwithstanding the repeated acts of restrictive legislation by Congress, it is believed that manifold evasions of the law are still practiced, and this belief has culminated in precipitating the disastrous conflicts and bloodshed which have recently been witnessed in the Territories of the far West. All this time the people of California have sought relief through the channels prescribed by the law, and are entitled to our highest respect and confidence for their forbearance and good faith amid the most exciting temptations. In return for their exemplary conduct it is still insisted by certain doctrinaires and pseudo-philanthropists, whose esthetic sentiments prompt them to reverse the proverb of Solomon, who declares that "better is a neighbor that is near than a brother far off." They can see no virtues in their blue-eyed brothers who are near, provided they can discover a tawny stranger afar off. They declare that these conflicts are merely struggles for political ascendency; that the present restrictions are ample; that there is no influx of cooly labor to our shores; on the contrary, Mr. Spaulding, the special agent of the Government, in his report (Executive Document No. 103, Forty-ninth Congress), shows that these Chinese, taking advantage of the clause which does not restrict passengers in transit, continued to augment annually their numbers from 76 in 1882, when the first restrictive act went into effect, to 11,162 in 1885.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COX. I ask the privilege of extending my remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Can you not invent some mode of keeping out dynamiters and anarchists?

Mr. COX. I would be pleased to see it done.

To show what is thought by the people of California at the present time in regard to this immigration, I beg to call attention to the following extracts from the memorial to Congress, adopted by the anti-Chinese State convention, held at Sacramento, March 11, 1886. This convention, I will add, was comprised of representative men of all classes from every part of the State. In addition, there is a memorial to Congress now in possession of the Foreign Affairs Committee signed by over five thousand people from one Congressional district of the State, besides memorials from Territorial Legislatures asking for the total abrogation of the Burlingame treaty. The paragraphs to which I invite attention are as follows:

Speaking for the entire people of this State, your memorialists represent that for thirty-six years we have been settled upon the shores of the Pacific, and thus brought face to face with the great Mongolian hive, with its 450,000,000 of hungry and adventurous inhabitants. For thirty-six years we have watched the industrial and social system that has resulted from it, and weighed the advantages and disadvantages as they have developed.

NECESSITY OF RESISTANCE.

Under these circumstances we feel that we can understand better than any others the necessity of resisting the tide of immigration setting out from China, which has already done so much mischief to nations bordering upon that country, and which threatens to do so much more. Our fellow-countrymen east of the mountains have always been too much in the habit of forming their judgment upon the Chinese question from its material aspect, and as a mere question of industrial development and progress and the creation of wealth, wholly overlooking and ignoring its social, moral, and political sides. We do not deny that the people of the Pacific coast are influenced by material considerations and that each one of us is trying by all legitimate means to better his condition.

But we say that, regarded from the standpoint of immediate material results and considered as the coldest question of dollars and cents, and putting aside all considerations of Government, social and moral order, and even patriotism, there is no advantage or profit in the mixed-race system now being forced upon this coast, or in any mixed-race system whatever; that there is more mere money profit in dollars in a homogeneous population than in one of mixed races, while the moral and political objections are unanswerable. For while the Chinaman works industriously enough he consumes very little, either of his own production or ours. That he imports from China much that he eats and much that he wears, while a vast catalogue of articles consumed by our own people, the production and sale of which makes our commerce and our life what it is, the Chinaman does not use at all. Indeed, as far as he is concerned, hundreds of useful occupations essential to our system of civilization might as well, and if they depended upon him would have to, be abandoned altogether. Then he underbids all white labor and ruthlessly takes its place, and will go on doing so till the white laborer comes down to the scanty food and half-civilized habits of the Chinaman, while the net results of his earnings are sent regularly out of the country and lost to the community where created.

And while this depleting process is going on the laboring white man, to whom the nation must in the long run look for the reproduction of the race and the bringing up and educating of citizens to take the place of the current generation as it passes away, and above all to defend the country in time of war, is being injured in his comfort, reduced in his scale and standard of life, necessarily carrying down with it his moral and physical tone and stamina.

But what is even more immediately damaging to the general welfare is the fact that he is kept in a perpetual state of anger, exasperation, and discontent always bordering on sedition, thus jeopardizing the general peace and creating a state of chronic uneasiness, distrust, and apprehension throughout the entire community. That this alarms capital and forces it into concealment or out of the State in search of greater security, checks enterprise, increases the cost of government, especially for police purposes, while decreasing the sources of revenue from which that cost can be obtained.

Eastern political economists may think that they discover patent fallacies in the theories of the people of this coast, and that our supposed grievances are either greatly exaggerated or do not exist at all.

To this we answer that it is they who are the theorists, while we alone are acting upon genuine experience, and that experience is the only sure guide in all political matters.

It is certainly possible, indeed it is probable, that the wages of labor on this coast, instead of increasing when the Chinaman is gone, will decrease, but the belief of the entire producing class of the white race to the contrary is fixed and profound, is a great political factor, breeding discontent and dissaffection and disturbing the body-politic.

And if wages do come down when the Chinaman is gone, our own people will have more steady and sure employment, which is of more importance than high wages; whatever is earned in the country will be kept in it, and if our people are not better off they will at least be better satisfied.

The white workingman we must have with us if the nation is to continue to exist. The Mongolian can be dispensed with, and as he is a disturbing element, for that reason, if for no other, he ought to be dispensed with.

THE EUROPEAN RACE.

We assure our fellow-countrymen East that in this Chinese question is involved no less than the dominance, if not the existence, of the European race in this part of the world.

We call their attention to the act that the Malayan Peninsula, as well as other countries bordering upon China and the China seas, have already been overrun by the Chinese, and that the Malayan, one of the great races or types of the human family, is being rapidly annihilated to make place for them.

* * * * * * *

Among other duties as American citizens, we hold ourselves to be trustees of posterity. We are keeping the soil of this fair land for the thirty million Americans of our own race and kindred who are to come after us. To barter away their places while they are yet unborn is a gross violation of duty. To do so under the pretense of high morality and humanity and national generosity is to add the sin of hypocrisy to that which without it would be a great public crime. Our common ancestors came to the American continent to found a state, and they did it. The greatness of a nation does not lie in its money or in its material prosperity, but in its men and women, and not in their number but in their quality, in their virtue, integrity, honor, truth, and above all things in their courage and manhood. To a nation that is to remain, the capacity to fight is indispensable. It is not enough that it is able to trade and barter, or to work and produce, it must be able to fight for and defend what it has. The nation that can not defend itself against all comers will find that its days are numbered, and this is as true in the nineteenth century as in any other age of the world. The strong nations of the earth are now, as they have always been, the most thoroughly homogeneous nations; that is to say, the most nearly of one race, language, and manners. And when they are of one race it is not so material what race, as that they be a pure race. The purest-blooded man of any race is the strongest man of that race.

No state where the great distinct types of the human species have been mixed together on the same territory has ever held power for considerable time. And no race of mongrels, if such a thing is possible, has ever held empire or even kept its own independence.

* * * * * * *

M. Vattel is a high authority upon public and international law. This is what he says:

"The country which a nation inhabits, whether that nation has emigrated thither in a body or the different families of which it consists were scattered over the country and then uniting formed themselves into a political society, that country I say is the settlement of the nation, and it has a peculiar, an exclusive right to it." (Vattel, book 1, chapter 18, section 203.)

"The sovereign may forbid the entrance to his territory, either to foreigners in general or in particular cases, or to certain persons or for particular purposes, according as he may think it advantageous to his state. Formerly the Chinese, fearing lest the intercourse with strangers should corrupt the manners of the nation and impair the maxims of a wise but singular government, forbid all people entering the empire—a prohibition that was not at all inconsistent with justice. It was salutary to the nation without violating the rights of any individual, or even the duties of humanity, which permits us in case of competition to prefer ourselves to others." (Ibid., book 2, chapter 7, section 94.)

Our country has, without doubt, been benefited by the coming hither of emigrants from Europe of our own race and religion, some speaking our own language and all speaking closely allied languages and with similar manners and customs; people that have become identical with ourselves in a short time. How long this character of immigration will continue to be beneficial to us is problematical. It therefore appears that the immigration even of the same race and general type of the human family of people, possessors of the country, is sometimes beneficial and sometimes mischievous, depending upon circumstances that are liable to change.

A PUBLIC CALAMITY.

But we undertake to say that the immigration, whether voluntary or forced, into a country of non-assimilative races is always an unmixed evil and a public calamity. The same spirit of greed and avarice which is at the bottom of the cooly immigration of this age lay at the bottom and was the impelling motive of the forced immigration of African slaves into the country all through the eighteenth century. No doubt the slave-traders and slave-purchasers of that day tried to make the world believe that they were doing good and that their motives were noble and patriotic. Men are fond of giving themselves credit for lofty motives in all they do. No doubt they talked loudly about developing the resources of the country and about Christianizing the poor African; but at the bottom was the mammon of cheap labor and the money to be got out of it. The world has not changed much. The selfishness of those men has already borne much bitter fruit. Through it the curse of race heterogeneity has taken deep root in the soil of our common country. Out of that evil we have had one bloody war for which the nation has not yet thrown off its mourning. But the war was nothing to what is left behind. It is true that it has settled the slave question; but the negro question, the question of the relations between the white man and the black man and the relations of each to the State, has only ust begun. Twenty generations will not see it ended. And our fellow-countrymen at the South who are compelled to carry on a government under such conditions to preserve order and maintain law and civilized society are entitled to the sympathy of all thoughtful men. They have a task the difficulties of which are not appreciated.

DOMINANT RACES.

We give it as our interpretation of the lessons of history that a genuine republican government, as we Americans understand the term, meaning a government in which all the people governed participate equally, under the conditions existing in the South, namely, one-third of the population consisting of one race and two-thirds of another, is a political impossibility. One race will always dominate the other and no power can prevent it, except by destroying the liberties of both. They can only be equal in a common servitude that overwhelms both. Remember we do not undertake to say which race will rule the other; that will vary with circumstances, depending upon their relative numbers and strength. In the South just now it is the white race that dominates; in San Domingo it is the black race. The wisdom of Shakespeare, though put in the mouth of Dogberry, states the case: "Neighbor Verges, an' two men ride of a horse, one must ride behind." We do not put these race antagonisms and the fruit of them upon the supposed superiority of one race over the other. Nobody has heard or will hear anything from us about "superior and inferior races." These terms the thoughtful man will be very cautious about employing. One race may be the superior for one place and not for another. We only say they can not live well or happily together, and it is unwise to compel them to do it.

The statesmen who look for a change that is to harmonize the South so that both races shall stand equal and be equal have never lived in a mixed community and know nothing about it. They know nothing of the hereditary and instinctive race antagonism always latent in every individual human breast and always springing into active vitality on bringing together two different races or types of men into the occupancy of the same territorial habitation. Such statesmen overlook an unfailing human quality or instinct, and one too universal not to have a profound purpose in the general economy of nature. We can not help thinking that purpose to be the evolution of higher human types, to be secured not by crossing and hybridizing, but by adhering to purity of stock. But in this we ask no man to agree with us. We are only speaking of facts, and are regarding the question as one of politics and not of abstract ethnology.

The efforts that have been made by nations in the past to rid themselves of the evils of mixed races, and even mixed tribes, tongues, and religions, and to reach homogeneity, and the repose, strength, and security it affords, are well worthy of consideration in examining the Chinese problem in this country.

SHAM SENTIMENTALITY.

The growth and development of the sham sentimentality about the right of free immigration to this country has always had lucre as its chief underlying motive. The money-seeking sentimentalist has easily recognized the very obvious fact that the increase of population has increased the value of property and made business lively and there he has seen his profit.

If it were once demonstrated that the coming hither of any number of the best people in the world, English, Irish, Scotch, or German, reduced the market value of property 10 per cent., or regularly made business dull, that very day the last whisper about the inherent and inalienable right of immigration and about this glorious country of ours being the refuge of the oppressed of all nations, would be hushed forever, and in a week the country would be in arms to keep the intruders out. * * *

RIGHTS OF THE WHITE RACE.

We would only be following the common instincts of human nature in preferring our own race to that of the alien Chinamen, were it even less worthy than his, and for no higher reason than because it is our own. But when we remember that ours was the race which was first to seize upon nature's forces and harness them to the car of progress that has smoothed the earth's surface and made it more fit for man's habitation, we think he has earned the right even if he had it not before, to hold any place he has once secured to the exclusion of all comers, and we will make an effort to hold this place as our home and settlement.

It will be observed that I have employed very extended extracts from the able and philosophical memorial of the anti-Chinese convention of California. Aside from the intrinsic merits of this statesmanlike address, as touching the question before us, it is replete with suggestive thought to the student of history, and displays a most profound study of the teachings of the past, and it comes before us with the rare indorsement of being printed by the Senate of the United States as one of the miscellaneous documents of that body. Instead of apologizing for the extended extracts employed, I rather regret it is not convenient to incorporate the whole address into my remarks. But other phases of this subject demand consideration, and to such I must now invite attention.

While quoting liberally from this memorial I desire it to be distinctly understood that I neither indorse nor adopt those suggestions and conclusions which are merely theoretical and speculative. Such quotations as I have made are worthy of serious thought and further amplification.

It was the dissimilarity of races that recently precipitated the war between pure and half-breeds in Canada; and the demoralization arising from the admixture of races has ever proved the instability of Mexico. The white man and the Indian have lived on this continent in close proximity since the discovery of this country. Still, as the former advances the latter retires, and they are socially no nearer together to-day than they were centuries ago. Despite all of our efforts to civilize, Christianize, and educate him, and the millions of dollars annually appropriated for this purpose, he is, with gratifying exceptions, the same wild and untutored savage he has always been, who

Sees God in
Clouds or hears him in the wind.

Of a wholly different type and organization from ourselves, it seems impossible for him to imbibe the feelings, aspirations, and emotions of the white man. He still delights in the amusements of the chase and in gaining a precarious subsistence through the labors of his women, for regular labor is repulsive and thought unworthy of the natural liberty of the man.

Negro emigration can only measurably be compared to that of the Chinese. When purchased in Africa he was a naked barbarian, and was transported to this country in slave ships. He was wholly untutored, and had everything to learn from the master to whom he was enslaved, and his person and will were subjected to the superior power and control of the white man, from whom he imbibed his ideas of civilization and moral culture. Through long pupilage and attrition his nature has changed, and his intellectual and moral progress surpasses that of his race in any other part of the world. Now, even he would be the last to encourage the natives of Africa to come among us. The contrast between him and the Chinaman is here most striking. The latter comes among us fully educated, free to control his own actions, and instead of associating with the white man, naturally prefers the association of his own countrymen, and retains the manners and prejudices and customs of the region from which he came. He is not a barbarian, but possessed of a civilization compared with which ours is but as of yesterday. He brings with him his language, literature, morals, and religious beliefs, which have been perpetuated for centuries. Instead of looking up to the Caucasian as his mentor he naturally looks upon him as his inferior; for the Chinese is proud of his learning, of his traditions, and of his country. So far as the mechanical arts and manual pursuits are concerned, he acknowledges our superiority, and is prompt to adopt and apply them. His emigration tends to increase the unequal distribution of wealth and the difficulties arising in the application of remedial measures. Corporate wealth aggrandizes and disregards individual efforts, and this element is ever at its command.

As has been shown cooly labor is an element in the political and social life in California, which is capable of and does arouse the most violent passions. No wise parent or head of a family would think of introducing under his roof a family of totally different origin and habits from his own, the only effect of which would be to demoralize instead of elevating them. Then, why should there be introduced into our Republic a race which engenders prejudice and social bitterness, and which deepens the chasm already sufficiently broad between capital and labor? It is the part of statesmanship to foster and cherish the laboring and wage-earning classes of our native population, "man the worker, man the brother." The poor should feel that in the halls of Congress they have friends and protectors, Knights of Labor if you please, instead of those who are neglectful of their interests. True statesmanship points out the duty we owe to this class of our citizens, and bids us throw around them every protection which the law can secure. They should be made to feel that instead of submitting to the restrictions and exactions of protective organizations, whose rules and authority are often such as no free man would voluntarily submit to, unless to escape greater imaginary or real hardships, that through their Representatives they can secure every redress the laws of the land can guarantee them. No one will deny that the laborers in this country are exposed to many grievances. We have escaped the abuses of the Old World merely to have others fastened on the New. We are not Utopian enough to suppose that mere legislation will prove a panacea for all such evils. The thews and sinews of a government are its revenues. Let the grant of supplies be coupled with the securing of prerogatives. Put honest and capable men at the helm, and we may rest at ease. The power of the laborer is in the ballot, and not in the bullet. While the former falls as a snowflake, the strongest must heed it; the latter arouses resentment and bloodshed. At the same time the laboring man should see that the delusive heresies of the mere demagogue are worth nothing. We must have a Government of law, founded on reason and justice; or of the mob, asserted by violence and passion.

In conflict with those in authority, whose blood is shed? Who are the sufferers? Are they the bondholders, the wealthy stock-brokers, and monopolists, or the humble officials appointed to restrain excesses, and the laboring man who, wrought upon by his feelings and misfortunes, rushes madly to his ruin? The inquiry need only be stated to furnish its answer.

RESPECT FOR LAW.

Every American should remember that in this country we have no classes. There are wealthy and poor persons, but the laborer of to-day may be the millionaire of the future. Every man has permission to refuse employment, but should not put himself and friends in the wrong by preventing others from enjoying the liberty he claims. Tyranny, even to the humblest, awakens resentment. The law can not permit such invasions of rights, while co-operative organizations to ameliorate and improve the conditions of the laborers do accomplish good, and are to be encouraged.

The Chinese laborer, as I have already shown, makes more intolerable the burdens of the poor native laborer; and the legislator who sympathizes with the toiling masses should see that their burdens are not increased by the introduction of this class among us. I wish it understood that so far as every one now with us, every American citizen is concerned, from the highest to the lowest, I would not impair one of his rights, but am opposed to the further introduction of alien non-assimilating races. Among the European people from whom our population has been drawn there are differences of race, customs, and religion, but they belong to the same subdivision of the human family. Their religion is but the modifications of a common creed, and their civilization is of essentially the same character. But even here, within the last few years, restrictions have been imposed on certain classes of these races. Our laws no longer permit the criminal and pauper classes of Europe to be precipitated among us. With a population of 55,000,000 of inhabitants, with our public lands rapidly being settled up, with the introduction of labor-saving machines, and the unequal distribution of wealth, the means of subsistence for the poorer classes are continually becoming more and more difficult to secure. Poverty and misfortune bring discontent, and a disregard of restraining social and political influences. Officers of the law are continually multiplied to preserve the peace and good order of society, and that freedom of action and security of person which obtain in a less populous country are gradually surrendered to the demands of society. Our duty, therefore, is to take every precaution to preserve the Government in its purity and simplicity by wise and judicious legislation.

RESTRICTION OF EMIGRATION.

To do this it is necessary to impose restrictions against the emigration of all alien and non-assimilating races which shall seek an asylum on our shores; and more especially when they attempt to enter in such numbers as may imperil the peace and safety of our own people.

Some strictures have been made during this debate at the expense of the Committee on Foreign Affairs for its delay in presenting their bill for a modification of the Burlingame treaty. I do not insist it is altogether excusable. Yet that committee has had a bill on the Calendar for some time which I think should have been acted on, but the difficulty has been in getting a day when it could be considered. I will now explain its provisions and give some reasons for its passage.

This bill is a bill supplementary to and amendatory of "an act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved May 6, 1882, as amended by an act to amend said act, approved July 5, 1884.

It has the support of all the Representatives in Congress from the Pacific coast. While some of them would prefer to see the Burlingame treaty entirely abrogated, and have introduced bills to that end, yet I feel authorized to say they will be satisfied with the adoption of this measure. Your Committee on Foreign Affairs, after long and painful deliberation, feel that their recommendations are in the line of conservative legislation, and with that due regard to our treaty obligations which has ever characterized the actions of this Government in its liberal and unselfish policy toward all other peoples and nations.

It will be observed that the treaty of 1884 restricted the emigration of Chinese laborers to this country for a period of ten years from and after the passage of the act, and this bill extends the period for ten years from and after the passage of the amendatory act, the committee being of the opinion that it was reasonable to infer that the whole question would most probably be satisfactorily adjusted within that time, and that this extension would tend to remove the feeling of insecurity and disquiet from among those affected by this emigration.

REMEDIES PROPOSED.

In order that the House may judge whether by the passage of this bill we would be observing in good faith the spirit and the essence of the treaty, I now present for its consideration the four most important sections, which are as follows:

ARTICLE I.

Whenever in the opinion of the Government of the United States the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, or their residence therein, affects or threatens to affect the interests of that country, or to endanger the good order of the said country or of any locality within the territory thereof, the Government of China agrees that the Government of the United States may regulate, limit, or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it. The limitation or suspension shall be reasonable, and shall apply only to Chinese who may go the United States as laborers, other classes not being included in the limitations. Legislation taken in regard to Chinese laborers will be of such a character only as is necessary to enforce the regulation, limitation, or suspension of immigration, and immigrants shall not be subject to personal maltreatment or abuse.

ARTICLE II.

Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants, or from curiosity, together with their body and household servants, and Chinese laborers, who are now in the United States, shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nations.

ARTICLE III.

If Chinese laborers, or Chinese of any other class, now either permanently or temporarily residing in the territory of the United States, meet with ill treatment at the hands of any other persons, the Government of the United States will exert all its power to devise measures for their protection and to secure to them the same rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions as may be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, and to which they are entitled by treaty.

ARTICLE IV.

The high contracting powers having agreed upon the foregoing articles, whenever the Government of the United States shall adopt legislative measures in accordance therewith, such measures will be communicated to the Government of China. If the measures as enacted are found to work hardships upon the subjects of China the Chinese minister at Washington may bring the matter to the notice of the Secretary of State of the United States, who will consider the subject with him; and the Chinese foreign office may also bring the matter to the notice of the United States minister at Peking and consider the subject with him, to the end that mutual and unqualified benefit may result.

The ten years' limit which is fixed in this bill is such as has been deemed reasonable in all former legislation on this subject. As the object of the treaty was to restrict legislation for a reasonable time, and as the Chinese Government is in full sympathy with this movement, assuredly no one can complain at the length of time.

Section 4 of the bill has for its purpose the adoption of some means of identifying Chinese laborers who were in the United States on the 17th day of November, 1880, or who came into the same prior to the 5th day of August, 1882, and who, under various acts in regard to the subject, have the right to come and go at will. It is not disputed that, owing to the similarity in appearance between these cooly laborers, there is the greatest difficulty in distinguishing one from the other. Hence it was provided that a laborer desiring to visit China and return should procure a certificate or passport, which should contain a full and minute description of his person, and especially of any natural or artificial mark that might tend to distinguish him. These certificates are of high market value in China; and it is charged that a Chinaman leaving this country with such a certificate and not desiring to return would frequently sell it to some Chinaman not entitled to come here, and the difficulty of detecting one from another leads to frequent frauds upon the law. Every Chinaman returning with one of these certificates is subject to a rigid examination, and, as this is not always conclusive, there are appeals to the courts in San Francisco, where these quasi-criminal cases have precedence, and their number blocks the wheels of justice by deferring the trial of civil causes. In order to avoid obscurity this section provides that a Chinaman desiring to go abroad shall provide four photographs of himself; one to be furnished to the collector of the port for preservation as part of the records, and to be used, if necessary, for the future identification of the applicant; one to be pasted in a book of registration, so as to form part of the description of the person registered; one to be pasted to the preliminary certificate, so as to form part of that portion of the certificate describing the person to whom it is issued; and the other to be attached to the return certificate. To those who may insist that this is a violation of the treaty we answer no, for the object of the amended treaty is to exclude the very class of Chinamen who may seek to commit a fraud upon the law. It is a police regulation, and while it is believed to be more effective than the present regulation, of which no complaint has been made, it operates in favor of honesty, as against those who would practice fraud. The honest Chinaman would be benefited, as it gives him facilities for identification, and operates alone against the dishonest person who is not entitled to the favor of the law. Indeed, this means of identification originated in China, as the certificate I now hold in my hand, which is a Chinese certificate, tends to demonstrate. This is not controverted.

The third amendment proposed by the bill prescribes the number of Chinamen who may be permitted to come over on any one ship, to wit, one to every 50 tons, not including of course those who are entitled to come and go at will under the existing treaty. As great abuses have arisen from those who claim to be entitled to come as passengers in transit, this precaution is deemed necessary, and is similar to a like regulation adopted in Canada, Australia, and other countries. It is believed that the whole of these restrictions are in compliance with the provisions of the treaty. We reserve the right to limit, regulate, or suspend the coming of Chinese laborers, but not to absolutely prohibit it. This does not prohibit but merely abridges the right of coming in such numbers at any one time as might prove dangerous to the welfare of society. When taken into consideration that it was the object of the two contracting nations to restrict these laborers from coming among us, and when it is further remembered that the Chinese Government desires to keep her people at home, and we do not wish them among us, and when it is provided that if the restrictions are considered oppressive the Chinese minister at Washington is authorized to call the attention of our Government to what he may deem an infraction or an abridgment of these rights, it is insisted that the treaty should be interpreted with greater liberality than it should be with a nation who had formulated one with the clear and expressed intention of securing the emigration of its subjects to this country.

I have thus, Mr. Chairman, at some length dwelt upon the propriety and explained the necessity for the proposed legislation. I have contrasted cooly labor with our own. I have touched on Chinese demoralization, and I have shown the dangers threatening the peace and prosperity of one of the most beautiful and attractive sections of this Union. And now, in the name of honest labor, in the name of the people of the Pacific States and Territories, and in the name of pure and refined womanhood, and in the name of the whole American people, I appeal to the members of this House to take up this bill at the earliest opportunity and put it upon its passage, as well as to increase the appropriation in the bill now before the House.

Mr. MORROW. In the short time which remains to me I shall not restate the argument in favor of the amendment, nor is it necessary, as I understand there is substantial unanimity here on the part of all the members representing the committee and others in favor of the increased appropriation.

I have only this to say in answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE]. I have examined carefully all these reports concerning Chinese immigration. I have not done it as a matter of mere idle curiosity, looking to a footing here or a footing there, but I have gone through all the details of the returns in the custom-house and the reports of special agents. The result is, I find that the immigration of Chinese on the Pacific coast last year was in excess of the average Chinese immigration for the thirty years prior to the restriction act.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Does the gentleman from California think the increase from $5,000 to $10,000 would be of material benefit?

Mr. MORROW. I believe it would; because it has been a subject of complaint on the part of the Treasury Department and of the customs officers in San Francisco that they have not had the funds to carry the act into execution. I know the law should be made more effectual and such provisions should be made as are substantially contained in the bill originally introduced by myself. I think the effective restriction of immigration would be accomplished and the purposes of the treaty carried into effect by that act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

The question being taken on Mr. MORROW'S amendment, it was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] is recognized to control one hour of the general debate on the land section of the bill.

Mr. RYAN. I yield twenty-five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD].

Mr. LAIRD. When that portion of the bill under consideration shall be reached which I now read I shall offer a motion to strike out these lines—line 963 to line 965:

Protecting public lands: For the protection of public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, $90,000.

During the debate on a like proposition contained in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill a controversy arose in the House concerning the administration of the Land Department by the present Commissioner, and the gentlemen on the other side seemed anxious that the opponents of the present policy of the Land Department should produce some evidence of what we have represented to be the condition of feeling on the part of the settlers and citizens of the section adversely affected by that policy. I hold in my hand a selection from a series of letters received from people in that section of the country complaining of the hardships of the present administration of the Department, some of which letters I will now read. I read first from the preamble of a petition sent here by a large number of settlers of the county of Frontier in the district which I have the honor to represent. This petition, speaking of the order suspending patents, says:

Such suspension is working a very great injury to all classes of business in Western Nebraska by reason of the cloud which such arbitrary action throws upon their titles and others similarly situated; that these settlers are in destitute circumstances, but are worthy citizens, and are deprived by these orders of the chance to borrow money on their lands, and that they can not improve their land and make material progress without money, and that the practical effect is to drive many from that part of the State.

This comes to me signed by the county judge and other officials, and by settlers, whose appeals are entitled to consideration.

One homesteader in Northern Nebraska says:

We in this northwestern part of Nebraska can not be too grateful to the Nebraska members for the interest you are taking in our welfare, for Sparks's orders have virtually put a stop to all improvement. Commissioner Sparks should come out to the front and then he would know how it is himself, and not send his spies and informers here to lie away our titles. I came up here in 1880, and if you remember the winter of 1880–'81 you can form some idea of the hardships we all had to undergo during that long and cold winter to obtain a home on Government land, grinding corn in a coffee-mill and scratching in the snow for acorns. I voted for Grover Cleveland, and now he allows Sparks to make war upon the poor homesteaders who subdue the soil to raise their bread and butter.

Another homesteader from the same section, writing in behalf of himself and his neighbors, says:

If the rulings of Sparks are carried out we homesteaders of the wild West are ruined and our hopes forever blasted. These orders have cast a gloom over the entire Northwest, emigration has fallen off, money is scarce, and produce goes a-begging for want of buyers. We all feel as if a cyclone had passed over. We call upon you to fight this infamous administration of the law; fight like a tiger against injustice and wrong. If conquered by the heartless moneyed men of the East, who are injuring their own money interests, you will return and be welcomed by those whose homes are menaced in defiance of law and reason.

Another grantee of a settler, writing from Western Nebraska on behalf of himself and several others, says:

In 1884 father bought some land and obtained warranty deeds, and finds receipts dated 1883. Patents being withheld on the recent rulings, he can neither raise money nor sell. Sparks seems to be making laws rather than executing them. This is only one case among hundreds.

I submit another letter from a constituent:

DEAR SIR: The actions and rulings of Commissioner Sparks in regard to the issuing of patents as affecting deeding and mortgaging land on final receipts will almost depopulate Southwest Nebraska unless it is reversed.

The idea of prohibiting people from obtaining money enough to live on while they are trying to improve this "Great American Desert" appears to me most ridiculous. The effect of the whole matter will be to force the homesteaders to sell their claims for whatever they can get and leave the country and go back to the densely populated East; and of course the lands will fall into the hands of the cattle syndicates.

It would look very much like this was the intention of the Commissioner "to a man up a tree;" but the more charitable view to take of the case is that Commissioner Sparks has never lived, with a wife and half a dozen ragged children, in a sod house for four or five years trying to prove up on a homestead, and knows but little of the effect of his rulings.

Sincerely, yours,

——— ———.

Another constituent, on behalf of his neighbors, says, from his home at Culbertson:

Day after day some poor half-starved homesteader comes to me and asks me as their State representative to intercede with our member of Congress to use his influence to have their patents issue. * * * Draw on your imagination, and then you will fall short of picturing the sufferings caused by Sparks's rulings. Men who came here with only a team took pre-emptions or homesteads, mortgaged their teams for money to live on through the summer, and make final proof in time on their entries, and mortgage their land to redeem their teams and improve their land, but now not a cent can they realize on their final certificate, and the sheriff sells the team. * * * Only yesterday a man came in and wanted to mortgage his farm with $600 worth of improvements on it to redeem his team, wagon, harness, and cow, mortgaged for only $270, but he could not get it, and he finally gave a man a warranty deed to his farm worth at least $1,200 to redeem his personal property. This is by no means an isolated case.

We have had the grasshopper scourge that depopulated Western Nebraska. In 1875–'76 our section was resettled, and in 1878–'79 the extreme drought again depopulated this section. Now the greater scourge has come. The settlers then had their teams to carry them out, but now they must remain objects of charity. There are claims that should be held for cancellation, but why make the innocent suffer with the guilty? The claim of ex-Postmaster Freese, who lived on it five years, is held for cancellation.

In a letter from a prominent and very thoughtful and intelligent citizen of Iowa, acquainted with the situation in Dakota, a man who had seen the progress of Iowa and the rapid development of Dakota, he says, addressing a Democratic Senator and speaking of Sparks's orders and policy:

The picture of the direful consequences to the settlers of these rulings is not at all overdrawn. A few persons—very few as compared to the whole population—may from selfish interests, incompatible with the general good, decry against the otherwise universal complaint, and affirm that no harm can result to the honest settler. I have been familiar with the men and methods whereby Dakota, for example, has within a few years sprung into a condition having all the essential elements of a permanent commonwealth; a position which demands every facility of business deemed indispensable by communities East of slower growth and more years.

With the precedents of the Land Department and the decisions of the courts before them (settlements having generally been made in conformity with law and requirement) settler and citizen find it difficult to assign a worthy reason for these rulings. They are reluctant to believe the insinuation of some that a mere political partisan motive should have prompted so cruel a repression of the vital stimulus to all social progress and development; that is, the permanence of land titles and the right to enjoy vested rights.

They prefer to ascribe it to a vague and ill-considered desire to emphasize a new administration by some radical changes. * * * Whatever the motive or the object proposed, it has proven most disastrous in its operation.

If such ground had been taken by the Land Office ten years ago, neither would the railroads have been built, nor the country settled as now, nor the many millions' worth of the products of the West been annually shipped to the East. There would have been no West as we see it to-day.

A very intelligent, disinterested, and fair witness, who has been over the counties of Dundy, Hitchcock, Hayes, Chase, Red Willow, and Frontier, in Western Nebraska, where most of the entries have been taken within two years, says—

A candid and fair view of the whole situation convinces the writer that there is very little need, if any, at present for the work of the special agent, providing always that the register and receiver are thoroughly strict in taking testimony when final proof is being made.

From the number of contest cases now constantly on hand it certainly appears that the people will take care that no more fraudulent proofs are made. If a man takes a claim and gets through with it he must comply with the requirements of the law. There are a dozen anxious home-seekers watching for all the loosely held claims, and upon the slightest pretext a claim is "jumped" and protested. It did not require the ill-advised suspension of the issuing of patents nor the mousing about of a special agent to stimulate the efforts of the homesteaders in complying with the homestead laws. The natural demand, the unparalleled rush for claims has put every one upon the lookout, and the home-seeker goes upon his claim with the intention of sticking to it.

Lest it should be supposed that these letters have been selected by me from a partisan motive for the purpose of bearing out an assertion made in heat of argument, I will read from an authority which I take it will be acceptable to gentlemen upon the other side, namely, from the Omaha Herald, edited by Dr. George L. Miller, a prominent advocate and supporter of Mr. Cleveland, I believe a member of the convention that nominated him, and a very strongly indorsed candidate for the office of Postmaster-General in his Cabinet at the time of the forming the same. The article is as follows:

Can the Democratic party longer afford to have its standing before the people jeopardized by the continuance of such a man in office as Land Commissioner Sparks? Can the administration retain Sparks in place without prejudice to it? Mr. Sparks's most recent freak certainly furnishes support for an emphatic "No!" to both questions.

The order issued on the 2d instant by Sparks commanding all registers and receivers in the United States to suspend until the 1st of August next filings or applications for entries of public lands was the most remarkable official blunder ever committed by a Federal Department head. The making or unmaking of laws in this country is intrusted by the Constitution exclusively to Congress. The law made declares that registers and receivers shall receive applications for entry. Commissioner Sparks can not unmake that law, and in attempting to set it aside is guilty of a blunder equivalent to a crime.

Such a rash and reckless official should not be allowed to slosh around at will in this manner. True, his order was reversed by level-headed Secretary Lamar in time to prevent serious trouble; but that does not justify the continuance in power of a man who is a menace to the administration and the dominant party. Turn Sparks out!

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman allow me to make one suggestion here? Would it make any difference to the gentleman's argument if the fact should turn out to be that the order of Commissioner Sparks, to which the gentleman now refers, was issued with the full concurrence of Secretary Lamar, and after it had been subjected to the scrutiny of the President of the United States and approved by him? I assert that to be the fact, and now I ask the gentleman from Nebraska whether that fact would make any difference about his argument?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. That simply extends the wrong further.

Mr. SPRINGER. But suppose there had been a line of similar precedents extending back for fifty years?

Mr. LAIRD. I will answer both the gentlemen at once. If fifty times fifty Presidents, precedents, and Secretaries could be cited as authority for this unwarranted invasion of the laws and the rights of these people, it would make not the slightest difference with my views.

Mr. Chairman, I see by the annual report for 1884 of Commissioner McFarland, of the Land Department, that there were in that year 51,641 pre-emption filings; original homestead entries, 55,045; timber-culture entries, 26,898; making an aggregate of 133,484 entries, involving in all 20,178,532 acres of the public lands.

Out of this the number of cases submitted for investigation by the Land Commissioner in that year under a Republican administration was 3,563. Of these 680 cases were found to be fraudulent, and 953 were found upon investigation to be not fraudulent.

Now, then, if anybody will take the trouble to figure this up, he will find that, making no allowance for the cases that were not investigated to a conclusion, taking out of the 3,563 only the 953 that were found to be good and were passed to patent, the entire number amounts to only 2 per cent. of the total number of entries made during the year 1884. Or, in other words, all of the entries were good save 2 per cent.

I have referred to the report of 1884 on the subject of fraud, and the investigation thereof made by the Commisssoner under a Republican administration, for the purpose of calling attention to the following statement: A tabular statement was prepared by the fraud division of the Land Office for Mr. Commissioner Sparks's annual report for 1885, a statement showing the number of entries canceled upon special agents' reports without giving the entrymen hearings, the number of entries canceled after investigation by special agents and after public hearings, the number canceled for fraud, and afterward reinstated upon testimony taken at hearings, and the number of alleged fraudulent entries voluntarily relinquished by the claimants. This tabular statement was not published by Commissioner Sparks, but the facts were suppressed, contrary to the uniform practice of his predecessors.

The facts if made known would have shown that in nearly every instance where a claimant accused of fraud has been permitted to answer the charges made against him he has succeeded in showing their falsity.

Mr. Chairman, does any man on this floor doubt for an instant that if this statement concerning fraud had borne out the extravagant statements of Commissioner Sparks that 90 per cent. of the Western entries were fraudulent the statement would have been incorporated in his report and scattered broadcast over the world? But instead of publishing the facts he publishes the "opinions" of his spies. What presumption runs against a man who suppresses evidence? Is it not the rule that every presumption is against him? If not, why did he suppress this report?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Does the gentleman mean to say that these receipts are canceled before a hearing?

Mr. LAIRD. Up to a certain time—I think July 31, 1885—that was the order. They were canceled without giving the man whose property was assailed a day in court or a chance to be heard. They were canceled upon the secret report of an agent, which report is not only secret when made but secret in the hands of the Land Commissioner; they were public records affecting the titles of citizens, but were for the private use of the Land Commissioner alone.

The rule up to July 31, 1885, was to cancel all entries on the agent's report without a hearing. During July, 1885, Secretary Lamar modified the practice so as to allow an entryman "a day in court," and this is the way Sparks carries out the order of his superior:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 31, 1885.

Registers and receivers and special agents:

GENTLEMEN: The practice of ordering hearings as a matter of course and without application in cases of entries held for cancellation on special agents' reports is discontinued.

Hereafter when an entry is so held for cancellation the claimant will be allowed sixty days after due notice in which to appeal to the Secretary of the Interior, or to show cause why the entry should be sustained.

Applications for hearings must be accompanied by the sworn statement of the claimant, setting forth specifically the grounds of his defense and what he expects to prove at such hearing. He must also make oath that his application is made in good faith and not for the purpose of delay.

Attorneys appearing for alleged fraudulent entrymen will be required to file the written authority of the claimant for such appearance.

Very respectfully,

W. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will ask the gentleman (I have been advised upon the point, but my information may not be correct) whether in point of fact the very man who complains or charges fraud may not pre-empt the identical land concerning which he makes the charge?

Mr. LAIRD. He may.

Mr. PAYSON. But in every such case he is then the contestant; and there is always a hearing between the contestant and the contestee before the local land office.

Mr. NELSON. Not if the entry is canceled.

Mr. PAYSON. But when a contest is pending, as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. In a case of which I knew something I was informed that the cancellation was made before the hearing, so that the very man upon whose complaint the cancellation is made might himself deliberately squat upon or take up the land in regard to which he has been instrumental in charging fraud.

Mr. LAIRD. That is undoubtedly true, and under this secret system is often practiced. The man who furnishes "opinions" upon which to found an agent's report gets the land of the settler as his reward.

It appears by the report of Commissioner Sparks for 1885 (pages 6 and 7) that there were 47,944 pre-emption filings, 50,877 homestead filings, and 30,988 timber-culture entries, aggregating 129,811 entries of all kinds. On pages 320 and 321 of Commissioner Sparks's report for the same year it appears that the total number of cases investigated by the special agents was 2,452, which is less than 2 per cent. of the total number of entries for the year 1885.

The total number of entries of all kinds made in the State of Nebraska during the year 1885, as shown on pages 282 to 286, was 37,680. The total number of cases of different kinds referred to the special agents for investigation in the State of Nebraska during that year was 60. That is, one-sixth of 1 per cent. of the entries made in the State of Nebraska were alleged to be fraudulent.

Or, in other words, of a total of 37,680 entries, 60 were referred to agents to investigate, and pending that investigation Commissioner Sparks suspends action on 37,620 cases presumed to be innocent while he hunts for 60 cases supposed to be fraudulent. Under the merciful construction of Sparks 37,620 entrymen, representing 188,100 people, are permitted to starve while Sparks theoretically vindicates the majesty of the law.

While Sparks was suspending 37,680 cases in Nebraska on account of 60 cases of supposed fraud, why did he not suspend the entries in the State of Louisiana, where there were 90 cases of supposed fraud (see page 321, Sparks's report for 1885) at the same time, or in Florida, where there were 64 cases?

[During the delivery of the foregoing remarks, when the hammer fell,

Mr. LAIRD said: I ask leave to print that portion of my remarks which I have not had the opportunity to deliver.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I shall have no objection if the gentleman does not indulge in any personal remarks further than he has done. I do not object to printing anything which is not of a personal character.

Mr. LAIRD. I shall endeavor to avoid "offensive partisanship." I want to assure the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] that this is not a partisan question in my part of the country. Democrats and Republicans alike join in common condemnation.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. With the understanding that there shall be no personal or partisan remarks, I have no objection.

Mr. LAIRD. I will be answerable to the House under the rules for what I may put into the RECORD.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I shall object unless with the understanding I have stated, which is always demanded upon your side of the House.

Mr. LAIRD. What is the gentleman's statement?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I shall object unless the gentleman pledges himself that he will not, in extending his speech, indulge in any personal or partisan remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois must object or not object; he can not object conditionally.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. With the understanding I have stated I do not object. That is the usual understanding in such cases.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understood the gentleman to say that the contests between the various settlers or those desiring to make settlement would suffice to protect the interests of the settlers and to protect the Government against fraud.

Mr. LAIRD. It will, sir.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Is that ground set forth in your speech?

Mr. LAIRD. Yes sir, it is plainly shown.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to permitting the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] to print the residue of his remarks.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Chairman, in what I shall say in support of the motion to strike out the portions of the bill which appropriate nearly $90,000 to pay the per diem and expenses of the spies of the Land Department I do not desire to be understood as making any personal attack on the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office, nor as attacking the administration of that office for political effect.

I shall not speak as a partisan at all, but as a citizen, defending, as is my duty, the legal rights of the people I represent and others of the Great West from the hardships of the calamitous rulings and policy of the Land Department as administered by Mr. Sparks. I shall, of course, avoid all offensive partisanship and appeal frankly and fearlessly to the sense of justice of this House, and ask its members to protect the citizens and settlers of the country west of the Missouri River and between that and the Pacific Ocean from what I must believe is the mistake rather than the malice of the Land Commissioner. The questions involved are of the greatest importance to the entire territory named in the order of the Land Commissioner, dated April 3, 1885, and scarcely of less interest to all the rest of the country, whether North, South, or East. That order is as follows:

SUSPENSION OF ENTRIES.

Final action in this office upon all entries of the public lands, except private cash entries, and such scrip locations as are not dependent upon acts of settlement and cultivation, is suspended in the following localities, namely:

All west of the first guide meridian west in Kansas. All west of range 17 west in Nebraska. The whole of Colorado except land in late Ute reservation. All of Dakota, Idaho, Utah, Washington, New Mexico, Montana, Wyoming, and Nevada, and that portion of Minnesota north of the indemnity limits of the Northern Pacific Railroad and east of the indemnity limits of Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railroad.

In addition, final action in this office will be suspended upon all timber entries under the act of June 3, 1878; also upon all cases of desert-land entries.

W. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

APRIL 3, 1885.

As appears by the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the number of pre-emption entries made during the year was 47,946, which he says would cover 7,671,360 acres of land. The number of homestead entries made during the year is placed at 50,877, embracing an area of 7,415,885 acres. The number of pre-emption entries unacted upon under the operation of the foregoing order at the close of the fiscal year was 32,374, and the number of homestead entries unacted on was 28,811—making a total of settlers' claims unacted on of 61,185, which would represent 9,789,600 acres of land.

The Commissioner states that final proof was made in 22,066 of the 50,877 homestead entries, but does not state that patents issued in any of such cases. It is fair, therefore, to presume that no patents have issued to any of the 22,066 homesteaders who have made final proof. This would give 3,530,560 acres to add to the 9,789,600, making a total of 13,320,160 acres of homestead and pre-emption land suspended.

To any one conversant with the land laws of the United States, it is known that any homesteader or pre-emptor of the public lands, having complied with the laws as to settlement and improvement of the tract taken by him, can make final proof on the same at the expiration of six months, and on the payment of the minimum or double minimum price, as the case may be, receive a final receipt for the land, which final receipt, under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and the decisions of the State supreme courts, has always been treated as absolute title, and would be treated so now but for this order, which operates as an impeachment of title, as well as an impeachment of the good faith of the 84,251 settlers making the settlements and proof thereon.

As the report of the Commissioner relates to the 30th of June, 1885, all of the persons who had made settlement on the public domain by that time would now be entitled to make, and where able no doubt would have made, final proof on their lands and received their final receipts, provided they could show, as probably ninety-nine in every hundred of them can, compliance with the law as to settlement and improvement. This would make the number of homestead and pre-emption settlers on the public domain of the United States now possessed of absolute title (final receipt) and entitled to patent without delay or hinderance, as shown by the Commissioner's report and estimated, 84,251 and over. That is, 84,251 persons, heads of families, representing at a fair estimate a population of 252,753 persons, under the ordinary operations of the law holding absolute title to 13,320,160 acres of land, and now deprived of their right to control that property—robbed of their vested right by the order above cited, and since its revocation by the honorable Secretary of the Interior still deprived of their right to own or control their own property by the failure of the Commissioner to proceed with the public business according to law; robbed of their own by a policy which seeks to subject every one of the 84,251 valid titles to the examination either of a special agent in the field or an unauthorized circumlocution office erected by the Commissioner in the General Land Office, and where some 31,583 cases ready for patent are now filed up waiting the Jove-like nod of the honorable Commissioner by whose discretion we own or do not own, as it suits his brittle humor, 13,320,160 acres of land to which we have acquired title by compliance with the laws, and which title the courts say is good.

The Government has received $1.25 per acre for all the land taken under the pre-emption or commutation of homestead law, and it is not an unfair assumption to say that the Government has by this time received from these settlers for this land the sum of $16,650,200. And still, according to the ruling and policy of Commissioner Sparks, it is not theirs and will not be until he has "got through with them," which will take him one and one-half years, provided we give money enough to hire one hundred spies, or five years if we do not, that is assuming the correctness of Mr. Sparks's report, May 6, 1886, to the Senate. Meantime the settler owns the land according to all the courts, and does not own it according to Commissioner Sparks. The settler owns the land for the purpose of paying taxes on it, but does not own it for the purpose of selling it or raising money on it.

Let this Congress refuse the supplies of money with which the Commissioner proposes to hire a hundred agents to hunt down ninety-nine men in the laudable effort to catch one land thief. Let them refuse this, and pass a resolution directing the Land Commissioner to pass to patent all the final homestead and pre-emption entries made in the district of agricultural lands, say, in Kansas, Nebraska, Eastern Colorado, and Dakota, against which no specific charge of fraud is made and no contest is pending.

Let this be done and the settlers would be able to raise from $200 to $400 each on their claims with which to make life tolerable, to pay their taxes, purchase seed, buy a team, or raise a roof above their heads.

In this connection I call the attention of the House to the effect of the ruling and policy of the Commissioner on investments in the West.

LINCOLN, NEBR., December 15, 1885.

DEAR SIR: I have to advise that we shall be obliged to make it a rule not to make loans on pre-emptions or commuted homesteads until the entries have been approved for patent by the Land Department at Washington. Heretofore we have had such a rule, but during the past summer have made some exceptions to it, and we now find that owing to the late rulings of Commissioner Sparks there is going to be a much greater percentage of such entries canceled than under the former administration; and we also find that the attention of Eastern investors has been directed to this matter, owing to the discussion which has been had in the newspapers about it, and Eastern parties frequently write to know if we are making loans on that class of titles. So that I am afraid it will injure our credit in the East if we loan on these two classes of entries.

We therefore can not take any such applications, and if you have such applications on hand, or any loans awaiting completion, do not close them until further advised. If you have any such cases, please write me at once and I will decide and see what we can do.

Yours truly,

LOMBARD INVESTMENT COMPANY.

The policy as to loans in the western part of Nebraska adopted by the Lombard Investment Company is followed by all the other companies doing business in that State, and is also the rule in other States and Territories named in the order of April 3, 1885.

Mr. Chairman, I come now to the revocation of Mr. Commissioner Sparks's maiden effort by the Secretary of the Interior. The two are given together, and if the gentlemen who will arise to defend the administration of Sparks can get any consolation out of the language of the Secretary revoking the April 3 order, they are all welcome to it.

The order is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., April 6, 1886.

SIR: On the 3d of April, 1885, you issued the following order:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., April 3, 1885.

"Final action in this office upon all entries of public lands, except private cash entries and such scrip locations as are not dependent upon acts of settlement and cultivation, is suspended in the following localities, namely:

"All west of the first guide meridian west in Kansas. All west of ranges seventeen west in Nebraska. The whole of Colorado, except land in late Ute reservation. All of Dakota, Idaho, Utah, Washington, New Mexico, Montana, Wyoming, and Nevada, and that portion of Minnesota north of the indemnity limits of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and east of the indemnity limits of Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railroad.

"In addition, final action in this office will be suspended upon all timber entries under the act of June 3, 1878. Also upon all cases of desert-land entries.

"Very respectfully,

"W. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner."

THE COMMISSIONER GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

Whatever necessity may have existed at the time of its promulgation has ceased to be sufficient to longer continue an order suspending all action, and involving in a common condemnation the innocent and guilty, the honest and the dishonest. While I earnestly urge the exercise of the strictest vigilance to prevent, by all the agencies in your power, the consummation of fraudulent or wrongful land claims, yet, when the vigilance of all the agencies shows no substantial evidence of fraud or wrong, honest claims should not be delayed, or their consideration refused on general reports or rumors.

The above order, as issued by you, is therefore revoked, and you will proceed in the regular, orderly, and lawful consideration and disposal of the claims suspended by it.

Very respectfully,

L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary.

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman kindly note the language of the Secretary:

Whatever necessity may have existed at the time of its promulgation has ceased to be sufficient to longer continue an order suspending all action, and involving in a common condemnation the innocent and guilty, the honest and dishonest.

When the vigilance of all the agencies shows no substantial evidence of fraud or wrong, honest claims should not be delayed or their consideration refused on general reports or rumors.

This is the language of the Secretary of the Interior; it is likewise the language of a man who evidently believes that the settlers on the Western plains have some rights that even the Commissioner of the General Land Office ought to respect. It is likewise the language of a gentleman who is evidently tired of some things and disgusted with somebody.

Assuming, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Lamar was talking to a man up a tree we could all guess who that man was, and could all doubtless agree that in the opinion of the Secretary it was about time for that "Zaccheus" to "come down." "When the vigilance of all the agencies shows no substantial evidence of fraud or wrong," as seen by the great head of the Department of the Interior, is it not about time for us to profit by the gracious advice of the amiable gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT], and not "empty the contents of the Treasury into the streets for the benefit of those who will not work," but who are perfectly willing to waste millions of Government money in the ineffectual effort to find fraud which haunts Mr. Commissioner Sparks, but is invisible to the official eye of his official superior, the honorable Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. Chairman, I take it that Secretary Lamar is a good witness, even from the standpoint of the gentlemen on the right [Democrats], and also that while he may not "hanker" after fraud, as does Mr. Commissioner Sparks, still even Mr. Sparks will admit that Mr. Lamar knows something about fraud; and will further admit that Mr. Secretary is not one of the 90 per cent. frauds, and that his evidence can not be swept away by the insinuation that he is suspected of fraud himself. He is a witness called by Sparks, and can not be impeached. And, sir, when the Secretary of the Interior, the responsible head of this great Department, after one year of observation of the workings of Mr. Sparks's order, after four years of trial of the system of espionage upon the people, makes use of this language—

Yet when the vigilance of all the agencies shows no substantial evidence of fraud or wrong, honest claims should not be delayed or their consideration refused on general reports or rumors—

I take it, sir, that when that officer makes use of that language it has some significance among some men in Congress and out of it, and that we shall do well to heed it, and cease the attempt to silence the cry of fraud by pouring Government gold down the throat of every lunatic or paid spy who yells for the edification of the volcanic gentleman who presides over the General Land Office, or for the emoluments incident to the yelp itself.

Mr. Chairman, what "evidence" is it that the Secretary of the Interior characterizes as "general reports or rumors?" It is the evidence, so called, collected by these secret agents of the Government, bought in open market by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and in the face of the denunciation by Secretary Lamar as "general report and rumor," we are asked to buy $90,000 more of that misrepresentation which after years of search and investigation Secretary Lamar says has shown "no substantial evidence of fraud," has produced no better result than that which he stigmatizes as "general report and rumor."

While the order of April 3, 1885, has been revoked, the general policy of the Commissioner has not been changed; the wrongs which honest settlers suffered under its operation have not been remedied. It is to-day violated by Mr. Sparks in spirit, and we are asked to contribute $90,000 more from the public Treasury to aid in the further violation of law and equity.

Commissioner Sparks, in his report to the Senate, dated May 6, 1886, discloses the fact that notwithstanding the Secretary of the Interior ordered him on the 6th of April, 1886, to "proceed to the regular, orderly and lawful consideration of the claims suspended" by the order of April 3, 1885, there still remain thirty-one thousand five hundred and eighty-three final entries not acted on, and he further discloses that unless he is permitted to put one hundred of these special agents in the field it will take five years in which to complete the examination of the cases which he proposes to submit to them! Is this the "regular order" required of the Commissioner by the Secretary?

By the statement of May 6, 1886, of the Commissioner, which, in my judgment, is minnified by one-half, that officer holds the vested rights of 31,583 persons, representing a population of 157,915 people, subject to a secret examination, which he announces will take five years to make unless we yield to his demand! This Government has received from the sale of these 31,583 claims of commuted homesteads or preemptions, representing about 5,063,280 acres, the sum of $6,316,600 paid by settlers, which Commissioner Sparks having coolly pocketed, now bids them whistle for their patents!

Mr. Chairman, upon what warrant of fact is this suspension predicated, this examination ordered? In the light of the extraordinary consequences of evil to the States and Territories affected by this policy of the Commissioner, and of which the proposed appropriation under consideration is the vital part, it becomes important to know upon what basis of fact this wholesale slaughter of titles and rights of the citizens of the West is based. The facts upon which the Commissioner relies are drawn from the reports of some eighteen "special agents." (See report of Commissioner of General Land Office for 1885.)

These "special grants" are relied upon to impeach the sworn testimony of 84,251 final entrymen, backed by the sworn evidence of 166,502 disinterested witnesses, who in turn are supported and certified by competent officers of the Government to be persons entitled to credit; and in addition to all this there is behind every one of these final entries the official and judicial finding of the trusted local land officers of the Government that each entryman has proved to his satisfaction that he has complied with the laws of the United States authorizing the taking of public land.

This so-called "evidence" of eighteen "special agents" is relied upon to overcome the testimony of 250,753 witnesses, and also the presumption of good faith on the part of public officers who have approved the final proof of these entrymen. That is, in the mind of Commissioner Sparks the report, not under oath, not subject to examination by the party secretly accused, or his counsel, of eighteen "special agents," who must in the nature of the case speak from mere hearsay, from "common report and rumor," from the general unguarded say-so of persons whose motives they can not and do not know, and who are not responsible for lies, outweighs the sworn evidence of a quarter of a million of people, 166,502 of whom are disinterested, and who must disclose their qualifications under oath, and who are subject to all the pains and penalties of perjury.

The "evidence," so called, of these eighteen "spotters" of the Land Department is what the honorable Secretary refers to as "general report and rumor." This is the investigation Secretary Lamar refers to when he says:

> When the vigilance of all the agencies shows no substantial evidence of fraud or wrong, honest claims should not be delayed or their consideration refused.

Some of the evidence (reports) of the special agents would seem to commend itself to the ridicule of all reasonable men by statements of this kind:

> I give it as my opinion that in Kansas, Nebraska, and Dakota the proportion is 90 per cent. to 10 per cent. of bona fide and possibly successful cultivators.

Here the gentleman is speaking of timber-culture claims, and, on the strength of this opinion of a man hired to hunt down these settlers of the frontier an order issues suspending not only timber-culture patents, but all patents. When before, with the approval of civilized men, was the opinion of an informer taken as ground for the suspension of the due course of law? No one from the West, that region which has suffered most from the aggressions of the landed corporations, but will sympathize with the Commissioner in his effort to protect the public domain from the encroachments of the corporations of all kinds, whether cattle-kings, so called, or railroads.

We do not object to the suspension of timber-culture entries or to the suspension of any entry of whatever kind whenever a specific charge of fraud is made against that entry. We do protest against a cloud being cast upon the honest claims of settlers on the agricultural lands of Nebraska and other States and Territories by the dust raised by eighteen spies whose official heads hang upon the slender thread of the caprice of an administration mad with reform, and a department which believes itself laboring with a mountain of fraud, which seems to breathe an atmosphere of suspicion, and which appears more than willing to see in the sweat-stained face of the Western settler a masked and contemptible scoundrel, intent on robbing the people of their great patrimony, the public land.

Does not this Congress understand that in Nebraska, where every hundred and sixty acres of agricultural land is worth from $500 to $1,000 as soon as patented, and where there are from five to twenty claimants for every claim, where every man has the right to contest any entry, fraud upon the public domain is an impossibility? Does it not occur to the honorable Commissioner that he is doing in these States and Territories, where the land is valuable for agriculture, the very thing that the land-grabbers and thieves want done?

This order makes it impossible for an honest settler to raise a dollar on his final receipt; failing in this, he must abandon the land or stay on it and starve. The result is plain; he is compelled to sell, to sacrifice for almost nothing what has cost him the torture of long toil to get; his claim is "gobbled" by the land shark, the cattle syndicates, and he is sacrificed to a special agent who rides through the region of "suspected lands" in a palace-car and writes lurid reports of crimes and shames that smack of the sensational, that ought no more to be received as evidence of the character of the homesteaders than the illustrations in the Police Gazette ought to be received as evidence of the fireside morality of New York.

Mr. Speaker, these men are poor—good proof they are not rascals. They are not prepared for a siege, much less can they withstand for years the fire of all the official batteries. They have some rights as human beings; they are not wholesale liars. Men do not commit perjury by the hundred thousand.

This order covers half a continent. Men do not sin by the continent—they do not attempt to take an empire by perjury. Men are not punished geographically, or condemned by the million without their day in court. The reasonable doubt which saves the wretch trembling for his life, "the presumption of innocence" which guards us all, speaks for these men and demands that the heel of the Department of the Interior be taken from the neck of these settlers.

Let this "power for evil" which has been too long the property of one officer be taken from him not in the name of fraud but in the name of justice and the orderly administration of the law. Let this Congress, acting upon the sustained judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, refuse to invest the millions of the people in the purchase of "rumors and general reports." Let it vote not these items, which are an insult to the integrity and a menace to the vested rights of a quarter of a million American citizens. Let it refuse to permit a great department of the Government to be prostituted through imposition or credulity into an engine of oppression. Take this power from the head of a bureau who forgets that the presumptions as to honesty of his fellow-men do not change with the change of a political administration.

Mr. Chairman, so much for authority of fact produced by the Commissioner in support of a policy interdicted by his official superior, but still pursued by him in defiance of an order which terminates in the following emphatic manner:

> The above order (April 3, 1885) as issued by you is therefore revoked, and you will proceed in the regular, orderly, and lawful consideration and disposal of the claims suspended by it.

What would be the lawful consideration to which the order of Secretary Lamar limits the investigations of the Commissioner? If limited to legal bounds, the investigations of the Commissioner must be confined to inquiries into frauds committed prior to the issuance of a final receipt. If I rightly comprehend the law as laid down by the courts and authorities he is estopped from all inquiry into the sufficiency of the proof upon which a final receipt is based. He can not in any case go behind the action of the local land officers in awarding a final receipt, unless the question be presented to him on appeal. He has no original jurisdiction in the matter. His orders annulling a final receipt are void. The final receipt is a contract of purchase, and he can not impair that contract which is complete when executed by the local land officers, who are alone clothed with power to execute it.

Mr. Chairman, this theory of the case presents a legal issue of the gravest character, for if the Commissioner of the General Land Office is pursuing a policy which is void, if he has no legal power to set aside a final receipt, if he can not go behind the finding of the register and receiver except on appeal, then there is no warrant or authority on our part to vote an appropriation of money here unless it be asked for the investigation of frauds committed or attempted by claimants prior to issuance of final receipt. The Commissioner clearly discloses that he wants this money to "work up" evidence which shall become the basis for the cancellation of final-entry cases, not on appeal, but by the exercise of an original jurisdiction which he assumes he has. That the power to do this rests alone with the committees, is, in my judgment, established by an unbroken line of authorities. That the Commissioner is a mere ministerial officer, absolutely without power in the premises, except he obtain it by appeal, is, I think, established beyond controversy by the following authorities.

In a recent decision in the circuit court of the United States in Oregon—Smith vs. Ewing et al., the court held—(Copp's Land Owner, volume 12, No. 7, pages 104, 5)—

That a certificate of purchase issued in due form, in favor of a pre-emptor, for land subject to entry under the pre-emption law, can not be canceled or set aside by the Land Department for alleged fraud in obtaining it; and that in such case the Government must seek redress in the courts, where the matter may be heard and determined according to the law applicable to the rights of individuals under like circumstances.

The right of a party holding a certificate of purchase of public land and that of his grantee is a right in and to property of which neither of them can or ought to be deprived without due process of law.

The Land Department had attempted to cancel a final certificate upon rumor and report.

The court said:

Has the Commissioner any such power? It is not given to him in terms by any act of Congress that I am aware of. His right to pass upon conflicting claims to the land under the pre-emption law seems confined to cases that come before him on appeal from the decision of the register and receiver in case of a contest between two or more settlers under such law. Doubtless the Commissioner may also refuse to give effect to a certificate and issue a patent thereon when it appears from the face thereof, or the proof accompanying it, that it was issued contrary to law. But if the land is open to pre-emption and the proof is formally sufficient, as that it is made by the oaths of the proper and prescribed number of witnesses to the necessary facts, the Commissioner can not disallow the certificate or refuse to issue a patent thereon because the proof is not satisfactory to his mind or because it is suggested to him that it is false. The law devolves the determination of that question on the register and receiver (R. S., § 2263), and it can only come before the Commissioner on an appeal from their decision by a party to a contest before them.

When a certificate of purchase has been issued to a pre-emptor in due form and no appeal has been taken from the decision or action of the register and receiver the land described in the certificate becomes the property of the pre-emptor. He has the equitable title thereto and has a right to the legal one as soon as the patent can issue in the due course of proceedings. And he can dispose of the same and pass his interest therein as if the purchase had been made from a private person. Carroll vs. Safford, 3 How., 460; Myers vs. Croft, 13 Wall., 291; Camp vs. Smith, 2 Minn., 155; Cornelius vs. Kissel, 58 Wis., 237; Bull vs. Stiles, 35 Ill.

In Perry vs. O'Hanlon, 11 Mo., 585, the supreme court of Missouri held that a cancellation of a pre-emption certificate by the Commissioner was a nullity. To the same effect is the ruling in Prill vs. Stiles, 35 Ill., 309; Cornelius vs. Kissel, 58 Wis., 241.

The acts of Congress have given to the register and receiver of the land office the power of deciding upon claims to the right of pre-emptors; that upon these questions they act judicially; that no appeal having been taken from their decision it follows as a consequence that it is conclusive and irreversible. This is true of every tribunal acting judicially while acting in the sphere of their jurisdiction. (Wilcox vs. Jackson, 13 Peters, 498.)

In the course of their duty the officers of that department (the Land Department) are constantly called upon to hear the testimony as to matters presented for their consideration, and to pass upon its competency, credibility, and weight. In that respect they exercise a judicial function, and therefore it has been held in various instances by this court that their judgment as to matters of fact properly determined by them is conclusive when brought to notice in a collateral proceeding. Their judgment in such cases is like that of other special tribunals upon matters within their exclusive jurisdiction, unassailable except by direct proceedings for its correction or annulment. (Smelting Company vs. Kent, 104 U. S. Reports, 640.)

The appropriate officers of the Land Department have constituted a special tribunal to decide such questions (pre-emption proofs), and their decisions are final to the same extent that those of other judicial or quasi tribunals are. (Vance vs. Burbank, 101 United States Reports, 519.)

An actual settler upon the public lands of the United States, who has filed the proof required by the act of Congress of 1830, chapter 208, and has paid the price of the land to the receiver, can not be deprived of his land by the department. (9 How., 314.)

In Myers vs. Croft (13 Wall., 291), the Supreme Court held that there was no lawful restriction upon the power of alienation after final proof and payment had been made; and in the recent case of Quinby vs. Conlan (104 U. S., 420), the same court said: "This court held (Myers vs. Croft), looking at the purpose of prohibition, that it did not forbid the sale of the land after the entry was effected—that is, after the right to a patent had become vested—but did apply to all prior transfers."

When the purchase-money has been paid under the pre-emption laws and the receiver's receipt issued to the purchaser by the local land office, the title is vested in the purchaser, and the land ceases to be under the control of the Government; the purchaser has a vested right that can not be interfered with except by a judicial tribunal. (Frisbie vs. Whitney, 9 Wall., 187; 37 Cal., 475.)

The eminent jurist and text writer, Hon. T. M. Cooley, in his opinion, Boyce vs. Danz (29 Mich., 146), says:

"The action of the register and receiver of the United States land office in accepting the proofs furnished by a pre-emptor as satisfactory, and receiving his money and issuing to him the usual duplicate receipt, is a judicial determination of his rights which is conclusive in all collateral proceedings."

Judge Cooley further says that he knows of no act of Congress which authorizes the Commissioner of the General Land Office to review and reverse the register and receiver's action in a case where there has been no adverse claim under the pre-emption laws. (See also 13 Pet., 498, and 9 How., 333.)

If the honorable Commissioner of the United States Land Office should commit the error of attempting to cancel a title by arrogating to his office the powers of a court—that is, after the title has parted from the Government and become vested in the individual—his act will be annulled by the courts when a contest arises between parties claiming title to the lands upon his ruling. (Shepley vs. Cowen, 91 U. S. R. (1 Otto), 330; 45 Wis., 196, Sheldon vs. Kearne.)

After the Government has sold land by certificate it holds the legal title until the patent issues, but only in trust for the purchaser, and can not act judicially and determine that the purchaser is not entitled to the land. (Arnold vs. Grimes, 2 Iowa, 1.)

See authorities in harmony:

Cavender vs. Smith, 5 Clarke (Iowa), 189; Arnold vs. Grimes, 2 Clarke, 1; Carroll vs. Safford, 3 How., 460; Morton vs. Blankenship, 5 Mo., 346; Carman vs. Johnson, 29 Mo., 94; Bagnell vs. Broderick, 13 Pet., 450; Forbes vs. Hall, 34 Ill., 167; McDowell vs. Morgan, 28 Ill., 532.

The patent is not the title, but only additional evidence of the title. (Washburn on Real Property, third edition, section 526, volume 3.)

And this text writer further says:

The granting of a patent is a ministerial act; it does not pass the title, but is merely evidence that it has before passed; the entry and payment of the purchase-money virtually has the effect of creating the title to lands purchased.

The certificate of the register of the land office that a purchase has been made of lands is of as high a nature as a patent itself. (Wash. on Real Property, section 527, volume 3.)

A purchaser from the United States by the act of entry and payment acquires an inchoate legal title which may be alienated, will descend, and may be divested in the same manner as any other legal title. (Ibid., section 528.)

The patent does not invest the purchaser with any additional property in the land; it only gives him better legal evidence of the title which he first acquired by certificate. He could in the mean time sell and convey the land as completely before he obtained the patent as he could after. (Ibid., page 179.)

The idle decision of the Commissioner that he cancels a title is of no force. The Commissioner is not a court to divest citizens of the United States of their property; he, together with the Secretary of the Interior, might be called a quasi-court for the purpose of establishing rules of practice in disposing of the public lands, but having once disposed of them, their power ceases in relation to those lands. That they are disposed of under the pre-emption laws, upon final proof by cash entry and the issuing of the certificate of purchase, is an established principle of law too strong to be questioned. (Wash. on R. E., volume 3, page 180, third edition.)

Secretary Lamar says:

In Thomas vs. Saint Joe and Denver City Railroad Company this Department held: Each of the three elements of which this transaction is composed forms an essential part thereof, the application, the affidavit, and the payment of money; and when the application is presented, the affidavit made, and the money paid an entry is made, a right is vested.

He reaffirms this in Gilbert vs. Spearing. (See The Reporter, April, 1886, page 904.)

Mr. Chairman, these authorities, running from the text-books through the decisions of the supreme courts of the Western States and culminating in the Supreme Court of the United States, demonstrate by an unbroken line of authorities that the power to set aside a final receipt rests alone with the courts, and not with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, unless he acquires jurisdiction thereof by appeal from the ruling of the court of original jurisdiction, the register and receiver of the local United States land office. From the rule hereby established it follows that the money given to the Commissioner with which to buy fraud would be thrown away. He can buy fraud, but he can not buy jurisdiction over that fraud. Power is fortunately not for sale, and particularly judicial power.

If the country has been wronged in 90 per cent. of the entries, as alleged by Commissioner Sparks on the authority of his agents, let him go to the courts and through them bring an action to set aside the final receipts obtained through fraud. Let him go to law if he wants to; the courts and not Congress have the power he wishes to usurp. And before the courts, thank God, there will be no secret reports, no confidential betrayal of the property rights of the settlers. They will be entitled to their day in court, and it will not be in the power of the Government to deprive them of their rights except by due process of law. They will be entitled to the treatment of civilized beings; be allowed to examine the complaint, to look at the subpœna, and know the names of, and confront, the accusing witnesses. They will have the blessed right to cross-examine the spies who now condemn in secret. They will be tried and not robbed.

In the light of these decisions it appears that the demand of the Commissioner in this bill for $90,000 with which to hunt fraud is a demand on the legislative branch of the Government made by the executive branch for money to be expended in the furtherance of an attempt of an executive and ministerial officer to usurp the powers of the judiciary. Let the honorable Commissioner prove all that he seems to think he can, and let him cancel the final entries (receipts) and withhold the patents and all this for fraud, and he has accomplished nothing. His collateral assault upon the vested rights (final receipts) of settlers is a nullity, a mere legal nothing. He will have accomplished nothing save the squandering of the millions Congress may throw away in the effort to clothe Sparks with the three great powers of the Government, the executive, the legislative, and the judicial personally, and might be willing to see him commit a rape of the judicial power, and, for that matter, of the other powers if they came in "handy."

It would make things lively; we should have the reign of "eternal smash." But for one I shall have to curb my desire to behold the "wrecks of matter and the crush of worlds" in deference to official duty, and the Commissioner will have to "restrain his impetuosity" or resign.

I come now, Mr. Chairman, to the consideration of the veto by the Land Commissioner, not of a proposed law but of an existing statute, or rather of three existing statutes—that allowing citizens of the United States to take land under the pre-emption law, under the timber-culture, and under the desert-land acts. These laws were passed by Congress, approved by the President, and unquestioned by the courts, and yet Mr. Sparks on June 2 suspends their operation. He repeals and vetoes existing law. Here is his order:

[Circular.]

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 2, 1886.

To registers and receivers United States land offices.

GENTLEMEN: The repeal of the "pre-emption," "timber-culture," and "desert-land" laws being now the subject of consideration by Congress, all applications to enter lands under said laws are hereby suspended from and after this date until the 1st day of August, 1886, and you are hereby directed to receive no filings or new applications for entry under said laws during said time.

WM. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

And here is the order of the Secretary of the Interior suspending Sparks and his order:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 4, 1886.

To registers and receivers United States land offices:

GENTLEMEN: Based upon satisfactory evidence that an unusual number of entries under the pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land laws are at this time being made anticipating the action of Congress repealing said laws, and following numerous precedents of this office and Department deemed to be in substantial harmony therewith, the following order, approved by the Secretary, was on the 2d instant issued to you:

"The repeal of the 'pre-emption,' 'timber-culture,' and 'desert-land' laws being now the subject of consideration by Congress, all applications to enter lands under said laws are hereby suspended from and after this date until the 1st day of August, 1886, and you are hereby directed to receive no filings or new applications for entry under said laws during said time."

Now, in view of serious question as to the existence of sufficient absolute legal authority therefor, the same is hereby revoked.

WM. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

Approved:

L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary.

Mr. Chairman, what justification is attempted for this invasion of the constitutional powers of the legislative department of the Government?

The justification is this: The repeal of the pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land laws being now the subject of consideration by Congress, all applications to enter lands under said laws are hereby suspended until the 1st day of August, 1886.

Mr. Chairman, how are the "mighty fallen?" I had supposed that what little legislative power there was in this country was by the Constitution of the United States fixed in Congress. It seems not. The Constitution was supposed to be the only limitation on our power. So the fathers taught, but the fathers had not heard of Sparks. And now we hold our powers subject to the limitations of the Constitution and the discretion of Sparks.

Mr. Chairman, where are those gentlemen on that side [Democratic] to whom the Constitution was from "aforetime" given in special charge? Where are the guardians of the "ark of the covenant?" Where are the constitutional pillars of the political temple? Will they not come forward and defend us from this "mad bull" in the constitutional "china shop?"

It occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that some years ago I heard something about "centralization" and the unwarranted interference of the executive department with the political affairs of the people—I heard, and we all heard it. It was the slogan of all your (Demecratic) political battles. Here is a case of unwarranted interference with the property rights of the citizens of the West and an unwarranted interference with the constitutional powers of Congress, which is unprecedented in the history of constitutional government. And I ask that you come to the rescue; particularly I appeal to the gentleman from Texas, to whom the Constitution is peculiarly dear, who sits eternal on the Democratic constitutional Sinai and sounds the alarm. I call on him to either justify Sparks or defend Congress and the settlers from these indefensible invasions and usurpations of power by a ministerial officer. Is it not time that notice was served on the faithful that one of the fathers of the herd was loose and that it was time to call a halt and have a "round-up?"

Mr. Chairman, suppose we examine the justification of this order of June 2 from another standpoint. The Land Commissioner orders the suspension of pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land entries because of the probable passage by Congress of a law repealing these laws. Now, if Mr. Sparks was actuated by honest motives in suspending these laws, if he sincerely desires to protect the public land from aggressions of thieves and monopolists, why does he not make his order broad enough to cover all the mischief?

His annual report for 1885 shows that there were 473,000 acres of public land sold in the United States during the year 1885 at private sale, without settlement, without competition in the bidding, without any restriction as to the quantity that any man could purchase, without requiring the purchaser to be a citizen of the United States. One man, and he an alien, could have bought it all. Nearly all of this 473,000 acres so sold, without settlement and without competition, was located in the South. Had that anything to do with the one-sided nature of the Commissioner's orders and policy?

His reason for suspending the law in the West and denying the right of settlers in that country to take land according to law is that Congress is considering the repeal of certain laws. But Congress at the same time and in the same bill was considering the repeal of the law allowing the purchase at private sale of the valuable Government lands in the South—now withdrawn from settlement and subject to unrestricted sale.

There were over one hundred and fifty cases of fraud from the Southern States even under the lax laws as to purchase, and still Mr. Sparks sees no occasion to interfere with the laws which permit monopolists to "gobble" all the land in the public-land States of the South, but finds himself divinely commissioned in the name of fraud to choke the life out of the settlers of the West.

How stands the fraud account between these States, Mr. Chairman? Commissioner Sparks's 1885 report, page 321, shows that the number of cases referred to his special agents for investigation for alleged fraud and reported on by them was as follows: Nebraska, 60 cases; Florida, 64 cases; Louisiana, 90 cases.

In the 1884 report of Commissioner McFarland the number of cases investigated and reported on as between the West and South was as follows: Nebraska, 170; Alabama, 153; Florida, 71.

I cheerfully admit that there is a much larger number of cases alleged to exist in the West than in the South, that is, when you take into account non-agricultural lands. But I deny that as between the agricultural public lands in the South (say in Alabama and Florida or Louisiana and Florida) and the agricultural public lands in the West (say in Nebraska and Kansas) there is any substantial difference in the fraud charged or found; and if the protection of the public domain demanded the suspension of the law in one case to prevent fraud there it was with equal justice to the public interests demanded in the other; and as not only this but all his orders excepts the South from their operation while striking at the West, I say his orders and his policy together stand impeached on his own showing because of a want of both uniformity and equity.

What is the matter? Do you want to depopulate the West? Are you afraid of the unborn Nebraskas and Nevadas of the West? Is there a political method beneath all this fraud-madness? Does Sparks put his heel upon the West with the consent of his party? Does he fear the new States as your party feared the birth of Kansas and Nebraska? Is this the revival of the old spirit of repression of the West? I will not believe it; the mistakes and crimes that made a tragedy of the admission of Kansas and Nebraska are not to be repeated from the loathsome level of hired falsehood and official usurpation. I will not believe that Congress will lend its sanction to the continuance of this policy, which is little less disastrous to Kansas and Nebraska than the crimes of 1858 and 1860 were to the eastern portions of the new States.

Mr. COBB addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] will wish to make some reply to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB], and I suggest that ten minutes further be allowed on each side.

Mr. LAIRD. The gentleman from Indiana can have all the time he wants. I can say all I wish to say in two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. There are thirty-five minutes remaining.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended ten minutes on each side.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Chairman, now, I take it, is the proper time for me to ask this House to hear me a few minutes, aside from any rule or agreement as to the division of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no power to grant what the gentleman asks.

Mr. LAIRD. I presume it is scarcely possible in this House that a gentleman may not rise in his place and defend himself from a contemptible assault, notwithstanding the rules.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask again, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. COBB. I do not know whether the gentleman means that my assault was "contemptible" or not.

Mr. LAIRD. You will find out what I mean when I get the floor, among other things. I mean what I say.

Mr. COBB. I am responsible for all that I said. I made no charge against the gentleman, but summarized the "evidence" on file against him; and that I will do against any man.

Mr. LAIRD. You are entitled to all the dignity you may get by scattering the contents of the Commissioner's garbage cart in this House.

Mr. COBB. I will "heap dirt" whenever it comes in the shape that this does.

Mr. PERKINS. I think that by unanimous consent the time may be extended ten minutes on each side. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] wants a little more time, and I think there will be no objection to that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCCREARY). If there be no objection the time will be extended ten minutes on each side, so that there will be one hour and ten minutes debate on each side. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] be allowed to complete his statement, so that the gentleman from Nebraska may reply to everything at once.

Mr. LAIRD (to Mr. COBB). If you have anything further to say, go ahead.

Mr. COBB. I will reserve my time.

Mr. SPRINGER. The only object of my suggestion was that the gentleman from Nebraska might understand the whole case of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LAIRD. If he has got anything more to say which is personal to me I hope he will say it now. The rest I do not care about.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana produces here a report which he says is from one Green, a special agent. My answer to that is brief. His statements are false so far as they concern myself from beginning to end. As nearly as I can remember the allegations they are as follows:

That I am a member of a cattle concern known as the firm of Kelly

& Laird. This is not true. There is no concern of the name of Kelly & Laird to my knowledge. I am not interested in the cattle business in Nebraska and never have been. I never owned a hoof nor a horn in the country in question, neither individually nor in partnership.

That I procured certain lands to be entered in the McCook land district. That is not true. I never entered any land in the McCook land district nor procured any to be entered, nor were any entered openly or secretly in my interest or at my solicitation.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman will allow me to say that he is mistaken as to what I said. I only stated what the evidence on file was. I make no assertion myself.

Mr. LAIRD. I understand the gentleman. He makes no assertion; he peddles what he calls "evidence," namely, the report of Special Agent Green. Will the gentleman tell me how this has the dignity of evidence—the unsupported statements, slurs, insinuations, and lies of a hireling? On such "evidence" any man on earth can be convicted of land frauds or any other kind of frauds, of all crimes and shames conceivable. It is on this kind of "evidence" that 90 per cent. of the homesteaders and pre-emptors of Nebraska are denounced as thieves. I perfectly well understood, when I undertook to defend the interests of the people that I represent, to protect the good name of my fellow-citizens and defend the reputation of my State, that I should be subject to the attack of every scoundrel in the employ of the Interior Department who carried a slung-shot for secret use in the protection of the public lands by means of hearsay and opinion.

I was hundreds of miles from those lands when they were taken. I never was present at that land office prior to that time, and I never stepped into it for over a year after these transactions, and yet by the "evidence" to which the gentleman is pleased to appeal I am convicted of defrauding the Government. This is a sample of how 90 per cent. of the people of the State are found guilty upon the secret reports of agents. The gentleman from Indiana can drive on with his garbage-cart. I will defend the good name of my constituents and the fair name of my State from all these false and infamous assaults, slurs, and charges made against them, whatever may be the consequence to myself. I have no personal warfare to make on Commissioner Sparks, but I shall never cease to make war upon what I believe to be his outrageous policy and methods until he takes his heel from off the neck of the settlers of Nebraska.

That through influence of mine with certain land officers certain advantages were permitted to entrymen on the day of the opening of the land office at McCook. That is not true. I was not present at the time the entries by the Hastings men were made, and I did not procure them to be made. I did not influence the land officers to give them any advantage, nor do I believe that the land officers did give them any advantage. I never spoke to the land officers in question on this subject in my life. I do not think I had seen the land officers prior to these entries for over one year, and I have never spoken to them since about them, except I believe to call the attention of Mr. Laws, the receiver, to the statements of Green, and this I think was done by letter.

The answer of Mr. Laws to the statements of Green, asserting that he (Laws) had been guilty of favoritism, is on file in the General Land Office, and if the gentleman from Indiana, who is so industrious in hunting up reports, will find the statement of the land officer, he will see that the allegations of Green are denounced from beginning to end as falsehoods—at least so far as they affect Mr. Laws. Mr. Laws is a one-legged soldier and an honorable man, as is possibly evidenced by the fact that he still occupies the position in the Land Office to which he was appointed on my recommendation. If he has been guilty of conniving at frauds on the public domain for the purpose of aiding me or people interested with me in perpetrating such frauds, how is it that your administration allows him to stay there undisturbed for over a year?

Mr. COBB. They will turn him out when they hear of this.

Mr. LAIRD. No, they will not; or if so, not for this, for they have known it for years.

The gentleman, by his next friend, Agent Green, states that the lands in controversy at McCook were entered by my friends. That may be true. I have some friends in my own country, and as these gentlemen are very respectable people I am not disposed to disown them. He says there was one man of my name interested in them, and that is true. He was my brother, but he was twenty-one years of age and a citizen of the United States, as I believe the rest were, and if they took land, they had a right to. They complied with the law. If that is fraud, let the gentleman from Indiana make the most of it.

As for myself, I never owned an inch of public land except what I took by virtue of my right as a soldier, and that was a homestead which I took fourteen years ago. Outside of this I have not a penny's worth of interest in the public domain from one end of the country to the other, unless I have some interest in this land received by virtue of my brother's entry and his death, which took place in February last.

What is it from which the gentleman has read? He reads what he calls a prepared statement from the report of Special Agent Green—a summary of what he calls "evidence."

What is the matter with the original raw material of the report? Could you not trust that, or was it necessary for you to make some modifications in the general allegations? While you are in the special-agent business why did you not read from the report of Special Agent Coburn, some paragraphs from which I submit in this connection. They are as follows (page 10, Coburn's report):

The parties, citizens of McCook, whose affidavits I inclose are citizens of standing there, but of course neighbors and intimate friends of the local officers. Taking into consideration their statements in connection with the circumstances heretofore related, and the further fact that the register assured the parties that conflicting applications by those present would be considered as simultaneous, I conclude that the charge [of favoritism and discrimination] against the land officers is not substantiated.

It may be well to call attention to the statement of the register and receiver that there was no conflict of applications and that Hurlburt and Moore obtained the land described in their applications. Though this was said to be the result of an erroneous description, the affidavit of Hurlburt shows how it arose, and does not connect the local land officers with the deception alleged to have been practiced. It may have been an error for the officers to have opened the doors and permitted a crowd to enter before the hour of business at a time when a rush was to be expected, but that at least appears to be incidental merely. Summarizing the whole matter of this report, my conclusions are as follows:

1. That while the circumstances surrounding the original entries made by the Hastings party were liable to cause suspicion, the character and standing of most of the men engaged in the matter were such as to raise a presumption in favor of their good faith.

5. The preponderance of evidence goes to acquit the local officers of favoritism and discrimination, or at least [to show] that such a charge is not substantiated, and that they have erred in some minor points of administration of the duties of the office.

But my investigation develops the fact that many claimants in this case are men of means and social standing, and not in the employ of any one. But aside from the close resemblance to known cases of fraud above alluded to, there appears to be little evidence that it was a scheme concocted in the interest of any one party or corporation.

And, if I remember right, Special Agent Green's report is based upon two affidavits, one made by a man named Hurlbut and the other by a man named Moore. It appears that Hurlbut undertook the rôle of accuser of the Hastings entrymen because, as he supposed, they got a piece of land which he desired, but as it afterward turned out that Hurlbut got the very land that he wanted nothing further was heard from him, and I believe nothing further has ever been seen of him in that country so far as my information goes. The affidavit of Moore was dated September 15, 1883, and on October 2 of the same year he made the following affidavit, which pretty clearly discloses the uses to which his affidavit was put by some thrifty person after it had been signed and sworn to by him.

I see by the newspapers and I have heard some talk that they claim that JAMES LAIRD is interested in the land business on the Stinking Water. I know that he has no claim on the Stinking Water, and I do not believe that he is interested in any way. In my affidavit of September 15, 1883, which was written by other parties, I see the following sentence appears in it which was not in it at the time I signed it: "I mean JAMES LAIRD, the member of Congress from Nebraska."

If it did appear, it was overlooked by me. I did not intend to bring JAMES LAIRD into the matter, for I do not think he was interested nor in any way to blame for any wrong done myself or Mr. Hulbut. In my affidavit where the name of Laird & Kelly appears it has no reference to Hon. JAMES LAIRD.

Sworn to and subscribed in my presence this 2d day of October, 1883.

JOHN R. KING,

[SEAL.] Notary Public, Hitchcock County, Nebraska.

In this connection I also submit a statement of the gentlemen interested in the entries spoken of by Agent Green, and likewise a letter from Land Commissioner McFarland, which are as follows:

We, the undersigned, being the persons who have taken land by homestead or timber-culture entry on what is known as "Stinking Water Creek," in Chase County, Nebraska, state the facts connected therewith to be as follows:

We took said lands on June 15, 1883, at McCook, Nebr., at our own suggestion and for our own benefit, and not for the benefit of JAMES LAIRD, nor at his suggestion, nor that of any other person for him, nor has JAMES LAIRD any interest in these claims, nor is there any understanding that he is to have in the future.

We were each personally present, made our own affidavits, and signed them, and we were each personally identified and sworn to the same by one of the land officers, and we each paid our own fees, which fees were handed over by our attorneys. JAMES LAIRD was not in McCook on that day. We each took these claims in full compliance with the law and have complied with it in making improvements, and propose to hold them unless defeated by fraudulent affidavits. All charges of fraud made against JAMES LAIRD in connection with these claims are utterly false.

A. W. LAIRD,

In a letter to me from Washington under date of September 20, 1883, Land Commissioner McFarland says:

There is no report by any agent, nor papers on file in this office, reflecting in any manner upon you, nor connecting you with unlawful entries of public lands.

Mr. COBB addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. CAREY addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. RYAN obtained the floor and said: I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I am not here to defend frauds in any form. I concede that considerable fraud has crept into our land system; that there have been numerous fraudulent land entries; but I deny that this has occurred to any such extent as is claimed in the reports of these special agents. I am not here to make any attack upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I regard him as an honest enthusiast, such as we have numerous examples of in the ecclesiastical history of the Middle Ages. [Laughter.] I think there is nothing dishonest or corrupt about him, but that he is one of the most misguided of men. For the sake of ferreting out and punishing fraud in connection with our land entries, he and the administration back of him have undertaken to suspend the general laws of this country—a power that has never been claimed, never been attempted to be exercised before in the history of this country, nor for the last two hundred years anywhere within the realms of common law.

Every entryman after he has made his final proof and entry, and paid his fees at the Land Office, is entitled to have his entry passed upon and the patent issued to him in due course of law. This right, granted to every citizen in this country who has made a final entry or attempted in good faith to make a final entry, General Sparks, by his order of April, 1885, suspended. He did not suspend it in respect to fraudulent entries merely; he did not suspend it in respect to certain interdicted persons only, but he suspended the operations of the Land Department and of the land laws as against all persons within certain extensive territorial boundaries. An embargo was put upon all, the good as well as the bad. It was as though certain portions of this country had been put in law quarantine and cut off from the benefit and operation of all law.

But this order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office is not all. A greater and graver usurpation of law has been attempted. During the present month he has gone a step further, and, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] informs us, he is sustained in this by the Secretary of the Interior and even by the President—he has gone a step further and entirely suspended the operation of the pre-emption and timber-culture laws in this whole country.

What is the justification for this? Gentlemen undertake to refer us to precedents. I will show you that those precedents are the veriest sophisms, that they have no bearing at all upon the legal question and the right to suspend. The precedents they cite are simply the constructions of the Land Department in reference to certain land grants to railroads. From the time when we had any such land grants to construe it has been held and construed by the Land Department that whenever any land grant company filed the plats of the definite location of its route in the Land Office at that time its grant took effect, not only as to the granted limits but as to the indemnity limits, and that at the time these grants thus took effect it was just and proper under the law to withdraw the land within the indemnity limits as well as that within the granted limits, because without doing this you would render the provision for the indemnity limits entirely nugatory and useless.

This decision of the Land Department has been practiced and adhered to for more than a quarter of a century. It has never been reversed by any court; it has never been reversed by any authority until General Sparks undertook to do so within the present year, and it is, in my mind, a very grave question whether his ruling in that respect is not erroneous. I have no doubt but that the courts will ultimately overrule him on this point. That is the precedent which gentlemen cite in one form or another. They can not cite any precedent where any official connected with the Land Department of the Government has ever before undertaken to withdraw all the lands of this Government from the operation of the pre-emption law, or has ever attempted to say to citizens competent as pre-emptors, "You can not have the benefit of the law:" General Sparks and President Cleveland have suspended the operations of one of the old laws of this country that has existed ever since 1841. Gentlemen, you can find no precedent in the land history of this country, nor any precedent in the history of this country at all, but you can find a precedent, to which I will refer, in the history of the Stuart dynasty in England. The Stuarts attempted, as the Tudors had done before, to suspend the operations of the laws of the realm. This power so asserted and exercised by the Stuarts is known as the dispensing power. I will read what Mr. Macaulay, in his History of England, says on this subject.

The truth is, that the dispensing power was a great anomaly in politics. It was utterly inconsistent in theory with the principles of mixed government, but it had grown up in times when people troubled themselves little about theories. It had not been very grossly abused in practice. It had therefore been tolerated, and had gradually acquired a kind of prescription. At length it was employed, after a long interval, in an enlightened age, and at an important conjuncture, to an extent never before known and for a purpose generally abhorred. It was instantly subjected to a severe scrutiny. Men did not indeed at first venture to pronounce it altogether unconstitutional; but they began to perceive that it was at direct variance with the spirit of the constitution, and would, if left unchecked, turn the English Government from a limited into an absolute monarchy.

Now I will read to the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Indiana a precedent two hundred years old, in the case of King James. I read from the same author:

May was now approaching, and that month had been fixed for the meeting of the houses; but they were again prorogued to November. It was not strange that the king did not then wish to meet them, for he had determined to adopt a policy which he knew to be in the highest degree odious to them. From his predecessors he had inherited two prerogatives, of which the limits had never been defined with strict accuracy, and which, if exerted without any limit, would of themselves have sufficed to overturn the whole polity of the state and of the church. These were the dispensing power and the ecclesiastical supremacy. By means of the dispensing power the king purposed to admit Roman Catholics not merely to civil and military but to spiritual offices. By means of the ecclesiastical supremacy he hoped to make the Anglican clergy his instruments for the destruction of their own religion.

This scheme developed itself by degrees. It was not thought safe to begin by granting to the whole Roman Catholic body a dispensation from all statutes imposing penalties and tests, for nothing was more fully established than that such a dispensation was illegal. The cabal had, in 1672, put forth a general declaration of indulgence. The Commons, as soon as they met, had protested against it. Charles the Second had ordered it to be canceled in his presence, and had, both by his own mouth and by written message, assured the houses that the step which had caused so much complaint should never be drawn into precedent. It would have been difficult to find in all the inns of court a barrister of reputation to argue in defense of a prerogative which the sovereign, seated on his throne in full Parliament, had solemnly renounced a few years before. But it was not quite so clear that the king might not, on special grounds, grant exemptions to individuals by name. The first object of James therefore was to obtain from the courts of common law an acknowledgment that, to this extent at least, he possessed the dispensing power.

Then the historian goes on to tell us how King James laid claim to this dispensing power and under it sought to interfere with and suspend the operation of the civil and criminal laws of the realm; and finally how in his efforts to obtain a judicial construction in his favor he removed all the judges of the highest judicial tribunal, reorganized it, and thus obtained a decision that the sovereign of England held the dispensing power—the power to suspend the operation of the general laws of the realm at pleasure and without limit. But the action of the last of the Stuarts brought on a great crisis in English history. The result was the English people hurled the Stuarts from the throne and called upon William of Orange and Mary to administer the British Government. When they had done so the British Commons in Parliament assembled put the stamp of censure and condemnation upon this right and power claimed by the Stuarts, and now, after a lapse of two hundred years, claimed and asserted by this Democratic administration. I will read again from the historian on this interesting subject:

On these grounds the Commons wisely determined to postpone all reforms till the ancient constitution of the kingdom should have been restored in all its parts, and forthwith to fill the throne without imposing on William and Mary any other obligation than that of governing according to the existing laws of England. In order that the questions which had been in dispute between the Stuarts and the nation might never again be stirred, it was determined that the instrument by which the Prince and Princess of Orange were called to the throne, and by which the order of succession was settled, should set forth, in the most distinct and solemn manner, the fundamental principles of the constitution. This instrument, known by the name of the Declaration of Rights, was prepared by a committee of which Somers was chairman.

The Lords and Commons having deliberated, resolved that they would first, after the example of their ancestors, assert the ancient rights and liberties of England. Therefore it was among other things declared that the dispensing power lately assumed and exercised had no legal existence.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. NELSON. One word, Mr. Chairman, further. From that day to this, for two hundred years, it has never been claimed before by any executive power in England or America that it had the right to dispense with the operation of the laws of the realm. Here is a precedent which I ask gentlemen to study. It should be a warning rather than something to imitate.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Chairman, I have no apology to make when I ask the attention of the House for the time allotted me while I discuss a few of the questions presented by the proposition offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD]. During my term of service here I have never sought to attract the attention of the House unless I thought I had something to submit worthy of its consideration and directly connected with a practical pending proposition. And I would but assert the veriest truism if I said the questions involved in this discussion are of great importance to the people of this nation.

No one connected with public affairs can have failed to notice the amount of public lands remaining for disposal is being in some way rapidly diminished, and it has been a matter of earnest investigation on the part of the best men connected with Congress for the last six years in both Houses, as well as those occupying executive positions, to determine precisely what the evil was, the extent of it, and the remedy for it.

At the outset, Mr. Chairman, I am bound to notice there has been an attempt made to give this debate a partisan character. When the legislative appropriation bill was under discussion under a motion I believe to strike out the last word of the pending paragraph, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and a few other gentlemen vigorously rushed to the front denouncing the present Commissioner of the General Land Office and his official conduct and apparently expecting the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber to champion him and protect him from the criticisms passed upon him.

It seems to be expected as a matter of course that the vigorous assaults made by gentlemen on this side upon the Land Office shall be replied to and the course of the Commissioner justified, if at all, by those of his political party.

Sir, there is no question of party politics involved here. The question is one of orderly, proper administration of executive duty, and should be discussed with that impartiality, candor, and calm considerateness which alone in a legislative body can produce satisfactory results.

With the general course of procedure in the Interior Department as relates to the public-land system since the present administration came into power I may say without boasting I have been intimately familiar.

When it took charge of affairs it found accumulated evidences of frauds upon the public lands gathered in by Republican agents appointed by Secretary Teller and Commissioner McFarland, many of which have been so recently read and referred to in the House as to render a rereading unnecessary.

There was found, also, an appalling state of affairs as to the unlawful inclosing of the public lands—millions upon millions of acres of public lands inclosed with barbed-wire fences, many of these erected by foreigners.

Notices had been served upon the parties in possession; Commissioner McFarland had sent out formal circulars against them, but all was ineffectual.

The slow methods of litigation under common-law rules had been invoked, but these were not productive of results.

A statute has been enacted by the Forty-eighth Congress for the summary, efficient cure of the evil, but too late to be enforced by the outgoing Republican administration.

The bill which became a law I had the honor to introduce, and I had been connected with some matters of land reform with other gentlemen on the Committee on the Public Lands, with which I desire to say Mr. Teller and Mr. McFarland were in hearty sympathy.

This was known to Mr. Secretary Lamar, and early in his experience at the head of that Department he did me the honor to ask me to give him the benefit of my experience and observation as to these matters, and I unreservedly did so.

This led to an intimacy between us, which otherwise would probably never have existed, and justifies me in saying what I take especial pleasure in, that from the first the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office have been inspired by the desire to honestly, efficiently, and thoroughly administer the land laws, so that the public domain should be utilized for the benefit of actual settlers. The official reports at their hands showed an actual necessity for some earnest, vigorous action. As against the unlawful inclosures, a proclamation by the President was issued, and orders given at once to the law officers to proceed criminally, if necessary, against offenders unless the new law was obeyed.

As against fraudulent entries of the public lands, various plans were considered. That the evil was enormous was conceded by everybody.

The last administration had hoped that the laws allowing pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land entries would be repealed.

It had repeatedly urged upon Congress the necessity of such action, and a modification of the commutation feature of the homestead law. Under these acts as they stood these frauds had been perpetrated, and the last administration earnestly endeavored to secure such Congressional action as should render the further perpetration impossible.

The bill, as recommended, passed the House, and with an amendment, not germane, the Senate; the House, late in the short session, would not concur in the Senate amendment, and so the bill failed.

Congress, and not the last Republican administration, was to blame for this. This was the situation; and after a great deal of consideration, as I know, on the part of those who had made the subject a study and were familiar with the official reports and statements, the order of April 3, 1885, which I will refer to later, was issued.

At the outset I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, and in as plain language as I can express the proposition, once for all, because I do not wish to be misunderstood in reference to it, that, so far as the order of Commissioner Sparks of April 3, 1885, is concerned, as a member of the Committee on Public Lands I was consulted in reference to the propriety of its issuance, and, under the circumstances as I have stated them, I counseled and advised that it should be issued. And I stand by that order to-day, and whatever criticism may be imposed in reference to it I am ready and willing to bear my share of it.

I am ready now and here to defend the policy as well as the legality of it, and I hope to make myself fully understood with reference to it before I am done, and whatever credit may attach to an honest effort to stay the tide of fraud and corruption then and now painfully apparent, I shall in like manner insist on having my share.

The only regret I have is it was not continued in force until to-day for the reasons I shall give a little further on. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the evil sought to be remedied by that order is nothing new.

When the legislative bill was under debate this discussion was begun. To the observer it would appear that it was a Republican attack on Democratic methods, as such.

Why, the gentleman from Maine announced here that when Mr. Sparks first went into that office, and before he had fairly got warmed in his seat, he suddenly discovered that great frauds were being committed upon the public lands system. I wish to state to him that he is mistaken. The performance of his committee work has not familiarized him with reference to the condition of affairs connected with the public-lands system. I say to him what I know of my own personal knowledge when I tell him that in the Forty-eighth Congress—no, earlier than that; in the Forty-seventh Congress—this matter was a subject of serious consideration on the part of Secretary Kirkwood, Secretary Teller, and Commissioner McFarland, and, as a member of the Committee on the Public Lands, I was frequently in consultation with these gentlemen at their request in reference to these very matters. I hold in my hand an interview with Commissioner McFarland, published in 1884, and which is embodied in some remarks I submitted to this House on the 7th June of this year, where, if gentlemen will take the trouble to examine, they will see that the very evils out of which this debate has arisen to-day were conditions which were then subjects of consideration by the Commissioner of the Public Land Office, and that his specials agents were making these reports to the office at that very date. Perhaps I can not do better than to read an extract or two from that interview, premising it by saying simply that I know the words quoted here by the newspaper reporter were a part of Commissioner McFarland's own language. In reply to the question, "How is the system of special agents working?" he said:

"Satisfactorily. The special agents have been in the field about six months, and reports from some of them are received every day. I have examined and acted upon about eight hundred illegal and fraudulent entries reported by them. These entries covered about 128,000 acres, of which the Government would have been deprived except for the new service."

"Have any of the persons who held such entries appealed from the finding of the special agent?"

"Yes; in eighty cases only out of the eight hundred examined under this system have objections been offered to the proposed cancellation of the entries. This fact is significant of the correctness of the agents' reports and of the wholly indefensible character of the impeached entries. The reports are in all cases based upon a personal examination by the agent of each tract of land, and the entry is held for cancellation except upon positive evidence. It is further found that in few, if any, of the eighty cases have the objections come from the persons in whose names the entries were made. They usually appear to be from persons who furnished the money for the entries or bought them afterward."

"What kinds of lands did these fraudulent entries cover?"

"Pine-timber lands in Minnesota, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Missouri, made ostensibly for settlement under the pre-emption and commuted-homestead laws, but actually to obtain the valuable timber for the nominal price at which agricultural lands are sold to settlers. The principal operators are persons largely engaged in the timber business, the 'settler' being a convenient myth. Another class consists of timber lands in California, Oregon, Nevada, and Washington Territory. The reports of special agents, particularly in California and Washington Territory, disclose a combination of large capitalists, English as well as American, to obtain title to immense tracts of timber land by hiring men, women, and children to swear to false affidavits that they make the entries as required by law for their own use and benefit, and not for speculation. The prices regularly paid for a set of false entry papers range, according to the reports, from $50 to $100. The Government gets $2.50 an acre, the land perhaps being worth ten times its cost to the speculators. Agricultural lands in Dakota have also received marked attention.

"The persons concerned, directly or indirectly, embrace English peers, Eastern capitalists, adventurous spirits who emigrate to the booming Territory to grow up with the country, and enterprising land agents and attorneys. Pre-emption, commuted-homestead, and timber-culture entries are the favorite instrumentalities of fraud in this region. No sooner is a township of land surveyed than it is plastered over with entries and filings, more or less bogus, but generally more, and the actual settler who goes to stay, the farmer who is to produce the subsistence of the nation, must buy off these pretended claims at high rates before he can obtain the privilege of making an honest entry of the land. The timber-culture laws have proved especially advantageous to the fraudulent control of public lands. The principal sphere of operations under these laws is at present Minnesota, Dakota, Kansas, and Nebraska.

"The failure of the timber-culture law to produce the results contemplated and its success in promoting fraudulent land entries are paralleled by the desert-land act, the frauds under which are committed mainly in the Pacific States and Territories. But the frauds do not stop there. The Government price for coal lands is from $10 to $20 an acre. Fraudulent entries of coal lands are made under the pre-emption and other agricultural laws. The reports of the special agents cover heavy transactions of this sort in Colorado and other States in which coal abounds, the fraudulent entries proving to be the property of mining companies.

"But by far the most extensive frauds are found in the grazing country, where the cattle-kings have fenced in the country by whole counties, and the investigations by agents show that the land within these inclosures is being covered by bogus entries made by employés of the stockmen, the former supplying the needed affidavits of settlement and the latter paying the land office fees and pocketing the title. Many entries of this class have been canceled or held for cancellation.

"The practice in such old Territories as New Mexico and Arizona is found to be that the cowboys are brought up in squads to the district land office to swear in mellifluous Spanish names to affidavits that they have resided on the land ten, twelve, or twenty years, when in fact they may have not been in the Territory as many months or days; but they swear all the same, and each serves as the regulation witness for the other. The cost of 160 acres to the stock company is by this process about $18, a trifle over 10 cents an acre. In the newer Territories, where long inhabitancy is not so easily proven, the operation is like that of Democrats repeating in New York city elections. A gang of 'pre-emptors' is fitted out, who make all the entries required by their employers by merely adoping a sufficient number of names and repeating the process of swearing as principals and witnesses alternately."

Knowing this condition of affairs, the Secretaries of the Interior under the last and this administration, as well as the Commissioners of the General Land Office for several years have recommended the repeal of these laws.

Mr. MacFarland, in his last annual report, speaking of this law, says:

In my last annual report I renewed the recommendation frequently made by my predecessors that the pre-emption law be repealed. Continued experience demonstrates the advisability and necessity of such repeal. The objection that much good has heretofore resulted from the pre-emption system, and that it should not be discontinued because abused, appears to us without good foundation under the changed conditions created by the homestead laws.

Our committee said to the last Congress, and I emphasize it now and here:

Whole townships of the public domain have been acquired under this law by capitalists who do not reside within hundreds of miles of the land, and never did. They have secured them through paid agents in their employ, who receive so much for their services when they make the proof necessary to entitle them to a patent from the Government, and assign their claims to their employers. This is done, of course, through perjury and subornation of perjury, for each one of these agents or claimants is required to make settlement on the pre-emption claim under the law, and he must make oath before the register or receiver of the land district in which the lands are situate, on which he claims to have settled for the purpose of pre-empting, and that he has never had the benefit of any right of pre-emption; that he has not settled upon and improved such land to sell the same on speculation, but in good faith to appropriate it to his own exclusive use, and that he has not directly or indirectly made any agreement or contract in any way or manner with any person whatsoever by which the title which he might acquire from the Government of the United States should inure, in whole or in part, to the benefit of any person except himself. And yet it is well known that this oath is daily taken by parties who make it under contracts such as we have indicated above. They file with the register of the proper land district their declaration, make their proof, affidavit, and payment required by the law, and receive their title and transfer the same to the parties with whom they made the contract before they attempted to make the pre-emption.

Here let me remark that the appropriation now before us is not asked for the continuation of an old service, which has been in existence for years. It was inaugurated on an appropriation bill in the Forty-seventh Congress by Republicans, and has been in operation only about four years.

Mr. LAIRD. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PAYSON. Certainly.

Mr. LAIRD. I hold in my hand an annual report of Mr. McFarland, concerning which the gentleman speaks, and I find on page 146:

Entire number of entries investigated	3,563
Entries canceled	680
Entries approved after investigation	953

Now——

Mr. PAYSON. Nobody disputes that. The figures to which you allude run back for years and years. I take no issue with the gentleman on that subject. The office is now over three years behind. A large proportion, if not the largest proportion, of these entries to which he refers were made under prior administrations and before the special agents were set to work to investigate the frauds.

Mr. LAIRD. Let me complete the statement.

Mr. PAYSON. I am not going to be diverted from the general line of remarks which I had designed to make here by any question of veracity as to the personal experience or general observation of any gentleman who may represent land districts and who may have formed his own opinions in reference to these matters. I am willing to concede for the sake of the argument that in the district which the gentleman behind me [Mr. LAIRD] represents the people who have gone upon these lands are all, absolutely all, honest—though I do not believe it, knowing what the records show. [Laughter.] In the district of the gentleman from Kansas who, I understand, is to follow me I will make the same admission. But I want to ask him to give me a reason why it is that in those districts nearly every land agent who has business there advertises as a prominent feature of his business "Relinquishments for sale." I have before me a number of these advertisements, which I hope the gentleman will not overlook when he comes to answer this argument. I want him to tell me what he thinks of that kind of practice and if it was any evidence of a fraudulent transaction in the public lands as a part of the business of those who engaged in sending these advertisements out.

I will insert some of these, omitting the names of the parties, for I do not care to give them the benefit of the advertisement:

Real estate and Government land agents.
All business before the United States Land Office correctly and promptly attended to. Relinquishments for sale. Town lots and city property for sale or rent. Special attention given to collections.
Richfield, Morton County, Kansas.
Contesting claims a specialty.

Land attorneys.
Locate settlers on Government land. Relinquishments always on hand. Contests a specialty. Correspondence solicited.

Come all, and come quick. We have deeded land and relinquishments so cheap it will make you smile. There are also a few pieces of Government land left, but will soon be gone. Come and see us.
Real estate, loan, insurance, and financial agents, Jetmore, Kans. Office on Main street.

Real estate agents, Gandy, Sherman County, Kansas.
School lands, deeded lands, homesteads, and timber entry.
Relinquishments bought and sold.
Refer to any of the banks in the Oberlin land district. Correspondence solicited.

The records at the Land Office show the methods by which these "relinquishments" are made available, and their fraudulent, speculative character.

Mr. Chairman, the method is this: the speculative entryman makes a "filing" on a tract: the books at the local office, of course, note the fact, and the land is technically "taken."

The law provides that when a "filing" on a homestead or pre-emption is "relinquished" at the local land office, the land shall thereupon be restored and become a part of the public domain. The "relinquishment" is executed, put into the hands of these agents (those named being all in the district of the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. PETERS) for sale, and the settler, if he gets the lands, must buy the speculative relinquishment, or enter a contest to defeat it; it is cheaper to buy, and he does so; takes the relinquishment to the local office, files it, thus releases the land, and then makes his as an original entry.

That is the method, and it is susceptible of easy proof at the General Land Office, that this practice, illegal and unlawful as it is, has assumed immense proportions.

Under the law, every entry for homestead or pre-emption must be bona fide for settlement by the entryman. These almost exclusively are for speculation, and to fleece the settler who really wants the land for a home.

I know it will be said that there are cases where bona fide settlers, because of illness, misfortune, &c., become discontented and desire to or are compelled to sell their settlement rights. True enough; but there are exceptional cases, and no one will pretend to assert that they are of sufficient volume to cause the conspicuous advertisements I present.

But to return. I do not know how it may be in the district directly represented by the gentleman who has spoken, for I know nothing except from the records; but this I do know, that the Commissioner of the General Land Office could not act efficiently or at all except upon reports made to him by the duly accredited agents of the Department. I do not see how he could otherwise act intelligently upon the questions. It is alleged—in fact it has never been denied—it is confessedly admitted that frauds in the public-land system exist everywhere. There is a dispute as to the degree in which these frauds are being carried on, but none as to the fact that they exist. The enthusiastic gentleman from Nebraska admits something of the kind. The gentleman from Minnesota, who has gone back into the matter of ancient history, admits that frauds are numerous under the public-land system; and I have no doubt it will be conceded by the gentleman from Kansas. How then is the Commissioner of the General Land Office to determine except by reports which go to him from duly accredited agents of the Department what he ought to do? These are part of the instructions given them so far as relates to this matter.

Circular of instructions to special agents.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 23, 1885.

SIR: Having been appointed a special agent of this office for the protection of the public lands from fraudulent or illegal entry or appropriation, you are instructed that your general duties will be as follows:

1. You will carefully, accurately, and thoroughly investigate every case of alleged fraudulent or illegal entry or appropriation of public lands referred to you by this office, or in any manner brought to your attention in the discharge of your official duties.

2. You will, in all cases, personally examine the land involved, taking pains in every instance to accurately and positively identify the tract, and to see and take the statements of claimants, if they can be found.

3. In the examination of alleged fraudulent homestead and pre-emption claims you will carefully note the character and condition of the land (when that is essential to your inquiry), and in all cases fully examine and note the nature, character, extent, condition, and value of all improvements, if any, thereon, and all the facts pertaining to settlement on, and inhabitancy of, the tract, or the want thereof.

4. You will make and preserve full and accurate notes in all cases investigated by you upon every point involved in the case, to enable you—

First. To report thereon, conclusively, to this office.

Second. To give your evidence, when necessary, before the register and receiver, or in proceedings in the courts.

Third. To give information or enter complaints in criminal actions.

5. You will also take the affidavits, when practicable, of parties giving you information, and of the witnesses whose evidence may be necessary in the case. When parties are unwilling to make affidavits, you will take their names and addresses and a note of the matters to which they will testify. But the affidavits of witnesses should be obtained in all cases, if possible.

6. When making investigations in an unsettled district, and in other cases when absolutely necessary, you will be authorized to employ a guide, surveyor, or other assistant, or, in extreme cases, assistants to aid you in finding and identifying the land, and in the procurement of testimony, or the service of notices. You will not, however, employ a surveyor without special authority from this office, unless in cases of emergency, when you will at once fully report the necessity for the service and the nature of the emergency.

7. The affidavits of your assistants to the facts found upon the investigation of any cases will be taken by you fully and in detail, and will be transmitted to this office with your report.

8. Where the land is uninhabited and unimproved, and in other well-established cases, your own report, and the affidavits of your assistants, when such are employed, may be sufficient for the purposes of cancellation or other action. But you will be careful to see that all requisite evidence is obtained and preserved, and that yourself and your assistants are fully prepared to give testimony in the case when required to do so.

9. In all cases when there are other witnesses whose testimony can be obtained you should secure their affidavits, as mentioned in paragraph 5.

10. As an officer of this Department, detailed to investigate frauds, you are authorized by section 183, United States Revised Statutes, to administer oaths and take affidavits in any matter pertaining to your official inquiries.

11. You will bear in mind—

First. That where homestead affidavits are made before a clerk of a court, and the party, or some member of his family, is not actually residing on the land at the time, and a bona fide improvement has not been made thereon, such entries are prima facie fraudulent.

Second. That where the affidavit is made before the local land officers, and residence is not established on the land within six months after date of entry, the entry is subject to forfeiture. Failure to establish residence as required also raises a presumption of fraud in the entry.

Third. That a pre-emption claim can be lawfully initiated only by actual settlement on the land, and that the filing of declaratory statement in the absence of a preceding bona fide settlement is illegal.

Fourth. That the filing of a soldier's declaratory statement, when the soldier has no intention to enter the land and actually reside upon it, is fraudulent, and that the procurement of powers of attorney to make such filings with an agreement or promise to sell the land filed upon is a fraud both upon the soldier and the Government. Filings by powers of attorney should be thoroughly inquired into.

Fifth. That commuted homestead entries made without actual residence upon and improvement and cultivation of the land for the prescribed period are fraudulent.

Sixth. That pre-emption and commuted homestead entries made in the interest of speculation or monopoly are an extensive and dangerous class of frauds and need to be closely watched and rigorously investigated.

Seventh. That homestead and pre-emption entries made on timber lands for the purpose of obtaining the timber, and not for the purpose of actual inhabitancy and cultivation, are fraudulent. You should discover the use made of the timber in such cases, and the amount cut or removed, and trace the connection between the parties obtaining it and the parties to the fraudulent entries.

Eighth. That homestead and pre-emption entries made on known mineral lands are illegal and fraudulent. Fraudulent agricultural entries on coal and iron lands will be particularly investigated.

Ninth. That placer or other mineral entries made on non-mineral lands for the purpose of purchasing agricultural, timber, or other lands that are not subject to private entry, or for the purpose of controlling the water, or for other speculative objects, are fraudulent.

Tenth. That entries of timber lands in California, Nevada, Oregon, and Washington Territory, under the act of June 3, 1878 (30 Stat., 89), are fraudulent if made on land valuable for agriculture, or if made for the benefit of others than the entrymen, or otherwise in violation of the restrictions of the act.

Eleventh. That desert-land entries are fraudulent if made on lands not desert in character, or if made for speculative purposes, or in the interest of others than the entryman, or otherwise in violation of the restrictions of the act.

Twelfth. That timber-culture entries can be made only for the cultivation of trees, and not for speculation or relinquishment, and not for the benefit of any other person than the party making the entry. You will particularly investigate alleged fraudulent timber-culture entries and will direct special inquiry as to whether such entries have been made by the procurement of land agents or others.

Thirteenth. That speculative and collusive entries, and entries made by employés, or in the interest or by the procurement of others than the entryman, under any of the settlement or improvement laws of Congress, are fraudulent.

They are sworn to perform their duty; they go into the field under these instructions. They show nothing whatever with reference to the performance of his duty that should not be exacted from an agent intrusted with the performance of such duties as he is called upon to discharge; nothing that is secret about it; nothing that is nefarious or underhanded, but everything that is open.

These agents report, and have made the reports which were read here in the hearing of the House when the legislative bill was up for discussion showing the degree of the frauds and the manner in which they have been committed. They show the hiring of men by the month to make entries for their employers in fraud of the law; how they go on and build little shanties, 7 by 9, in order to comply with the provision of the law with regard to residence. In some cases they were only 4 by 6 feet. It is shown that they have slept on the land only six nights in six months. Affidavits which I have show with reference to the Tallant case, which has been heralded as a specimen of the harsh treatment which settlers receive, that one house he had was only 7 by 9, put up by a man in his employment; and he got 320 acres of the public land for his employer, who was holding a county office at the county seat.

I may as well notice this Tallant case here. I read in the RECORD the following, used in the Senate, as similar letters have been used here:

I have a letter in my hand, which I received this morning from the clerk of the district court in Dakota, a gentleman I do not know, but I will read his letter as a sample of the cases of which I personally know—cases in my State, as affecting the actions of special agents and the general action of the Department on the question of entries which have already been made. He writes me from Lakota, Dak. The printed heading, with the date, is as follows:

"[W. S. Tallant, clerk of the district court, Nelson County.]

"LAKOTA, DAK., June 18, 1886."

After a little introductory paragraph, which it is not necessary to read, the writer says:

"The special agents of the Land Office have been causing almost every settler here trouble and expense, which they can not afford, and not doing the Government any good. Now, I speak from personal knowledge when I say that I do not think that any part of the public domain has ever been proved up with better intent and a better compliance with the laws. Yet we are told that ninety-nine out of every hundred proofs made will be canceled.

"I can cite you my own case for one. I made a homestead entry on June 26, 1884, and moved on the land June 27, 1884, and made proof in October, 1885"—

Procured evidently in that case under what is called the commutation clause of the homestead law, which provides that a person who has made an entry under the homestead law may change his entry to a pre-emption entry at any time after six months, and instead of getting the land for nothing, as he otherwise would at the expiration of five years, by paying a dollar and a quarter an acre for it getting a final-entry certificate at the time he makes his payment and his proofs—

"having when I proved up 40 acres broken and cropped, and a good house thereon. Since that date I have built a barn that will cost me about $500, and have had the whole claim broken up and gotten ready for crop next year. I also have another claim which joins my homestead on the west, giving me 320 acres, all of which is now broken up and ready for crop, out of which I have in crop on the land this year about 170 acres, and have buildings on the land that altogether cost me nearly $2,000. Every cent that I have made for the last three years has gone on the place and I have refused at least half a dozen offers to sell at good figures.

"Now at this late day comes a special agent and says that he has reported my homestead for cancellation for the reason that I am not now living on the land.

"But I am keeping men there to work the place for me, and it is the only land that I own in the world, and I have had to undergo great hardships to get these claims and have acted in every way in good faith and intent.

"Yours, &c.,

"W. S. TALLANT."

As I said, this letter was used in the Senate the other day in perfect good faith, I am sure, as an illustration of the evils of the special-agent service.

I thought I would look up Mr. Tallant's case, and this is a sample of the proofs as to him—only a sample:

TERRITORY OF DAKOTA, County of Grand Forks, ss:

I, Joseph Hofer, being duly sworn, depose and say: That I made D. S. entry No. 7995, dated March 25, 1884, for the NW.¼ Sec. 13, Tp. 151, R. 62, Grand Forks series, and commuted the same to C. E. No. 10309, July 18, 1884; that I reside on and work for the Elk Valley Farming Company, 1¼ miles south of Larimore, and that my post-office address is Larimore, Grand Forks County, Dakota Territory.

That I am well acquainted with Walter S. Tallant, of Lakota, Nelson County, Dakota Territory; that on or about the 20th of October, 1882, said Tallant asked me if I would file on a claim and prove it up for him; if I would he would give me two hundred ($200) dollars. That I replied that I could not do it now, as I had not proved up on my homestead.

That I worked for said Tallant from May 24, 1882, to March 17, 1884, continuously at $20 per month; that in last-named month I made settlement with said Tallant for all the work I had done for him; that he paid me in cash in full of all demands.

That about the 2d of November, 1882, said Tallant instructed me to go to Tp. 151, R. 62 with him to assist in building several shanties, which I did. That during a conversation in March, 1884, Walter S. Tallant said to me: "Say, Joe, in this land matter we did not make any arrangement; you can do as you want with the land." That said Tallant told me to board with my brother, John Hofer; that he furnished my said brother with provisions for both of us.

That I mortgaged my said tract for $250, to whom I do not know, but think it was to Walter S. Tallant; that out of said amount I received nothing. That said Tallant is a notary public, and he transacted all the business in connection with my filing on and proving up my said tract, paying fees and for said land.

That I gave a second mortgage for $650, to whom I do not know; that I did not know what this second mortgage was for, and do not understand it now, as I did not owe said Tallant anything.

That I received three hundred ($300) dollars from said Tallant on condition that I would deed my said tract to him (Tallant) at the expiration of one year from making my said final proof.

That I first established my residence on said tract April 10, 1883, and resided continuously thereon until September 15, 1883; from last date to March 18, 1884, I slept in my brother John's house on the NE.¼ Sec. 14, 151—62; that I boarded with my said brother all the time that I resided on my said tract; that since March 18, 1884, I have visited my said tract only four times, to wit: April 17, May 8, June 17, 18, and 19, and July 3 and 4, 1884; a total of seven days.

That in April, 1883, Walter S. Tallant said to me that if my brother (John Hofer) would file on a claim for him (Tallant) he would give him (my said brother) $300; that I soon afterward told my brother what said Tallant had offered; that my brother said if it was all right he would do so; that he did so file on the E.½ NE.¼ NW.¼ of NE.¼ and NE.¼ of SE.¼ Sec. 14, Tp. 151 N., R. 62 W.

That I am married, my family consisting of my wife and self.

GEORGE W. PIERCE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 26th day of January, A. D. 1885.

TRAVIS RHODES,
Special Agent General Land Office.

Mr. Chairman, I have here, also, Mr. Tallant's own affidavit, a lengthy paper, too long to print, as I think, but which I shall be glad to hand any one desiring to see it, in which he makes a showing, over his own signature, of his speculative entries—his employés making claims, he furnishing shanties 7 by 9 feet as residences—"taking parties out to locate" on their promise to sell to him, or mortgage, when they got title, &c., one of the parties being a Scandinavian girl, from the name, a domestic servant then and since, continuously, for whom he found a claim.

This is the party whose case, on this record, is held up as a specimen of the hardship of the order of April 3, 1885, simply because the Commissioner desired to examine the matter!

Now, with these things before him, what is the duty of the Commissioner of the Land Office? But before I come to that I have one remark to make. It is said, Mr. Chairman, that when the Commissioner of the General Land Office made his report here he had selected from the official reports which came to him those which were sent to him by his own satellites—I think the elegant and euphonious term of "sapsuckers" was used by the gentleman from Nebraska in reference to agents of the Government "who were sent out by Mr. Sparks to ride in palace cars and drink whisky at the public expense." These men, he said, had sent in their reports, and the most outrageous and exaggerated ones had been selected by Mr. Sparks to be embodied in his official report.

Now, let me be understood here in what I say. Every report which is embodied or cited in the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to this House as illustrative of the evils against the public land system was made by a Republican appointed by Senator Teller when he was Secretary of the Interior—every one of them! Not one of them had known Mr. Sparks officially when he reported. I repeat there is no partisan party question with reference to it. Sir, I hope, earnestly, the time may never come in my political experience—and I profess to be as good a Republican as any one sitting within the sound of my voice—I hope the time may never come in my experience in public life, and it never will, when I will fail to render justice to one of the opposite party when he is striving to do what he believes to be his duty as I believe General Sparks is trying to-day to do. I am in favor of doing justice to any man who is in his position. What is he? The gentleman from Minnesota says he is an honest man. Who ever denied it? Who has ever questioned the personal integrity of William A. J. Sparks? It is said he is an enthusiast. I agree to that; but his enthusiasm with reference to this question is in favor of the poor man of American citizenship who desires to receive from his country a home at the hands of the Government free of cost to himself and his family, as against speculators and land-grabbers. [Applause.]

When the gentleman from Minnesota asks me to go back to the realms of ancient history and examine what took place in the times of the Tudors, I say for myself as a member of the House of Representatives, and in view of what I know relative to the public land system, I prefer to deal with present experience rather than ancient history. What has General Sparks done? What is this order of his about which so much declamation is made here and which it is alleged is going to ruin the nation if it is carried into execution?

How many gentlemen within the sound of my voice have read it? How many of the men who have discussed this order and criticised General Sparks, can state what it is? Not one. I assert that these gentlemen can not repeat that order which they denounce. Now, I hold it in my hand. It is too long to read, but the substance of it is, and is only, that, in certain specified portions of this country, there shall be, for the present, a suspension of final action with reference to land patents. Whom does it harm? No vested right is taken from anybody. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] used what I think is a very happy expression with reference to it. He said, gentlemen will remember, that Commissioner Sparks had placed this section of country in a kind of quarantine. I thank the gentleman for the word. It is a quarantine. When the small-pox appears in a neighborhood it is quarantined. Why? In order to protect healthy people outside and those who are free from disease within; and that is precisely what was done by Commissioner Sparks—that, and nothing else. It came to the knowledge of the executive officers of the Government that these frauds were being carried on in localities, and carried on to an extent which no man in this House would believe if told to him as a narrative; and he placed these localities in quarantine—that is it exactly—until the moral leprosy could be ascertained.

Who would believe, unless his attention was officially called to it, that corporations, syndicates, some of them foreign, without a dollar of domestic capital invested, had at one time 30,000,000 acres of the public lands fenced with barb-wire fences shutting out American citizens who were seeking homesteads, and that the arm of the nation was substantially paralyzed so far as any remedy was concerned? Who would believe it? And yet that is the fact. I hold in my hand a report from the Committee on Public Lands, which was the basis of the law which I had the honor to introduce, and which was passed and became a law, prohibiting these unlawful inclosures and providing a summary method for their destruction.

The facts are worth reproducing, that the magnitude of the evils these officials were called on to deal with may be appreciated, and we will not wonder that stones were cast at the offenders instead of grass.

This was from Secretary Teller:

The following localities, in addition to the counties above mentioned in the State of Nebraska, are referred to, namely:

Kingman, Pratt, Barbour, Butler, Harper, Comanche, and Lane Counties, Kansas; Billings County, Dakota; Cassia and Oneida Counties, Idaho; Carbon, Laramie, and Sweetwater Counties, Wyoming; Humboldt, Mendocino, and Plumas Counties, California; Madison, Meagher, Gallatin, and Yellowstone Counties, Montana; Sevier County, Utah; Colfax and Mora Counties, New Mexico; and Bent, Las Animas, Pueblo, Fremont, Park, El Paso, Weld, and La Plata Counties, Colorado.

Among the cases specially reported, additional to the Brighton Ranch, in Nebraska, are those of the Arkansas Valley Cattle Company, in Colorado, whose inclosures embrace upward of 1,000,000 acres; the Prairie Cattle Company (Scotch), in Colorado, upward of 1,000,000 acres; H. H. Metcalf, River Bend, Colorado, 200,000 acres; John W. Prowers, Colorado, 200,000 acres; McDaniel & Davis, Colorado, 75,000 acres; Routchler & Lamb, Colorado, 40,000 acres; J. W. Frank, Colorado, 40,000 acres; Garnett & Langford, Colorado, 30,000 acres; E. C. Tane, Colorado, 50,000 acres; Leivesy Brothers, Colorado, 150,000 acres; Vrooman & McFife, Colorado, 50,000 acres; Beatty Brothers, Colorado, 40,000 acres; Chick, Brown & Co., Colorado, 30,000 acres; Reynolds Cattle Company, Colorado, 50,000 acres; several other cases in Colorado embracing from 10,000 acres to 30,000 acres; Coe & Carter, Nebraska, 50 miles of fence; J. W. Wilson, Nebraska, 40 miles of fence; J. W. Bosler, 20 miles; William Humphrey, Nevada, 30 miles; Nelson & Son, Nevada, 22 miles; Kennebeck Ranch, Nebraska, from 20,000 to 50,000 acres. In Kansas entire counties are reported as fenced. In Wyoming 125 large cattle companies are reported having fencing on the public lands. Among the companies and persons reported as having "immense" or "very large" areas inclosed, but specific quantities not mentioned, are the Dubuque, Cimmaron, and Renello Cattle Companies, of New Mexico; the Carlisle Cattle Company (English), in Colorado; the Marquis de Morales, in Dakota; the Wyoming Cattle Company (Scotch), in Wyoming; the Rankin Live Stock Company, in Nebraska. Several companies and persons in Montana and elsewhere are mentioned as having inclosures with no data as to areas. A large number of cases in the several States and Territories west of the one hundredth meridian are reported where the inclosures range from 1,000 to 25,000 acres and upward.

The cases above referred to are to be regarded merely as indicative of the situation.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, March 3, 1884.

DEAR SIR: Referring to our conversation on the subject of foreign companies controlling inclosures of the public lands, I send you the inclosed memorandum, which I think contains the facts you wanted. The land described, with the exception of perhaps a few thousand acres, is all Government land.

Very respectfully yours,

H. M. TELLER, Secretary.

Hon. L. E. PAYSON, House of Representatives.

The Arkansas Cattle Company have fenced in the following-described public land in the States of Colorado and Kansas, namely:

Beginning on the north bank of the Arkansas River, on the line between Secs. 19 and 20, in T. 23 S., R. 41 W., and running a northerly direction to Sec. 20, in T. 15 S., R. 41 W.; thence a northwesterly direction to Sec. 20, in T. 15 S., R. 44 W.; thence a southwesterly direction to southeast corner of Sec. 35, in T. 15 S., R. 48 W.; thence a southerly direction to the northeast corner of T. 19 S., R. 48 W., and thence a southeasterly direction to the bank of the river in Sec. 26, T. 22 S., R. 46 W. of the sixth principal meridian. Also all that other tract or parcel of land being on the south side of the Arkansas River, in Bent County, Colorado, and bounded as follows, namely: Beginning on the south bank of the Arkansas River on the east line of T. 23 S., R. 42 W., and running south on said township line to the south line of said township; thence west along the south line of said township to the middle of Sec. 33 in said township, and thence north to the Arkansas River on the north line of Sec. 21, in said township.

There appears to be about forty townships, or 921,600 acres embraced in the inclosure.

On March 24, 1884, Secretary Teller sent to the House a supplemental report relative to unlawful fencing of public lands in the State of Nebraska. The report is a special one, made by United States Deputy Surveyor G. W. Fairchild. Mr. Fairchild says:

The whole country embraced in my contract (Northwestern Nebraska) is occupied and run by capitalists engaged in cattle-raising, who have hundreds of miles of wire fence constructed to inclose all desirable land, including watercourses, to form barriers for their cattle and to prevent settlers from occupying the land. They also represent that they have desert and timber claims upon the land they have inclosed. Upon their fences they have posted at intervals notices as follows: "The —— who opens this fence had better look out for his scalp." The fences are built often so as to inclose several sections in one stock ranch, and the ranches are joined together from the mountains clear round to the mountains again. Persons going there intending to settle are also informed that if they settle on the land the ranchmen will freeze them out; that they will not employ a man who settles on or claims land, and that he can not get employment from any cattle-men in the whole country.

Sir, some of the gentlemen who are now opposing the action of the Interior Department are the same gentlemen who upon this floor did everything they could to prevent the consideration of that bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Did the syndicates of which the gentleman speaks claim the land which they had fenced under any existing law?

Mr. PAYSON. They did not. They simply went on and fenced it.

Mr. PERKINS. Then of course their action was unlawful.

Mr. PETERS. And their fences were thrown down and the lands were opened to settlement.

Mr. PAYSON. Yes; but not until after that bill became a law, and they were threatened with indictment by the district attorney of the western district of Kansas.

Mr. LAIRD. I wish the gentleman would name one man on this floor who defended that land-grab.

Mr. PAYSON. I do not say that gentleman defended, but they threw obstructions in the way of the consideration of the bill which was designed to put an end to it. I could name some gentlemen, whose voices will be heard here to-day, who objected time after time when unanimous consent was asked to take up that bill.

Mr. PERKINS. The bill to remove trespassers on the public lands?

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PERKINS. I would be glad to have the gentleman name one of them. I know that the gentleman from Nebraska and the gentlemen of my delegation did all they could to favor the passage of that bill.

Mr. PAYSON. The members of the gentleman's delegation did not do so.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] to say that there was no practical way of stopping these frauds of which he speaks without issuing the order which the Commissioner did issue?

Mr. PAYSON. No, sir; I did not say that.

Mr. RYAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois name any member who opposed the consideration of the bill of which he has been speaking?

Mr. PAYSON. Well, the gentleman who will follow me to-day is one [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. PERKINS. He can speak for himself.

Mr. RYAN. I only want to say that I was heartily in favor of that bill.

Mr. PERKINS. So was every member of our delegation.

Mr. PAYSON. Not by action.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have stated the condition of things when Commissioner Sparks came into office. Proclamations had been issued on the subject, but nothing was done. For four years there were reports from the Committee on Public Lands of this House showing that these frauds were being committed, and that whole townships of agricultural lands were being taken up by public speculators. What was to be done. I was consulted with, with other members of the Committee on Public Lands, and it was thought best then to serve notice on the whole thieving crowd that a halt would be called, to say to them "You can go on in this way, making your entries by your hired men, building your houses 7 by 9, and moving them on wheels from one tract of land to another, you can go on with these performances to your heart's content, but those lands will never be patented in this Land Office. [Applause.]

As I have said, I was consulted as to the propriety of issuing the order which was issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and I gave it my hearty concurrence, and all I regret is that, owing to the pressure brought to bear by men who were steeped to the lips in these transactions, the Secretary of the Interior was induced to rescind that order instead of keeping it in force and insisting upon its execution.

Mr. LAIRD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PAYSON. No, sir; I do not care to yield for a question. When I am through I will be glad to answer any question that may be asked me.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PAYSON. I am not willing to have my time consumed with questions which may only anticipate what I am going to say. When I am through I shall be pleased to answer any question that may be asked.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mine is a very simple question. It is this: Even if these great abuses did exist by what right does an executive officer of the Government suspend the laws of the land?

Mr. PAYSON. I will be glad to answer that before I get through. I am coming to that point.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it was stated when the legislative bill was under discussion that all this array of facts and figures had no other basis than the reports of these special agents, that no action had been taken in the Interior Department going to show that these charges were well founded, and one gentleman went so far as to say that if the facts were known the official conclusions of the officers of the Interior Department would show that there was no basis for the charges. I hold in my hand a letter written to me in response to inquiry which I addressed to the Commissioner of the General Land Office at that time, and I shall ask to have it inserted in the RECORD here.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1886.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of the 16th instant I have to state that the records of this office will contradict any assertion that may be made to the effect that alleged frauds on the public domain rest wholly upon the unsupported reports of special agents, and show that such a statement is wholly without foundation.

Special agents are required (see paragraphs 5, 7, and 9 of circular of June 23, 1885, copy inclosed), to obtain and transmit with their reports the affidavits of parties cognizant of the facts, and this is habitually done. It frequently happens that parties cognizant of facts are afraid to volunteer testimony, and in some classes of cases there are no inhabitants on or near the land. But even with these drawbacks other testimony than that derived from the personal examination of agents is sent up with their reports in fully three-fourths of the whole number of cases examined and reported. Special agents are also instructed to take pains in every instance to see and obtain the statements of claimants if they can be found. (See paragraph 2 of inclosed circular.)

In many cases the agent furnishes the affidavits of the claimants themselves, in which they swear to their own and their associates' illegal and fraudulent acts. One agent alone within the last four or five months has transmitted to this office the affidavits of entrymen in eighty-three cases, in which they admit that they never saw the lands, and that they were hired by the agents of the speculators to make the entries.

In other cases the affidavits of the agents of the speculators are submitted with the reports, and there is hardly a case reported without giving the names of witnesses and a brief statement of what they will swear to in regard to the alleged fraud.

The evidence furnished by the agents or filed by individuals informing this office of frauds is generally of the best character and is often substantiated or in a measure supported by the records.

The claimants, however, are not deprived of the lands by this evidence without the privilege of a trial. On the report of an agent showing the fraud, the entry is held for cancellation, the party in interest being allowed sixty days after due notice within which to apply for a hearing. In the notice he is fully informed of the substance of the special agent's report and of the allegations against the entry and given full opportunity to controvert the charges and show the validity of the entry.

The records of this office show that many of these claimants, after being advised of the facts alleged against them, decline to make a defense.

Since August 1, 1885, five hundred and thirteen entries have been canceled upon reports of special agents showing fraud, after claimants were duly notified that they would be given the privilege of defending their entries and had declined to do so.

These are of the most flagrant and indefensible character of cases, and the default was made simply because the parties did not, in the face of the facts discovered, care to run the risk of being prosecuted for the perjury they would have to commit in order to sustain the entries. The peril of such a course was too great and the prospect of success too doubtful to be undertaken even by the boldest and most desperate violators of the law.

The number of cases reported by special agents from April 1, 1885, to March 31, 1886, is 2,606.

Cases examined in the General Land Office from April 1, 1885, to March 31, 1886, 2,591.

Indorsed no fraud or held for further examination, 368.

Action taken:

Conclusively (a) or prima facia (b) fraudulent.
Canceled (a)	1,044
Held for cancellation or hearings ordered (b), &c	1,179
Total	2,223

It will be seen that out of the 2,591 cases reported and examined 2,223 have been shown to be fraudulent. Of the 368 suspended cases a large proportion have also been shown to be of such character as to require further investigation.

The foregoing does not include many hundreds of cases where entries have been canceled for fraud developed in contest proceedings between private individuals.

Hearings have been ordered in a considerable number of cases reported by the agents as fraudulent and the result of five hundred and fifteen of the hearings have been received since July 1, 1885.

Two hundred and seventy-four of these cases have been examined and passed upon, and the testimony taken in two hundred and sixty out of the two hundred and seventy-four confirms the correctness of the reports of the agents, and the entries were held for cancellation on the evidence adduced at the hearings.

A cursory examination of the remaining two hundred and forty-one cases shows that the percentage of cases in which the testimony taken at the trials sustains the agents' reports is fully as great as in the cases acted upon. It will thus be seen that the special agents' reports are generally sustained at a formal hearing in cases in which hearings have been had and acted upon during the period specified, and that these are the only cases in which the parties desired or were willing to attempt a defense of the entries.

In other cases they admit by their action that the reports were true; so that I can safely say that the reports alleging fraud in nineteen cases out of twenty are correct beyond question, and it is not to be assumed that the reports in the remaining twentieth are incorrect, but simply that the agents failed, through inability to secure attendance of witnesses or otherwise, to make out the case of the Government.

The parties who actually defend entries reported as fraudulent are quite uniformly purported assignees—frequently persons who procured the entries to be made—and every expedient known to violators of law is resorted to in order to defeat the Government at these hearings. Witnesses are often tampered with or intimidated. In the Estes Park cases in Colorado, where a large quantity of public land was fraudulently entered by the procurement of agents of the Earl of Dunraven, not a witness could be produced at day of hearing, although the testimony previously obtained by affidavits of numerous citizens was overwhelming in character. In Nebraska witnesses have been warned by "regulators," and in California not long since an important witness for the Government was murdered by employés of parties being proceeded against.

Every impediment is thrown in the way of the Government in attempting to discover and suppress frauds upon public lands, and obviously perjured testimony in favor of claims has constantly to be met with. Parties possessing great wealth and influence are engaged in these frauds, and all the inducements by which special agents are surrounded are adverse to, rather than in favor of, a vigorous discharge of their duties. Only men of high character and strong integrity can be employed in such service with any safety to the Government. The liability to which agents are subject is that of unduly favoring claimants, not that of improperly reporting against them. An agent may have much to lose by being faithful to the interests of the Government, since, if so faithful, he is liable to be attacked from very high and influential quarters. If he chooses to be dishonest he may have everything to gain by being unfaithful to the Government in the discharge of his duties, since violators of law are pretty apt to be willing to pay more for immunity than the Government pays for fidelity.

Special agents have no motive for reporting against meritorious cases, and there is absolutely no truth whatever in the contrary statements sometimes made.

Neither are entries held for cancellation on special agents' reports upon merely trifling grounds or for some technical failure of compliance with law. The cases in which such action is taken are those of flagrant fraud and violation of law, and the evidence is required to be of the most convincing character before action against the entries is proceeded with.

Your attention is called to my report to the Senate of May 6, 1886 (Executive Document No. 134), copy herewith, and also to pages 64 et seq. of my annual report.

In further compliance with your request I inclose a copy of memoranda handed Mr. COBB relative to circular of June 2, 1886, temporarily suspending preemption, timber culture, and desert-land entries. My report upon the Senate resolution on this subject has just been submitted to the honorable Secretary of the Interior for transmittal to the Senate. It is suggested that this report will be preferable to the memoranda hastily furnished Mr. COBB.

Very respectfully,

WM. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

Hon. L. E. PAYSON, House of Representatives.

The clamor is raised, too, that a new set of rulings is being made under this order at the Interior Department. This is best refuted and set at rest by the following letter, appearing on the files of the Land Office, explaining itself.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 26, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of recent date inclosing a letter addressed to you by William Coleman, of McCook, Nebr., asserting that "the action of the Hon. Mr. Sparks in his stopping the issue of patents has caused a wonderful amount of suffering this winter." You also allude to similar letters received by you from others and desire me to favor you with information for intelligent replies to these letters.

I have the honor to state that the case referred to by your correspondent is not affected by any order of suspension, and that this is the fact in respect to similar complaints of which I have heard. In the case mentioned the entry was made in 1885. The work of this office has for many years been at best between one and two years in arrears, and frequently longer. Entries are now being examined in regular course that were made in 1884. The order of suspension complained of affects, therefore, only entries made before that date which would not and could not be patented if there had been no suspension.

Another "hardship" alleged by your correspondent is that my rulings prevent settlers from selling or mortgaging their homestead and pre-emption claims. I beg to say that no rulings of mine prevent them from doing so. Nor have I changed any rulings upon that subject, but am simply following the laws and the decisions of the Supreme Court in the matter. It is not held by me, as alleged, that no deed or mortgage can be given until after patent. Undoubtedly a man can sell or mortgage anything he has, and can give to another just as good a title as he has himself—and no better. This is the ruling of the Supreme Court, and it is my ruling.

In Myers vs. Croft (13 Wall., 291) the court said that "the object of Congress was attained when the pre-emptor went with clean hands to the land office and proved up his right and paid the Government for his land," and that the pre-emptor was "free to sell his land after the entry, if at that time he was in good faith the owner of the land, and had done nothing inconsistent with the provisions of the law on the subject."

In this, as in all Federal and State decisions upon the subject, the primary proposition is that the entry shall be a good-faith entry, and the laws shall have been fully complied with. In such cases the transfer is good; not otherwise. Strenuous efforts have repeatedly been made to assert the doctrine that although a claim might be worthless while in the hands of the entryman, on account of his failure to comply with the law, or for other reasons, it may be strengthened and made a matter of absolute right by virtue of a transfer to a third party. Such doctrine is without foundation in legal principle, and has never been admitted by the courts or by this Department. "The purchaser takes no better claim for title than the entryman has to confer; and whatever right is thus acquired is subject to the subsequent action of the Land Department." (R. M. Chrisinger, 4 L. D., 247.)

In Root vs. Shields (1 Wool., 364) the court said:

"I think it pretty clear that some at least of these defendants purchased and paid their money without any knowledge in fact of any defect in the title. Yet they are not bona fide purchasers, for a valuable consideration, without notice, in the sense in which the terms are employed in courts of equity."

It is the universal rule of law that purchasers of an equity take no better title than their grantor had to give. Persons purchasing before patent take only an equity, and this is settled law of which everybody had notice. If an entryman's claim is not good his transfer does not make it any better. This is the ruling of the courts followed by me.

If in advising the public through these rulings and decisions that entries must be valid in order to be confirmed, and if found invalid they can not be confirmed, and that I mean, as an administrator of the law, to find out whether they are valid or not, reminding purchasers and mortgagees that they must look to the foundation of their titles as in all other cases of land transactions between man and man, then a service and not an injury will be done to people who desire to be reasonably prudent and careful in their investments.

It is not believed that every honest settler who has taken up land for a home is suffering for an opportunity to mortgage it. If a man has taken up land on purpose to sell or mortgage it, he has made a fraudulent entry and has no right to impose his pretended title upon his fellow-citizens nor to prevent other men from getting the land from the Government without paying him a bonus for the privilege.

It is inconceivable that whole communities of farmers are anxious to mortgage their actual farms. Ordinarily where people live upon land as homes they want to keep them from the grasp of money-brokers and usurers as long as they can.

A particular case which your correspondent presents is the case of a man who, after an apparently doubtful "settlement" for six months and the most meager "improvements," wants to sell or mortgage his "asserted" home on the public lands in Nebraska for the most he can get and return to his actual home in some Eastern State. This is a very common case. I do not believe that the population of a State is increased by a settlement that is abandoned as soon as its temporary purpose is accomplished, nor that the wealth of the State is augmented by an influx of money that is immediately carried out of the State in this manner.

Another case is where a man made an entry, sold the land for $800, and the purchaser finds his title not good. The real hardship in this case is that an honest settler who wants to get a home upon the public lands is compelled to remain homeless or buy off a fictitious claim. This kind of hardship I am endeavoring to prevent.

The complaint of your correspondent is that of a loan agent. His letter shows such to be his business. There are very few complaints from entrymen on account of suspension of patents. In fact there are no complaints to this office by bona fide entrymen because of delay in the issue of patents. It is the experience of this office that bona fide entrymen are in no haste for their patents (thousands remaining in this and the local offices uncalled for). But the clamor for them comes from the procurers of fraudulent entries who want patents issued before falsity of the claims can be ascertained by the Government. Regular homestead entries are not suspended, but are being examined for patent as rapidly as possible. As a matter of fact I am now causing the issue of a greater number of patents per month than have ever before been issued from this office, and in so doing am causing to be issued to lawful claimants as fast as they can be ascertained.

The suspensions that have been made are chiefly pre-emption and commuted homestead cases, of which very few are now found upon investigation to be genuine. My predecessor for three years laid before Congress in his annual and special reports, the alarming prevalency of fraudulent entries of these classes. On assuming charge of this office I found reports from officers appointed under the late administration asserting as the general result of their examinations, experience, and information that a very small per cent. of such entries were valid, and that the public domain was being largely taken under cover of pretended settlement claims made for speculation, or in the interest of corporations and combinations of capitalists, foreign and domestic, who were acquiring title to public lands in vast bodies by fraud, bribery, and perjury. Under these circumstances I caused final action looking to the issue of patents on entries conditional upon settlement, improvement, and cultivation to be suspended in districts of country in which the evidence before this office is that such entries are so largely fraudulent.

In so doing I have exercised an authority which has always been exercised by the Land Department, and which was recognized as lawful and proper by President Jackson and by Attorney-General Butler as far back as 1836. (Laws, Opinions, and Instructions, 92; 3 Opinions Attorney-General, 93.)

These early instructions and opinions were given under laws existing prior to the act of July 4, 1836 (5 Statutes, 107), which act imposed upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office increased powers and duties of supervision and control over the sale and disposal of public lands.

My immediate predecessor suspended for two or three years certifying for the issue of patents on all lands in New Mexico, the greater portion of Colorado, and in certain classes of entries in various other States and Territories. Such suspensions have always been found a necessary act of administration to prevent illegal appropriations of the public domain, and it has never been found that hardship has resulted to bona fide claimants from such suspension.

There have been hardships imposed upon settlers under rulings and decisions of this office and Department in years past, especially in connection with Congressional grants for railroads and other causes. When this has occurred settlers have not been slow to make their complaints direct to the office. Any injustice or fancied injustice is at once followed by complaints. But actual settlers on public lands have not complained to this office of my action in suspending the issue of patents, or otherwise in respect to my rulings and decisions.

On the contrary, I have received many letters expressing the gratification of bona fide settlers because of my efforts to protect the public lands against fraudulent entries, which are justly regarded by them to be inimical to their interests no less than frauds upon the Government. It is the universal testimony of gentlemen of disinterested observation who have visited me that the body of the people in the land States and Territories approve my course.

It is equally the universal testimony that money-brokers, professional land locators and speculators, attorneys and managers of cattle corporations and timber syndicates, and the whole array of persons engaged in the promotion and procurement of illegal and fraudulent entries, or realizing the benefits thereof, are just as bitterly opposed to this course as bona fide settlers are heartily in favor of it. That multitudes of complaints have been poured in upon Senators and Representatives in Congress, purporting to be from settlers or from persons assuming to represent settlers, or pretending to speak in their behalf, I have reason to believe, and also have reason to know the motives by which such communications as a class have been inspired and the objects sought to be attained.

It was formerly a practice in this office to make cases "special" for patent; that is to say, to advance them out of their order at the instance of attorneys, backed frequently by political or official influence. Even suspended cases were thus taken up and patents procured in large numbers of cases. "Suspensions of patents" were not objected to as long as a way existed for getting cases through notwithstanding the suspension. On the contrary, the parties who now complain of "suspensions" were benefited by the former practice, for the ordinary attorney's fee of $25 for getting a patent upon an unsuspended case was immediately increased by a demand for $100 more as soon as a case was found in the suspended-list. Now, no honest settler can afford, nor does he need, to pay $100 or $25 or any other sum to hasten the issue of his patent. It is not surprising, therefore, that these expedited cases turn out to be fraudulent after patents have issued and it is too late to remedy the wrong by administrative action.

I found it necessary, as a matter of justice to all claimants not less than as a measure in the public interest, to refuse to make any case "special." That has been the fundamental grievance against my administration, of attorneys who thus found a profitable vocation cut off.

Again, my early rulings and decisions clearly indicated a purpose to hold land-grant railroad corporations to the line of the law, instead of permitting their agents and attorneys to continue control of the practice and policy of this office. In like manner it was seen that magnified claims under alleged Spanish and Mexican grants were likely to meet with a scrutiny they had never before received, and finally that all claims for public land would be judged by the laws, and compliance with law insisted upon, and that robbery of public lands should be prevented so far as I had power to that end.

As soon as this was made clear an organized movement was started in this city with a view of attempting to break down any reform in the administration of the Land Department and to restore the era of successful frauds, favoritism, and fees. Circulars were issued and sent broadcast to local attorneys and land and money brokers, laying out a plan of campaign and advising them to cause letters to be written to Senators and Representatives in Congress protesting against my action in suspending final action pending the issue of patents, and representing the hardships to settlers resulting from such action.

That the letters with which Senators have been deluged are the products of this inspiration there is no manner of doubt. Individual money-lenders who, in their eagerness to exact a rate of interest that no cultivator of the soil can pay and keep his land, having loaned money without looking to their security, or loan agents who to get their percentages on the investments of their principals have taken risks beyond the bounds of prudence or reason, may of their own motion have added to the volume of systematic complaints, but the general plan of operations, in which all having a similarity of interest could join, was marked out as above stated.

In attempting to stand by the landmarks of the law I was quite as well aware at the outset as now of the interested hostility that such course would evoke. I have not expected that the unlawful clutch of speculation could be loosened from the public lands without a struggle; nor that an aggressive domination, disastrous to present and prohibitive of future actual inhabitancy over half a continent, could be checked or controlled without encountering a determined resistance.

What is complained of, Mr. Senator, to yourself and others is in reality, in my opinion, that, as an officer charged with the administration of the law, I have regarded it my duty to certify for patents to issue to those entrymen only who have made bona fide entries and have complied with the conditions prescribed by law as conditions-precedent to entitle them to have patents, and that, to the extent of my official responsibility and the means which Congress provides, I am endeavoring to prevent the consummation of frauds upon the public domain.

The letter of your correspondent is herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

WM. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

Hon. CHARLES F. MANDERSON,
United States Senate.

Before the gentleman from Kansas proceeds I wish only to say in reply to my friend from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] that from 1834 down to the present day the power of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior to investigate frauds and refuse patents after final certificate has never been questioned in the Interior Department. I have the authorities here at hand.

I deny the doctrine asserted here that the final certificate is title. I deny that the Commissioner is only a mere clerk to ratify the finding of the register, and I assert that until the patent issues the power resides in the Department to inquire into alleged fraud and when it is proven to deny the patent, and I cite some of the many cases on the question, all, except one by Judge Deady of one of the courts in Oregon, to the same purport.

The practice has been uniform in the Interior Department, as I have said.

Mr. Attorney-General Butler in 1834 gave an opinion (3 Op. A. G., 93), the substance of which is that the local land officers act in a quasi-judicial capacity in determining the questions of fact on which the final certificate issues, but the issuing of patents, however, depends on the Commissioner, who may suspend them where the decisions of the local officers were obtained by fraud or founded on material errors of fact or law.

This has been followed without exception to this date, notable cases being the Charlemagne town case, decided on review by Mr. Secretary Teller February 20, 1884 (Decisions, volume 2, page 780); the Cogswell case (volume 3, Decisions), July 21, 1884, by Secretary Teller, and the Chrisinger case, by Mr. Secretary Lamar, January 25, 1886.

And in the courts the authorities are numerous that not only has the Department the power to investigate after final certificate, but the purchaser from the entryman takes no better title than the entryman has.

I call attention to a collection of cases on the question in a letter of the Commissioner in the RECORD of June 22 instant.

The questions are: First, that the action of the register and receiver is conclusive except in case of fraud; second, that the assignment of an entry before patent estops an inquiry into the validity of the claim even in case of fraud; and third, that an entry of public lands can be set aside for cause only by the judicial courts.

These propositions have been advanced in scores of cases before the Supreme Court of the United States and the supreme courts of the several States, and have as repeatedly been denied.

The propositions that the transfer of a claim adds anything to its efficacy against the United States, or that a certificate of purchase is in the nature of an investiture of title, or that the purchaser of an entry before patent is in any legal sense an innocent purchaser, are refuted by decisions hereinbefore cited. Many others might be referred to.

In Irvine vs. Marshall (20 How., 555) it was held that although a certificate may be the subject of bargain and sale, yet the United States can take care that conveyance shall be to him who is in good faith its vendee, and the court said:

> The reception of the certificate of purchase as evidence of title may be regular and convenient as a rule of business, but it has not been anywhere established as conclusive evidence, much less has it been adjudged to forbid or exclude proofs of the real and just rights of claimants.

A mere declaration in writing by a vendor that the vendee has paid the purchase-price of land, and that he intends to give him a deed, is not a document purporting to convey title. (Osterman vs. Baldwin, 6 Wall., 116.)

Legal title does not pass by contract of purchase without deed, and one who holds or claims by contract only is not protected as a bona fide purchaser for value. (Boone vs. Chiles, 10 Pet., 177.)

It will not do for a purchaser to close his eyes to facts which are open to his investigation for the exercise of that diligence which the law imposes. Such purchasers are not protected. (Boush vs. Wall, 15 Pet., 111.)

Purchasers by quitclaim deed even are not regarded as bona fide purchasers without notice. (Oliver vs. Piatt, 3 How., 333; May vs. Le Claire, 11 Wall., 217; Dickerson vs. Colegrove, 100 U. S., 578.)

Party without title can not acquire it by payment of taxes on land. (Homestead Co. vs. Valley R. R., 17 Wall., 153.)

A purchaser of land must look to every part of the title which is essential to its validity. (Brush vs. Ware, 15 Pet., 112.)

States have no power to declare certificates of purchase of equal dignity with a patent. (Bagnell vs. Broderick, 13 Pet., 436.)

If, before patent issues, the Land Department finds the entry erroneous it may treat the assignment as void, and, notwithstanding it, set the entry aside. (Franklin vs. Kelley, 2 Nebr., 78.)

> The act of 1841 provides that the entry shall be made with the register of the Land Office. The acts organizing the Land Department of the Government provide that the action of the register shall be subject to revision and supervision by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and entry with the register is dependent upon the approval of his superior, so far as the course and order of the business go; and, without the affirmative action of the Commissioner, the patents issue. It would be a great evil if a party claiming a pre-emption right could, as soon as his entry was made, convey the land to a third party, and thereby prevent the Commissioner from re-examining and disapproving the entry if it was erroneously allowed. Such course would expose the Government to serious loss, and pervert a statute conceived in a wise policy and a generous spirit into a means of perpetrating the greatest frauds. This is the mischief aimed at. The object was to protect the Government, and in this view the language—that the right secured by the act should not be assigned—is apt. As between the claimant and the Government, his interest is a right merely until the patent issues. It is subject to reinvestigation and, on inquiry, to be disregarded by the Department. Until the patent issues, it is treated by the Government not as a title but as a right or a claim of right.
> I admit that if an entry under the act is made with the register, and the Commissioner finds that it was illegally allowed, as, for instance, if the entry is upon lands not subject to pre-emption, and he sets it aside, a conveyance intermediate the entry and the official act of vacating it would be void. Such a conveyance would be within the mischief. But if a valid entry be made, and a patent issued upon it, a conveyance intermediate those two acts would not be within the mischief. The issue of the patent is a confirmation of the entry; it relates back to it, and takes effect from it. (Astrom vs. Hammond, 3 McLean, 107.)

The courts have often ruled that where the right to a patent has once become vested in a purchaser of public lands it is equivalent, so far as the Government is concerned, to a patent issued. (Stark vs. Starrs, 6 Wall., 402; Simmons vs. Wagner, 101 U. S., 260.) But none of these decisions hold that the certificate and receipt of the register and receiver is conclusive evidence that a right has vested, nor that a patent is not necessary for the conveyance of the legal title. In Myers vs. Croft (13 Wall., 291), the court says that the pre-emptor could sell after entry if he came up and made his proof and payment "with clean hands." But he must be in good faith the owner of the land and have "done nothing inconsistent with the provisions of the law on the subject."

The validity of a conveyance depends upon the validity of the entry, and that is always a proper subject of inquiry by the Land Department at any time before patent issues, and by the courts in a proper proceeding afterward.

In the case of Harkness vs. Underhill (1 Black., 316), counsel for plaintiff urged that—

> The register and receiver having sold the land to Waters in conformity with the instructions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office had no further power or jurisdiction over it. Neither had the Commissioner of the General Land Office power to set aside the sale even for fraud. This could only be done by judicial authority.

Counsel for defendant in reply cited the language of the supreme court of Missouri (in Green vs. Hill, 9 Mo., 322):

> It is the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to revise the proceedings of the register and receiver and vacate entries which may have been illegally made, and thereby arrest the completion of a title originating in fraud, mistake, or violation of law. And to the same effect: Perry vs. O'Hanlon, 11 Mo., 585; Huntsucker vs. Clark, 12 Mo., 333; Nelson vs. Simms, 23 Miss., 383; Glen vs. Thistle, 23 Minn., 42; Mitchell vs. Cobb, 13 Ala., 137; Dickinson vs. Brown, 9 Smeade & Marshall, 130; Gray vs. McCance, 4 Ill.

The court (Mr. Justice Catron) said: "The question is again raised whether this entry having been allowed by the register and receiver could be set aside by the Commissioner.

> This question has several times been raised and decided in this court upholding the Commissioner's powers. (Garland vs. Winn, 20 How., 8; Lytle vs. The State of Arkansas, 22 How.)

In Barnard vs. Ashley (18 How., 43), the court said that the power of supervision by the Commissioner of the General Land Office "is exercised by virtue of the act of July 4, 1836, which provides 'that from and after the passage of this act the executive duties now prescribed, or which may hereafter be prescribed by law appertaining to the survey and sale of the public lands of the United States, or in any wise respecting such public lands, and also such as relate to private claims of land and the issuing of patents for all grants of land under the authority of the Government of the United States, shall be subject to the supervision and control of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under the direction of the President of the United States.'

> The necessity of "supervision and control," vested in the Commissioner acting under the direction of the President, is too manifest to require comment, further than to say that the facts found in this record show that nothing is more easily done than apparently to establish, by ex parte affidavits, cultivation and possession of particular quarter-sections of lands, when the fact is untrue. That the act of 1836 modifies the powers of registers and receivers to the extent of the Commissioner's action in the instance before us, we hold to be true. But if the construction of the act of 1836 to this effect were doubtful, the practice under it for nearly twenty years could not be disturbed without manifest impropriety.
> The case relied on, of Wilcox vs. Jackson (13 Pet., 511) was an ejectment suit, commenced in February, 1836; and as to the acts of the register and receiver, in allowing the entry in that case, the Commissioner had no power of supervision, such as was given him by act of July 4, 1836, after the case was in court.
> In the next case (9 How., 333) all the controverted facts on which both sides relied had transpired and were concluded before the act of July 4, 1836, was passed; and therefore its construction, as regards the Commissioner's powers under the act of 1836, was not involved. Whereas, in the case under consideration, the additional proceedings were had before the register and receiver in 1837, and were subject to the new powers conferred on the Commissioner.
> In Vaquire vs. Tyler (1 Black, 195) the court recognized and affirmed the "plenary powers conferred upon the Commissioner by the act of July 4, 1836," and said that the power of the Secretary of the Interior under the act of March 3, 1849, to revise on appeal is "necessarily coextensive with the powers to adjudge by the Commissioner."

In Shepley vs. Cowan (91 U. S., 340), the court say:

> The officers of the Land Department are specially designated by law to receive, consider, and pass upon proofs presented with respect to settlement upon the public lands with a view to secure the rights of pre-emption. If they err in the construction of the law applicable to any case, or if fraud is practiced upon them, or they themselves are chargeable with fraudulent practices, their rulings may be reviewed and annulled by the courts when a controversy arises between private parties founded upon their decisions.

In Marquiz vs. Frisbie (101 United States, 475) the court say:

> We have repeatedly held that the courts will not interfere with the officers of the Government while in the discharge of their duties in disposing of the public lands, either by injunction or mandamus. (Litchfield vs. Register and Receiver, 9 Wool., 552; Gaines vs. Thompson, 7 Id., 347; The Secretary vs. McGarrahan, 9 Id., 289.)
> After the United States has parted with its title and the individual has become vested with it, the equities subject to which he holds it may be enforced, but not before. (Johnson vs. Towsley, 13 Id., 72; Shepley vs. Cowan, 91 U. S., 330.)
> We did not deny the right of the courts to deal with the possession of the land prior to the issue of the patent or to enforce contracts between the parties concerning the land. But it is impossible thus to transfer a title which is yet in the United States.

In The United States vs. Schurz (102 United States, 395) the court say:

> The Constitution of the United States declares that Congress shall have the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property belonging to the United States. Under this provision the sale of the public lands was placed by statute under the control of the Secretary of the Interior. To aid him in the performance of this duty a bureau was created, at the head of which is the Commissioner of the General Land Office with several subordinates. To them, as a special tribunal, Congress confided the executing of the laws which regulate the surveying, the selling, and the general care of these lands.

Congress has also enacted a system of laws by which "rights to these lands may be acquired and the title of the Government conveyed to the citizens. This court has with a strong hand upheld the doctrine that so long as the legal title of these lands remained in the United States, and the proceedings for acquiring it were as yet infieri, the courts would not interfere to control the exercise of the power vested in their tribunal. To that doctrine we still adhere.

And again (Id., 411):

The question whether any particular tract belonging to the Government was open to sale, pre-emption, or homestead right is in every instance a question of law as applied to the facts for the determination of those officers.

In Quinby vs. Cowlan (104 U. S., 420) the court say:

The laws of the United States prescribe with particularity the manner in which portions of public domain may be acquired by settlers. They require personal settlement upon the lands desired and their inhabitation and improvement, and a declaration of the settler's acts and purposes to be made in the proper office of the district within a limited time after the public surveys have been extended over the lands. By them a land department has been created to supervise all the various steps required for the acquisition of the title of the Government. Its officers are required to receive, consider, and pass upon the proofs furnished as to the alleged settlements upon the lands, and their improvement when pre-emption rights are claimed, and, in case of conflicting claims to the same tract, to hear the contesting parties.

The proofs offered in compliance with the law are to be presented, in the first instance, to the officers of the district where the land is situated, and from their decision an appeal lies to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and from him to the Secretary of the Interior. For mere errors of judgment as to the weight of evidence on these subjects by any of the subordinate officers the only remedy is by an appeal to his superior of the Department. The courts can not exercise any direct appellate jurisdiction over the rulings of those officers or of their superior in the Department in such matters, nor can they reverse or correct them in a collateral proceeding between private parties.

In this case, the allegation that false and fraudulent representations as to the settlement of the plaintiff were made to the officers of the Land Department is negatived by the finding of the court. It would lead to endless litigation and be fruitful of evil if a supervisory power were vested in the courts over the action of the numerous officers of the Land Department on the mere questions of fact presented for their determination. It is only when those officers have misconstrued the law applicable to the case as established before the Department, and thus have denied to parties rights which, upon a correct construction, would have been conceded to them, or where misrepresentations and fraud have been practiced necessarily affecting their judgment, that the courts can in a proper proceeding interfere and refuse to give effect to their action. On this subject we have repeatedly and with emphasis expressed our opinion, and the matter should be deemed settled. (Johnson vs. Towsley, 13 Wall., 72; Shepley vs. Cowan, 91 U. S., 330-340; Moore vs. Robbins, 96 Ibid., 530.)

The doctrine applicable to the conclusive character of the solemn judgments of courts, with full jurisdiction over the parties, and the subject-matter, made after appearance, pleading, and contest by parties on both sides, can not be properly applied to the proceedings of the land office, where no issue is taken, no adversary proceedings had, no contest made, and the land officers act only on such evidence as claimant presents, with no means of controverting its truth. (United States Minor, 114 United States, 243.)

The quasi-judicial nature of the functions of land officers has reference only to cases in which individuals have, as against each other, contested the right to a patent before them. (Id.)

Where a patent has been obtained through mistake or by fraud and perjury, and there are no innocent holders for value, the legal title conveyed by the patent may be set aside in a court of equity. (Id.)

The principles settled by the courts are that the action of registers and receivers in admitting an entry of public lands is not conclusive, but is subject to review by the superior officers of the Land Department, by appeal in cases of contest between private parties, and as a matter of executive supervision in cases not of individual contest; that the latter are cases between the Government and the entryman alone; that assignees before patent have no standing as innocent purchasers; that until patent issues on public-land entries the legal title to the land remains in the United States; that the Commissioner of the General Land Office may reject and cancel unpatented entries for illegality and fraud; that this is necessarily an act of executive jurisdiction; that the duties of supervising the disposal of public lands are executive duties and are not the subject of judicial interference; that the question of passing the title of the United States upon an entry of public lands under the public-land law is essentially a question of executive and not of judicial determination; that the point where the jurisdiction of the courts begin is the point at which executive jurisdiction ceases, namely, after patent has been issued, when, in a proper proceeding, the courts may intervene to correct the errors of executive action; and that it is only after the conveyance of legal title by patent that purchasers for value are protected by the courts.

I do not intend to go into an argument as to the legality of the recent order temporarily suspending certain classes of entries pending the proposed legislation repealing the pre-emption laws. My colleague on the committee [Mr. COBB] has announced his intention of printing in the RECORD Senate Ex. Doc. 170, which shows a long line of precedents, running back for over fifty years, of suspending the right of purchase or entry of public lands for a limited time in anticipation of legislation proposed and pending.

Not, as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. NELSON] assumes in his remarks, for railroad purposes, after a map of definite location of the road was filed in the Department. Not at all; most of the cases referred to were in advance of legislation, and all before any map of definite location was filed. The gentleman's argument is based on an entire misapprehension of the facts, for the purpose of giving the corporations to be benefited the fullest advantage of all the public lands.

I read a few extracts from that document:

[Circular.]

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 2, 1886.

To registers and receivers United States land offices:

GENTLEMEN: The repeal of the pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land laws being now the subject of consideration by Congress, all applications to enter lands under said laws are hereby suspended from and after this date until the 1st day of August, 1886, and you are hereby directed to receive no filings or new applications or entry under said laws during said time.

WM. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

Approved.

L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary.

I have the honor to state that a circular of which the foregoing is a copy was issued from this office with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior on the 2d instant.

The authority to issue such circular was founded upon precedents, deemed to be sufficient, of more than forty years' standing, sanctioned by judicial decisions and by Congressional recognition.

The legislative authority upon which these precedents were established appears to have been drawn from the general powers of supervision and administration conferred upon the executive department (act of April, 1812, 2 Statutes, 716; July 4, 1836, 5 Statutes, 107; 3 March, 1849, 9 Statutes, 395; Revised Statutes, sections 441, 452), and upon the special recognition of the power of the President to create reservations of public lands found in the pre-emption act of 1841 and similar acts.

The following are among the leading decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in which the authority of the President to reserve public lands from entry has been affirmed, the acts of the officers of the Land Department in this respect recognized as the acts of the President, and the legal effect of such reservations upheld.

In 1827, in the case of Chotard vs. Pope (12 Wheat., 586), the court said:

"An authority 'to enter' a certain quantity of land does not authorize a location on lands previously appropriated or withdrawn from the lands offered for sale."

In McConnell vs. Trustees (12 Wheat., 582), the court recognized "the reasonableness of reserving a public spring for public uses."

In Kissell vs. Saint Louis, an entry was held invalid because the land had been "reserved from sale" by officers of the Land Department. (18 How., 19.)

At the request of the Secretary of War, the Commissioner of the General Land Office in 1824 colored and marked upon a map a section of land as reserved for military purposes and directed it to be reserved from sale for those purposes. In the case of Wilcox vs. Jackson (13 Pet., 513), involving this land, the Supreme Court reciting the foregoing said:

"We consider this, too, as having been done by authority of law, for among other provisions in the act of 1830 all lands are exempted from pre-emption which are reserved from sale by order of the President. Now, although the immediate agent in requiring this reservation was the Secretary of War, yet we feel justified in presuming that it was done by the approbation and direction of the President. The President speaks and acts through the heads of the several Departments in relation to subjects which appertain to their respective duties. Both military posts and Indian affairs, including agencies, belong to the War Department. Hence we consider the act of the War Department in requiring this reservation to be made as being in legal contemplation the act of the President; and, consequently, that the reservation thus made was, in legal effect, a reservation made by order of the President, within the terms of the act of Congress."

In the pre-emption act of 1830 it is provided that the right of pre-emption contemplated by the act shall not extend "to any land which is reserved from sale by act of Congress or by order of the President." In the pre-emption act of 1841 (section 2258 Revised Statutes), it is provided that "lands included in any reservation by any treaty, law, or proclamation of the President of the United States" shall not be subject to entry under the act. The act of 1853, extending the pre-emption laws to California, excepted from their operation lands "reserved by competent authority."

In Grisar vs. McDowell (6 Wall., 381), the Supreme Court, construing the foregoing acts, say:

"The provisions in the acts of 1830 and 1841 show very clearly that by 'competent authority' is meant the authority of the President and officers acting under his direction."

And the court further said in this case "that it was of no consequence to the plaintiff whether or not the President possessed sufficient authority to make the reservation." It was enough that the title remained in the United States. A legal entry could not be made while the lands were in the reserved condition.

In 1846 Congress made a grant of lands for the improvement of the Des Moines River below the Raccoon Fork. This grant was constructively held by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior to apply to lands above the Fork, and lands above the Fork, amounting to upward of 270,000 acres, were, on June 1, 1849, withdrawn from sale and entry by this office for the benefit of the river grant. It was afterward held by the Supreme Court that there was no grant above Raccoon Fork But under the excepting provisions of an act making a railroad grant, subsequent to the river grant, which subsequent act declared that lands reserved to the United States in any manner by competent authority, for any purpose whatever, should be reserved from the operation of the act, the courts have steadily held that lands so reserved by the Land Department for river improvement purposes, although under an erroneous construction of the law, did not pass with the railroad grant, and have also held that the withdrawal was an inhibition against settlement and pre-emption rights. (Wolcott vs. Des Moines, 5 Wall., 681; Homestead Co. vs. Valley R. R., 17 Wall., 153; Wolsey vs. Chapman, 101 U. S., 755; Dubuque and Sioux City R. R. Co. vs. Des Moines Valley R. R. Co., 109 U. S., 329.)

And in Wolsey vs. Chapman it was specifically held that an order of reservation sent out from the appropriate Executive Department in the regular course of business is the legal equivalent of the President's own order to the same effect, and is therefore such a proclamation by the President reserving land from sale as the law contemplates. (P. 770.)

The foregoing decisions recognise the abstract right of the Executive Department to withhold lands from entry and thus to suspend the operation of the public-land laws to the extent of such withdrawals. Necessarily specific cases are treated of in these decisions because specific cases were before the court, but the court affirmed in these cases a general principle which it applied to the particular cases decided. This was the right of the Executive to reserve lands from entry. Given the right of suspension, the only question that remains is that of the necessity or expediency of its exercise—the question of propriety. The extent of suspensions may be considered in connection with the question of expediency or propriety, but does not enter into a discussion of the question of abstract right. Neither does the occasion for suspensions—the reasons why they are made—touch the fundamental question of the right to make suspensions.

If a suspension of public-land entries, wholly or in part, in executive discretion, is lawful for one cause deemed sufficient by the executive authority, it is equally lawful for another cause deemed equally sufficient. It is the judgment of the Executive that determines the sufficiency in either case, and in either case the question whether the occasion is sufficient or not is one affecting the responsibility of executive officers in the exercise of their powers, and not a question of the power itself. Conceding the right to withdraw, or withhold from entry, one section of land, or any subdivision of a section as a matter incident to administrative supervision and control, the right to withhold any larger area is equally admitted. It can not be said that a suspension of entries is authorized for a limited quantity of land, but not authorized for a larger quantity; that it may be made for one locality and not for another; for a part of one State or Territory and not for the whole State or Territory; or that it may be made for a portion of the public lands and not for all of them. It is a question of principle, and not a question of the extent to which the principle shall be applied. Indeed, a suspension confined to certain localities and in favor of particular interests is a far more dangerous exercise of the power of suspension than one operating generally. In the former case a latitude of discretion is opened which may be abused for the promotion of favorite interests or the accomplishment of particular purposes not of general or public import. In the other case there is a uniformity through which all interests are affected alike, and such general suspension can be founded only upon public considerations.

Among the precedents relied upon as authority for the circular named the following are cited:

On March 3, 1883, Congress passed an act exempting the public lands in the State of Alabama from the operation of the mineral laws, and providing for the sale of lands previously reported as mineral, and for the disposal under agricultural laws of unsold lands of that character after an offering at public sale.

The operation of this act, so far as relates to sales and entries of lands previously reported as mineral, has been in suspension up to the present date in anticipation, as I am advised, of amendatory legislation. On two occasions (one under the previous and one under the present administration) executive proclamations have been issued carrying the act into effect, and in each instance the President has revoked the same.

As early as September 28, 1828, Commissioner Graham, by direction of the President, instructed the register of the land office at Piqua, Ohio, to reserve from sale the lands along and within 5 miles of what was supposed would be the route of the canal from Dayton to Lake Erie, in aid of the construction of which a grant of land had been made to the State of Ohio by act of Congress approved May 24, 1828. This reservation embraced about 500,000 acres.

On April 11, 1844, the Commissioner of this office (Thomas H. Blake), by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, instructed the proper district land officers in Wisconsin to withdraw from sale or entry for any purpose whatever all the vacant lands, surveyed and unsurveyed, situated within 2 miles of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in anticipation of a proposed grant by Congress to the State of Wisconsin to aid in the improvement of the navigation of said rivers.

The Congress then in session having failed to make the proposed grant, the withdrawal was revoked by this office under instructions from the Secretary of the Treasury dated July 14, 1845, having been in force for more than a year. This withdrawal covered about 500,000 acres.

During the years 1853 and 1854 a great quantity of land was withdrawn from sale or entry (except for valid pre-emption claims) by the Commissioner of this office, "by order of the President," "issued on the representations and at the solicitations of members of both Houses of Congress," in anticipation of grants being made to aid in the construction of certain proposed railroads. The lands so withdrawn were situated in ten States and thirty-four land districts, and amounted to about 31,000,000 acres, according to Commissioner Wilson's report for 1854, as follows:

"At the instance of many members of Congress and others, about 31,000,000 of acres in several of the land States had been withdrawn from the market in anticipation of grants for railroad and other internal improvements. As such grants were not made, it was deemed expedient to restore these masses of lands to market, especially in view of the passage of the bill graduating the price of the public lands, and this has been done, except where the reservation was for a fixed period, or grants have already been made." (Land Office Report, 1854, page 6.)

Congress having failed to make the proposed grants, the lands were restored to market, by order of the President, during the months of October, November, and December, 1854.

In anticipation of a grant to the State of Iowa to aid in the construction of four railroads in that State, Commissioner Hendricks, on May 10, 1856, issued telegraphic instructions to the registers and receivers for the six land districts in said State, withdrawing from sale or location all lands south of the line between townships 91 and 92, comprising about two-thirds of the entire State. The act making the grant did not receive the signature of the President until May 15, 1856.

During the year 1856, in anticipation of railroad grants to the States of Louisiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Mississippi, the Commissioner of the General Land Office issued telegraphic instructions to the local officers of twenty land districts in said States suspending from sale and location large bodies of land, as follows:

State.	Order of suspension.	Date of grant.
Louisiana	May 31, 1856	June 3, 1856
Michigan	May 30, 1856	June 3, 1856
Wisconsin	May 29, 1856	June 3, 1856
Mississippi	Aug. 9, 1856	Aug. 11, 1856

The lands thus withdrawn in anticipation of proposed grants amounted to at least 50,000,000 acres exclusive of lands previously appropriated.

During the same year railroad grants were made to the States of Florida and Alabama, and in 1857 grants for several roads were made to the Territory of Minnesota. Long before any of the roads provided for in said grants had been located, and consequently before any right to any particular lands under the grants had vested in the States, the Commissioner of the General Land Office issued directions to the local officers of nineteen land districts in said States and Territories suspending the sale and location of all lands within what was supposed would be the limits of the several grants, amounting to more than 28,000,000 acres, exclusive of lands previously appropriated, as follows:

State.	Date of grant.	Order of suspension.
Florida	May 17, 1856	May 17, 1856 May 23, 1856 June 9, 1856 July 8, 1856 Sept. 6, 1856
Alabama	May 17, 1856	May 17, 1856
Do	June 3, 1856	June 19, 1856
Minnesota	Mar. 3, 1857	Mar. 7, 1857

Representations having been made that pre-emption claims for speculative purposes were being placed upon the lands within the limits of the withdrawals in the States of Wisconsin, Michigan, Alabama, and Florida, the local officers in said States were, on December 16, 1856, February 2, February 13, and April 29, 1857, respectively, directed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office to refuse to receive any pre-emption claims, based on settlements initiated after the receipt by them of said orders, on large bodies of lands in their districts. These suspensions from pre-emption were prior to the location of the several roads in whose interest they were made, and consequently prior to the attachment of any right under the grant to any particular lands. This inhibition against the right of pre-emption affected more than 40,000,000 acres of public land.

Mr. Chairman, these cases are cited as illustrative of the practice, where railroads were to be benefited, and this practice has been continued down to a very recent date.

Now, the bill repealing these laws by which these frauds were possible is pending in this Congress and has passed both Houses, and only because the Senate has added other provisions not as yet accepted by the House has the bill failed to become a law.

Under these precedents, so numerous and so uniform, and the power to so act never having been questioned, and the Supreme Court having affirmed their validity when the suspending orders were issued, I insist, sir, that the Secretary had the power to issue the circular and that the exigency of the case warranted it.

Mr. Chairman, a single word more and I am done.

The object of all this Department action is one which should commend it to every patriotic heart. It is the attempt to save, so far as is possible, the remainder of the public lands for the actual settler, direct from the Government instead of through the intermediary of the speculator; as a gift from the nation rather than a purchase from a trader; and to this end the Secretary and Commissioner have given their best efforts and most earnest endeavor.

They desire and should receive the hearty support of every honest citizen. Indeed, sir, when and where the facts are known they do receive it.

I deeply regret that gentlemen have thought it necessary to make these personal attacks upon General Sparks. His honesty, his personal integrity, has not been attacked; indeed it has been conceded in this debate.

It goes without saying that he has no motive but the impulse of right-doing in the administration of the affairs of his office and to deserve public approval and popular commendation. His object is to protect and provide for the poor and the homeless, and the war which he has made and is making is upon the lawless and the depredator. Good men commend him and his course. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] has read an earnest letter from one of the citizens of my own State of whom the nation feel proud—Hon. E. B. Washburne—which speaks volumes; and knowing that another of our citizens, whose indorsement would be a matter of pride to any man, had written a letter to General Sparks of similar import, I have procured it and will read so much of it as relates to this matter:

BLOOMINGTON, ILL., April 16, 1886.

DEAR GENERAL:

* * * * * * * *

The great corporations and other monopolies have for many years been stretching out their strong and unscrupulous arms over the public lands remaining for enterprising and honest settlers. Millions of acres of this domain have been seized and stolen, and I have to say this robbery could not have succeeded without the collusion and co-operation of agents employed to protect the interests of the people.

Astounding frauds have been perpetrated and are now constantly coming to light, proving how vast and how reckless this organized plunder has been.

Thousands of laboring men with their wives and children have been denied the chance to gain a livelihood by the power and greed of heartless and rich corporations. Immense combinations have been formed, including the ties of political and social life, for a common object—to break down all attempts at Washington to crush out a venal system which has flourished by departmental indifference or favor.

Whoever stands in the way of this selfish league must expect to be confronted with relentless hostility and bitter persecution.

He will be assailed with most formidable influences outside and inside the party to which he may be attached.

Corruptionists are not troubled with scruples. They use politics as the tools of a vile traffic, and shift from side to side as interest may be best served by convenient change. By means of wealth and association they can procure what would seem externally to be a good showing to help the worst cause.

Do not be deterred in your good work by malicious opposition or insidious injustice.

Be firm and temperate, and the country will sustain whatever is right.

Throttle land-grabbing corporations; punish fraud, and protect the plain people, as Lincoln loved to call his chief support in time of peril and vexation.

Very truly,

DAVID DAVIS.

General W. A. J. SPARKS,
Washington, D. C.

The harsh criticism, the severe censure, and the denunciation of the Department in the interest, directly or indirectly, of these fraudulent acquisitions of the public lands may well be borne by one who can receive such commendations from men like Washburne and Davis, and he may with serene composure and confidence await the finding and verdict of that greater tribunal to which, as public servants, we are all amenable and in which we must acquiesce, the judgment of the American people.

The CHAIRMAN. That can not be done.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It was done in one instance a while ago; why can it not be done now?

The CHAIRMAN. The House has fixed a limit upon the debate, and in the opinion of the Chair the Committee of the Whole has no right to vary that limitation.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. An extension of time was made half an hour ago in Committee of the Whole; why can it not be done again?

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair, who was not in the chair at that time, is informed that in the case referred to there was an extension of time to both sides alike, which balances that account. The present occupant of the chair declines to submit a proposition to extend the time beyond the limit which the House has fixed.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Chairman, this House did limit debate on this question to one hour on each side. Afterward, by unanimous consent, the Committee of the Whole extended the time by granting ten minutes additional to each side. I think there are ample precedents for such action.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. There need be no more talk about unanimous consent. It can not be obtained to extend the time of this discussion on either side.

Mr. RYAN. I yield the remainder of my time to my colleague [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. PAYSON. Before the gentleman from Kansas proceeds I wish only to say in reply to my friend from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] that from 1834 down to the present day the power of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior to investigate frauds and refuse patents after final certificate has never been questioned in the Interior Department. I have the authorities here at hand.

Mr. LAIRD. Will the gentleman from Kansas yield to me, that I may ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] one question?

Mr. PETERS. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question myself. I desire to ask him whether I understood him to state that I had opposed the passage of a law making it a criminal offense for parties to fence public lands. I did not so understand the gentleman, but I am informed by those around me that he did say I opposed the passage of such a law.

Mr. PAYSON. I said that the gentleman as a member of the Kansas delegation opposed the consideration of the bill on different occasions, and in support of this statement I refer to gentlemen who now hear me.

Mr. PETERS. I have never opposed the passage of any law of that character.

Mr. PAYSON. Let us not be misunderstood. Upon the passage of the bill the gentleman voted in favor of it. But he will remember, if he drives me to make the statement—I do not care to make it unless he desires——

Mr. PETERS. I want to understand you.

Mr. PAYSON. That on three different occasions the Speaker had agreed to recognize me to ask unanimous consent to consider and pass the bill, but on two of those occasions the gentleman said he would object, and did object, and he stated to me the reason why.

Mr. PETERS. I have no recollection of the circumstance whatever.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to make a further statement in answer to the gentleman from Illinois. When he says that a large portion of the land of Southwestern Kansas had been fenced by a cattle company, the settlers being thereby kept out, he refers, I presume, to the Comanche Company. The best answer that can be made to that statement and the best argument which can be submitted upon the proposition now pending is a reference to the situation of the seventh Congressional district of my State and the wonderful increase in population, including that very territory which three years ago was fenced in by the cattle companies. I say that the facts and figures as presented in that district alone constitute an irrefutable argument against all these propositions which have been made, so far as they apply to the State of Kansas.

In 1880, according to the United States census, the seventh Congressional district had a population of 147,000. It embraced thirty-one counties, eighteen of which were at that time organized and thirteen unorganized. The census of March 1, 1885, taken under the authority of the State of Kansas, disclosed the fact that the seventh Congressional district had 204,000 people within its limits; and to-day every county of those thirty-one within that Congressional district, with one exception, has either been organized or steps are being taken to organize it. All of those counties have been organized except four; and in three of those four the census-taker has been appointed and the necessary preliminary steps are being taken for organization. Under our State law no county can be organized unless it has a bona fide population of 2,500 inhabitants; and before the organization of a county a census-taker appointed by the governor of the State must take the census of the county. If that census discloses 2,500 bona fide population the governor declares the county organized and calls an election for county officers.

I state again that to-day, with the exception of one county, every one of those thirty-one counties is organized, or preliminary steps have been taken for organization. According to the census of 1885, the seventh Congressional district had a population of 204,000. Since that time no census has been taken except the township census. But upon a careful estimate from all sources the population of that district to-day is not less than 315,000. There are but few cattle ranches in it. It is one vast agricultural region, taken up by the homesteader, the pre-emptor, the mechanic, the artisan, who, driven out of the overcrowded cities of the East by failure to obtain employment, have taken Horace Greeley's advice, "gone West," and established for themselves homes in Southwestern Kansas, where the best part of the public domain remains. I ask, does this state of affairs indicate that extensive frauds have been committed?

Upon this map of the State of Kansas which I have here members can see the boundaries of the seventh Congressional district. Take Comanche County, to which the gentleman refers, which was organized three years ago. Prior to that time nearly three-fourths of that county was fenced in one field and was under the control of the Comanche County pool. But when it became demonstrated that the rainfall was so equitably distributed that all that country was fit for agricultural purposes there came the tide of emigration rolling from the East, each successive wave going farther West. Thus the wire fences of this Comanche County pool were torn down until every quarter-section of available land in that county was taken up and the county organized, it having now a population of 7,000 or 8,000 people. All this has been done in three years; and this was the end of those cattle-men. They have taken their cattle into the Indian Territory or New Mexico or up into the northern Territories, and now the farmer and home-seeker has taken possession of the land.

I want to call attention of gentlemen to certain counties particularly in reference to the order issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I do not attack his honesty; I only attack his lack of judgment in the interest of the constituency I represent. But take some of the counties which come under the ban of that order itself and let us see what has been their progress.

Take Barber County. In 1880 it had a population of 2,661. In 1885 it had a population of 7,868.

Take Harper County, one in which a large number of entries have been suspended because claimed by the administration to be fraudulent under the influence of the General Land Office. Harper County in 1880 had a population of 4,133, and yet in 1885 it had 14,921, and to-day it has 19,000.

Take Kingman County. In 1880 it had a population of 3,713, and in 1885 it had a population of 9,933. Pratt County in 1880 had a population of 1,840, and in 1885 it had a population of 6,064. Then we come to Reno County. In 1880 it had a population of 12,824, and in 1885 it had a population of 20,294.

These, Mr. Chairman, are illustrations of the wonderful increase in population which has accrued to these counties which come under the ban of the order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Do you say there have been 90 per cent. of fraudulent entries in the settlement of the public lands? Let me show some figures from the Garden City land office. There are three land offices in that district, located at Garden City, Larned, and Wichita. I will refer to Garden City land office, being the one that has charge of the southwestern portion of this district. It has been known as a great cattle region. The buffalo and Texas cattle roamed over it almost intermingled some years ago.

I have some figures here in reference to entries of land in that district. I have only the figures from April 12, 1885, to April 12, 1886, one year. And the entries amounted to 20,754, with an aggregate number of acres of over 3,000,000. Those lands were taken under the homestead, pre-emption, and timber-culture laws. Taken under the pre-emption laws there were 1,074,840 acres. Under the homsteads laws—and mark it, there can not be fraud under the homestead laws, because the man who makes a homestead entry is required to live on them for five years and to cultivate them—under the homestead laws there were 1,265,940 acres.

You will see from this that the amount taken under the homestead predominates. Here is a grand total of 2,340,780 acres taken in one year in one land district under the homestead and pre-emption laws. This accounts in part for the wonderful growth of this Congressional district from 147,000 in 1880 to 315,000 in 1886. The new Kansan is there, at home on his farm in the very heart of what was a few years ago the great American Desert. The cattle and the buffalo have departed, and the wheat field, the corn field, the farmer's dwelling, humble though it may be, the typical Kansas school-house, and the prosperous town and city, evidence the new order of things; and above all, these evidences are permanent. The settler is there to stay. Unfortunately, as I think, orders from the Land Office, honestly issued I doubt not, can not drive him away; can not deprive him of his interest in his adopted State. You may cry fraud, you may punish or oppress him, but never again will he give way to the cattle syndicates. In time there will be "cattle upon a thousand hills," but the settler will own them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. PETERS. I do not think it is just to me to deduct from my time what was taken in the confusion.

The CHAIRMAN. Five minutes were allowed.

Mr. PETERS. I wish to inquire whether I do not have five minutes remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The two hours would have expired at five minutes before 3 o'clock. It was extended to twenty minutes in debate that would have reached to fifteen minutes after, but in order to cover the time which was taken up outside twenty minutes were added.

Mr. PERKINS. That charges him with all of the time lost.

Mr. PETERS. How much time did I occupy?

The CHAIRMAN. Between twelve and fifteen minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is understood here the amendment to the Chinese clause of the bill was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not so understand it.

Mr. HOLMAN. If so, there is evidently some misunderstanding about it.

Mr. RANDALL. It should not have been adopted or voted on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand there was objection taken to the adoption of that amendment before the debate proceeded on the land clause.

Under the arrangement that existed the gentleman from California was to be heard before we reached that point. At the close of his remarks the question was put upon the amendment and carried.

Mr. RANDALL. The understanding was that there was to be general debate upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. That was a separate general debate.

At the close of that general debate of forty minutes, which was extended to one hour by consent, a vote was to be taken.

Mr. RANDALL. That was not my understanding; I was not even present.

The CHAIRMAN. There were two periods for general debate, as the gentleman will remember.

Mr. RANDALL. Two subjects for general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. This clause had been passed over by unanimous consent until we reached the point where the general debate should close. That general debate was fixed at forty minutes and was subsequently extended to one hour. At the close of that time the general debate on that paragraph closed. The vote was then taken and the amendment adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I say that there was no understanding to have a vote taken upon the proposition until after the debate on the land clause had been exhausted. The understanding was clear that the general debate on both of these points should be had first.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the vote will be taken over again.

Mr. RANDALL. I was in the committee-room, and of course did not know what was going on here, supposing all the time that the order to which I refer would be carried out.

Mr. MORROW. The understanding was that the discussion was to be had, and I do not think there was any understanding as to what time a vote should be taken.

Mr. RANDALL. I shall ask the House to allow by unanimous consent the vote to be taken anew on that proposition. I refer to the proposition included in lines 807 to 813. I do this because, having charge of the bill, I had a right to go back and take it up at the time I selected for a vote upon it.

Mr. MORROW. I shall object unless I know some reason for it.

Mr. RANDALL. I think an objection would be very unreasonable in view of the time that was yielded to the gentleman.

Mr. MORROW. I do not propose to be unreasonable, because the gentleman has acted very fairly toward me; but I do not want to lose any rights which I may have in the matter.

Mr. RANDALL. I never dreamed that a vote was to be taken during the period fixed for general debate, and could not know, of course, that the committee had undertaken to vote upon it in opposition to what I believed to be an agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. MORROW. I am not disposed to take any advantage of the courtesy shown by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. I merely wish to inquire whether the gentleman interposes an objection?

Mr. MORROW. Is there objection to the amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. There is to the vote that has been taken upon it—only to the vote.

Mr. MORROW. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania insists that he did not understand that the vote was to be taken I shall be compelled, of course, to withdraw the objection.

Mr. RANDALL. Why, I meant to make the point of order upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the vote will be taken over again.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. Now I prefer to go back to that after we get through with the public land.

The CHAIRMAN. We are now through with the general debate upon this clause, and the Chair thinks the vote should be taken at once.

Mr. RANDALL. But there is an amendment pending to the last paragraph——

The CHAIRMAN. According to the agreement of the House this section was passed over until we reached the general debate upon the public lands. It seems now to the Chair, in view of that understanding and the agreement that another vote may be taken upon the amendment, that we should now conclude this section before going on to another part of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Very well.

The committee deemed that the amount specified was sufficient, $5,500. There was $3,470.50 paid to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for Chinese labor certificates last year, which were printed under the customs division of the Treasury Department. They had but $5,000 in 1885 and 1886. I hope the increase suggested will be voted down. I supposed at first that it was a pro forma amendment, to enable the gentleman from California to make his remarks.

Mr. MORROW. I desire to say but a word in reply. In the general discussion I showed that the amount named in the amendment was the amount estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury and is determined by the Department to be absolutely necessary. The law was not enforced last year, as it should have been, and I have called the attention of the House to the statement of Judge Hoffman, that no provision had been made to carry in effect at least one provision of the law.

Mr. RANDALL. There were $5,000 in 1885, and as I am informed that was not expended in that year, but a part of it in 1886. There is no appropriation for 1886. I know the estimate is for $10,000. But we made an examination, and believe that $5,500 is sufficient.

Mr. MORROW. Let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, with all fairness and with no desire to exaggerate or mislead the gentleman or the House, that the law has not been executed even with the appropriation of 1885.

Mr. RANDALL. There was none in 1886.

Mr. STORM. I wish to ask the Chair what became of the point of order which I made on the proviso contained in the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW]?

The CHAIRMAN. The debate has proceeded on the merits of the amendment. The point of order is now too late.

Mr. STORM. But the point of order was reserved before the debate commenced.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment was debated and voted on. Unanimous consent has been given that the vote be taken again, and since then the proposition has been again debated under the five-minute rule.

Mr. STORM. But the point of order was made at the beginning, and ought to have been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman should have called attention to it.

Mr. STORM. With my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], I did not think that under the arrangement for general debate the amendment was to come up to be voted on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds the point of order is made too late.

The question being again submitted on the amendment of Mr. MORROW, there were—ayes 56, nays 71.

Mr. MORROW. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW].

Mr. REED, of Maine. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will give us a yea-and-nay vote in the House on this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I will not.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 73, noes 90.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and Mr. BLOUNT took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

The bill (H. R. 5201) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

A bill (H. R. 2148) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a building for the United States circuit and district courts of the United States and post-office and other Government offices at Williamsport, Pa., and making additional appropriations therefor;" and

A bill (H. R. 5862) providing for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal at San Luis Obispo, Cal.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 3014) to provide for terms of court in Colorado.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2609) granting a pension to Emily J. Stannard;

A bill (S. 2721) to remove the political disabilities of John K. Mitchell; and

A bill (S. 2759) to remove the political disabilities of William H. F. Lee.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment sent up by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 952 and 953 strike out "$475,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$522,000;" so that it will read:

"Salaries and commissions of registers and receivers: For salaries and commissions of registers of land-offices and receivers of public moneys at district land offices, at not exceeding $3,000 each, $522,000."

Mr. BLANCHARD. I trust the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] representing the Appropriations Committee will not make any opposition to this amendment. In the Book of Estimates the amount recommended for salaries and commissions of receivers and registers is $522,000. In the last sundry civil bill the amount allowed was $525,000. In the bill now under consideration the amount fixed for that purpose is $475,000, being $47,000 less than the estimates and $50,000 less than what was appropriated for this purpose for the present fiscal year. I do not see why the Committee on Appropriations reduced the amount under that suggested in the Book of Estimates for the salaries and commissions of these officials.

This is a question, Mr. Chairman, in which many States of the Union are interested. There are throughout the United States one hundred and eight land offices, distributed as follows: Two in the State of Alabama, two in Arizona, four in Arkansas, ten in California, nine in Colorado, ten in Dakota, one in Florida, five in Idaho, one in Iowa, ten in Kansas, two in Louisiana, four in Michigan, nine in Minnesota, one in Mississippi, three in Missouri, three in Montana, nine in Nebraska, two in Nevada, two in New Mexico, five in Oregon, one in Utah, nine in Washington Territory, six in Wisconsin, and two in Wyoming.

In each of these land districts there is a register of the land office and a receiver of public moneys. So that there are in all two hundred and sixteen registers and receivers throughout the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, by law the salary of these registers and receivers is fixed at $500 each; but in addition to this salary of $500 they are allowed commissions. A provision of the law, which I have before me, stipulates, however, that none of these officers shall receive more than $3,000 a year, notwithstanding the fact that many of them may and do earn twice that much. A statement in the Book of Estimates, which I have here, shows that in the last fiscal year many of these receivers and registers earned far more than $3,000. Under the law they are required to pay into the Treasury every dollar that they earn in excess of the $3,000.

Mr. HEWITT was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. BLANCHARD.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Now, Mr. Chairman, what the Government is called upon to pay in the way of salaries and commissions to these registers and receivers is not a tax upon the country. The commissions that they earn over and above the $3,000, to which they are entitled, and which are required to be paid into the Treasury, amounts yearly to about $180,000. So that instead of these officials being a tax upon the Government their earnings afford a revenue to the Government of that amount. Here is a statement to that effect from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which I will read. On page 227 of the Book of Estimates, under the estimate of the Land Department for salaries, &c., of registers and receivers, I find the following:

The estimate submitted for compensation of registers and receivers is based upon the salaries earned and fees and commissions collected and covered into the Treasury by them during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, with the addition of the office to be opened at Cœur d'Alene, Idaho. For a number of years past it has been necessary to appropriate annually large amounts to cover deficiencies in this service. The amount estimated for herein is based upon the actual amounts paid to registers and receivers during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and therefore is not excessive. The compensation of registers and receivers is limited by law not to exceed $3,000 for any one officer, regardless of the amount in excess of that sum earned by them. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, the fees and commissions earned by registers and receivers amounted to $847,924, while the entire appropriation for their salaries and commissions was $525,000. Of this sum of $887,924 there was collected from the entrymen $705,187, which was turned into the Treasury, and if the entire appropriation of $525,000 is expended there remains as a net revenue to the Government the sum of $180,187.86.

This statement shows, then, that these officials are not a tax upon the Government. Therefore I ask, what is the reason that an amount adequate to meet their salaries and commissions as fixed by law is not provided in this bill?

Mr. HERMAN. Will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion in the line of his argument, which is that in the event of the Senate passing the bill repealing the pre-emption law fully one-half of the fees which these officers now receive will be cut off.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, it does not always do to depend upon the estimates of a Department. There are one hundred and eight receivers and one hundred and eight registers, making in all two hundred and sixteen of these officials to be provided for, but the President has power to consolidate offices if he sees fit.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Has he done so?

Mr. RANDALL. He has not, that I know of. The amount appropriated in 1885 was $500,000. There was $496,000 expended. The amount appropriated in 1886 was $525,000 on an estimate of $545,000, and for the first six months of the current year there was expended $244,000. This shows that with proper economy of expenditure $475,000 is sufficient; but I am willing to assent to an appropriation of $490,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Why not make it the amount that the Commissioner of the General Land Office asks?

Mr. RANDALL. Because that is in excess of the amounts both for 1885 and 1886; and when I concede $490,000, that is in excess of what will be expended this year. All these officials do not receive $3,000. If they did, this appropriation would have to be $650,000. Many of them do not receive any such sum; and a safe limit beyond all peradventure would be $490,000.

Mr. RYAN. I want to say to the gentleman that the appropriation for the current year was $525,000, $50,000 more than this bill carries.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; and the expenditure during the first six months for the current year was at the rate of only $488,000; so that if we now appropriate $490,000 it will be entirely adequate.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If each of these two hundred and sixteen officials should receive $3,000, which is the sum the law allows to each, provided he earns it, there would have to be appropriated for this purpose $648,000. Now, I find by examination that those receivers and registers who do not earn as much as $3,000 each number only thirty out of the two hundred and sixteen. If for these thirty we make the proper deduction from the $648,000 there would still be required $558,000 to meet these expenses. I have the figures before me.

Mr. RANDALL. The compensation allowed to these officials is $500 and 1 per cent. commission on the sales, provided the aggregate compensation shall not exceed $3,000. That law as to the manner and amount of compensation has not been changed; therefore we can safely take as a basis for the present appropriation the expenditures of 1885 and 1886. For this reason I have assented to the appropriation of $490,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move to further amend by striking out the last word. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that the Commissioner of the General Land Office in making this estimate states that Congress has been called upon for a number of years past to appropriate large amounts to cover deficiencies in this very service. If this be true—and it is the official record—I can see no sound reason why we should not appropriate at the outset a sufficient amount.

It is well known to my friend from Pennsylvania that the present Commissioner of the General Land Office, when he served, as he did for years, on this floor as a member, was second only to the gentleman from Indiana in the advocacy of economical expenditures by the Government. The gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Pennsylvania know this. Hence when this official comes before Congress, making the statement that he requires $522,000 for this purpose, why not appropriate it?

The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that it is within the discretion of the President to consolidate these land offices and reduce the number of these officers. But the President has not done so, and it is not likely that he will. I warn this House that if we appropriate any less than the sum named in my amendment we shall be called upon at a future session to supply the deficiency.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee in making this appropriation rely upon the expenditures of 1885 and 1886, not upon the estimates. This is a safe course to pursue. Besides, there has been legislation which will tend to reduce not increase these expenditures. I refer to the repeal of the timber-culture law, the desert-land law, and especially the pre-emption law. Four hundred and ninety thousand dollars is clearly a safe amount to appropriate. I am quite willing, as a member of the committee, to accept that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Louisiana withdraw his pro forma amendment to strike out the last word?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I move to amend the amendment so as to make the appropriation $490,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to repeat, that according to the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office the department has been obliged year after year to call for a deficiency appropriation for this service.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] to the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio will be read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out "$522,000" and inserting "490,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question being taken on the amendment as amended, it was adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to amend by inserting at the end of the pending paragraph the following:

All fees collected by receivers or registers from any source whatever which would increase their salaries beyond $3,000 each a year shall be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. RYAN. I raise a point of order on that amendment. It is a change of existing law.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask that the amendment be read again.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I make the point of order that this matter is already fixed by the existing law, a copy of which I hold in my hand.

Mr. RYAN. If this provision were incorporated in the bill and should become law it would allow every one of these officials a salary of $3,000.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, no.

Mr. RYAN. By implication they will be entitled to that amount.

Mr. SPRINGER. No; they will get nothing over $500 except their fees.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask the attention of the committee to section 2240 of the Revised Statutes, which reads as follows:

SEC. 2240. The compensation of registers and receivers, including salary, fees, and commissions, shall in no case exceed in the aggregate $3,000 a year each; and no register or receiver shall receive for any one quarter or fractional quarter more than a pro rata allowance of such maximum.

Section 2241 of the Revised Statutes reads as follows:

SEC. 2241. Whenever the amount of compensation received at any land office exceeds the maximum allowed by law to any register or receiver the excess shall be paid into the Treasury, as other public moneys.

Mr. SPRINGER. These sections of the Revised Statutes show what the law is, but they do not show what the construction of the law is.

Mr. BLANCHARD. My point of order is if this is a repetition of the law then it is unnecessary.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman admits it does not change existing law, but there has been a construction which has grown up in nearly all these offices of the officers retaining the fees, which makes the salaries of the officers amount to about $6,000 a year. I get this information from the Land Office. My object is to put a construction upon the Revised Statutes so that the law shall be just what the gentleman has read it. It is for the purpose of informing all those officers that is the law and that it ought to be filled. I hope my amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Does not my friend suppose if this administration will violate that they will violate this?

Mr. SPRINGER. In my opinion this will be the last legislative construction, and I hope my colleague will not object to its going on this bill, especially as we are told by the other side of the House these are our officers.

The CHAIRMAN. As the amendment reads it is clear the registers and receivers of the land office are to return whatever fees are received beyond $3,000. The excess is to be covered into the Treasury. It is difficult to understand whether this would require uniform increase as to the registers and receivers.

Mr. SPRINGER. Increase in salary?

The CHAIRMAN. If the object is to make the amount $3,000——

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, no; but to limit it to that as it is limited by the statute. This will be a legislative construction of what was intended by the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question whether this is the same as the law heretofore is a matter for the committee and not for the Chair. The point of order is overruled

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses of land offices: For clerk-hire, rent, and other incidental expenses of the several land offices, $120,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move in line 956 to strike out "20" and insert "55;" so it will read "$155,000" instead of "$120,000."

And I would like to have from the chairman of the committee some explanation why this amount is fixed in the bill $35,000 less than the estimate and $40,000 less than the last sundry civil bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I will answer promptly. We have all been commending the Commissioner of the General Land Office for his high character and habits of economy, and the truth of the encomium is nowhere more exemplified than in this paragraph. The appropriation for 1885 was $140,000; in 1886, $165,000, and his estimates for 1887 were $155,000. But when we come to look at the expenditures they are $170,000 against $140,000. In 1886, the current year, under General Sparks's direction, the first six months show an expenditure of only $54,000.

Mr. RYAN. Then why does he ask for $155,000?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know. He reduced the estimate, however, from $165,000 to $155,000. But the expenditure during the first six months of this year was only $54,000, and according to that there would be necessary only for this paragraph $108,000, but we have given $120,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. We will try to worry through with that amount.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BLANCHARD, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Depredations on public timber: To meet the expenses of protecting timber on the public lands, $75,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$90,000."

That is the amount claimed in the estimates as being the full amount required, and while I do not as a general thing favor the increase of any item of appropriation beyond that fixed by the committee, there has been so much shown as to the importance of preserving our forests from destruction of late years, that it seems to me we can afford on a subject like this to vary a little from what is a good rule under ordinary circumstances and give the whole amount of the estimate which is to be applied to so laudable an object. There is certainly no one subject of public interest, except the public-land system of the country, which is of more importance than the preserving of the forests for many reasons; and it seemed to me that if the Commissioner of the Public Lands believed that $90,000 would be required for this purpose, which I think is not unlikely, as it is probably not more than he actually requires, it ought to be given.

My own observations during the summer of last year in this portion of the country where our forests are mainly found indicated the fact that extraordinary vigilance would be required in the future to prevent these timber depredations or else there would be an entire destruction of our great forests within a very few years.

Mr. RANDALL. In 1885 $75,000 was given and $75,000 was expended. Since Mr. Sparks has been at the head of the Land Office, which I believe is just about one year, the expenditure up to this time has only reached $22,000.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It takes some time to get hold of all the rascality.

Mr. RANDALL. That is very true; but these appropriations are based upon the expenditures, and they show that only $22,611.27 has been spent up to this time; and we believe that in this year the amount which will be required for this service will not exceed the amount appropriated in the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not wish to press this if the gentleman thinks the amount is sufficient.

Mr. RANDALL. There has been no purpose on the part of the committee to cut this matter down, believing that the importance of the subject would justify a very ample appropriation, but at the rate of expenditure up to this time would not much exceed $50,000. The committee thought $75,000 for next year would be enough.

Mr. HOLMAN. I had occasion some time ago to call the attention of the Secretary of the Interior to the fact that our forests were being destroyed for the sake of the timber.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the gentleman had better reserve his amendment until we reach another section.

Mr. HOLMAN. In view of the statement ef the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if he thinks enough is given for this purpose I will withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Protecting public lands: For the protection of public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, $90,000.

Mr. LAIRD. I move to strike out the paragraph, lines 963 to 965 inclusive, and yield my time to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, in the debate that has taken place here in connection with these several propositions, I think there has been no disposition to defend any man who is making a fraudulent entry on any part of the public domain. That is not the feeling of gentlemen here representing Western constituents. We desire that that domain shall be preserved and protected for the honest settlers. But while it is protected for them, we desire that the rights of the settlers shall be respected by the Executive Departments of the Government.

And I desire briefly to call the attention of the House to the workings of one branch of the executive department of the Government under existing law; and if I can convict the Commissioner of the General Land Office of slander and of misrepresentation by his own official utterances and publications, I think gentlemen will agree with me that I have a right to do so. He charges in his annual report that 90 per cent. of the public land entries in my State are fraudulent, and in one paragraph he goes to the extreme of saying that 100 per cent. of the pre-emption filings are fraudulent.

In another he says that 100 per cent. of the entries under the commuted homestead law are fraudulent, and I desire to call in this connection the attention of the House to the fact that quite recently this Commissioner made an official report to the Senate of the United States, in answer to a resolution of that body, in which he admits that he has only found it necessary to send special agents to investigate eighteen thousand entries suspended by him.

According to his annual report there were 104,431 entries made under existing law during the last fiscal year besides the miscellaneous ones, and with these and all the accumulated business he admits in his recent report to the Senate that he only finds it necessary to put eighteen thousand cases into the hands of his special agents to be investigated, confessing by his conduct he defamed the settlers upon our public domain when he charged that 90 per cent. of their settlements were fraudulent and corrupt.

To investigate these eighteen thousand entries he says in his recent report that he has thirty-four special agents, and he says they are able to make nine investigations per month each, and he says that at this rate these thirty-four special agents will in five years be able to investigate the eighteen thousand entries that have been referred to them.

During that time, Mr. Chairman, what is to be the condition of these settlers? Their entries are suspended, their credit is destroyed, their homes are to a certain extent impaired, and their right to enjoy and possess them is very greatly paralyzed, and uncertainty and doubt are created by the action of this executive officer. These eighteen thousand entries that have been sent to the special agents to be investigated are to consume five years, says this officer, and the gentleman from Illinois confesses on this floor he is glad of the fact that he with others prevailed upon that Commissioner within eight days after he was inducted into office to suspend one hundred and twenty-six thousand entries upon the public domain; and he says he only regretted that the Secretary of the Interior suspended that order. If the gentleman from Illinois can take pleasure in the fact that he was instrumental in tying up one hundred and twenty-six thousand entries on the public domain in this country I do not envy him the distinction or the pleasure. At the rate of investigation that the Commissioner is now prosecuting and conducting, how long would it have required to have investigated these one hundred and twenty-six thousand entries?

If eighteen thousand can be investigated in five years, one hundred and twenty-six thousand would have required thirty-five years. And yet the gentleman from Illinois says he is glad that he with others prevailed on this executive officer to suspend one hundred and twenty-six thousand entries upon the public domain, and to do what he could to render uncertain and insecure for thirty-five years the entries, the homes, the earnings, the enterprises of our pioneer settlers, who are struggling against adverse circumstances to secure habitations upon the public domain.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, precedent has been sought for this, and this officer quite recently, in vindication of his own conduct and in support of his own order, issued a document which is printed as Senate Executive Document 170, from which extracts have been read to-day, and I desire to state to this House that I find he quotes one hundred and twelve precedents for this action of his. And yet when you read them and examine them you find that not a single precedent that he quotes bears him out or sustains him in his unauthorized and arbitrary order.

Every one of these precedents was the withdrawal of some portion of the public domain from settlement and from entry. But is not the order made by this executive officer of which we complain? We do not complain because he withdrew some public lands from settlement, but we do complain that after men, under existing law, had gone on the public domain, had made settlements and homes, were cultivating their lands, and doing that which entitled them under the law to a title and to occupy and possess them, found themselves and all their proceedings suspended by the arbitrary action of the Commissioner. Of these one hundred and twelve precedents which he cites not one sustains him. No man who ever occupied that office or any other executive office of the Government heretofore arrogated to himself the right to suspend and strike down the statutes of this nation. Yet this man, supposing himself supreme, not content with the ruin, with the wrong and injury he has worked to these men, has even arrogated to himself the right to say to Congress and to the country, "The laws of the United States shall be suspended till it is my pleasure to put them again in execution;" and at the same time he directs the officers of the local land offices to violate their oaths and to deny to settlers the right to make entries and to secure homes on the public lands.

Of these one hundred and twelve orders I find fifty-six were made by the late Democratic Vice-President, Thomas A. Hendricks, when he was Commissioner of the General Land Office; and I find that the fifty-six he made were all in the interest of land-grant railroads, withdrawing some portions of the public domain in their interest and for their benefit. But there is not an order cited that suspends an entry. There is not an order that suspends a statute. There is not an order that says to the local land officers, "You shall violate your oaths and not permit an honest settler on the public domain to file his declaration and take the initiatory steps to secure a home." And yet this officer is so obtuse or so willful that he can not observe the distinction between these orders and his own, and cites them as authority for suspending the statutes of the United States, violating his oath of office, and wrecking and ruining hundreds and thousands of homes occupied by men as honest as can be found in any State or any country.

I do not deny, Mr. Chairman, the right of an executive officer to withdraw temporarily certain portions of the public domain from occupation or settlement. But because this is true does it necessarily follow that when public land has been settled upon under existing law and homes made that those settlements can be destroyed, those homes removed, and all driven to litigation, chaos, and confusion, and the law suspended and statutes stricken down by the arbitrary, willful, and slanderous order of a subordinate officer clothed with some brief authority?

When we contemplate the wrong this man has worked, the injury he is now doing to the settlers of the West, it is a remarkable circumstance to me that any man should stand here and say he derived pleasure from the injury and wrong. Great communities have been well-nigh prostrated by it and hundreds of honest settlers absolutely ruined. As was said by my colleague, no State ever developed so rapidly as the State I have the honor in part to represent; and it has not been under fraudulent entries or by willful evasions of public statutes. But it has been the result of honest bona fide settlement upon the public lands; and yet these men now find their interests suspended. They find, as I have suggested, that they are unable to obtain credit, that they are unable to tax their lands, unable to build school-houses, unable to build bridges, unable to secure railroad advantages or the conveniences that are needed by pioneers upon the frontier, because they can not get any title to their homes. These, in part, are the injuries that are worked by this officer.

Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that I have not the time to proceed further in the discussion of this subject. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] speaks of the enthusiasm of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the poor settler. Ah, sir, if he had any enthusiasm or any sympathy for the honest settler upon the public domain he would never have made such an order as that which was promulgated by him. That order was made in the interest of the land-grant railroad companies and the cattle companies, or such is its effect.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it is a strange position that is occupied by those who are assailing the Commissioner of the General Land Office. It must be remembered that the testimony upon which that officer has proceeded is all drawn from Republican sources. His action is based upon the investigations and the testimony of Republican officials who had been for years in the public service and were perfectly familiar with the dishonest raids that were being made upon every part of the public domain. The reports of those officials are on file.

Take, for example, the report of Mr. A. R. Green, late a Republican State senator in Kansas, and at this very time, I believe, a Republican editor, and a man in good standing in his party in the district of the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. PERKINS]. Let me read some things that Mr. Green says about these frauds:

> The hopelessness of the attempt was apparent to every one who was familiar with the soil and climate of the region proposed to be reclaimed at the outset, but the opportunity for getting a quarter-section of land for a trifle induces men to go through the merest form of compliance with the law and make up the rest by perjury. I hesitate to make the statement that in a large proportion of cases no pretense of complying with the law has been made, but I believe such to be the case. I have traveled over hundreds of miles of land in Western Kansas, Nebraska, and Central Dakota, nearly one-fourth of which had been taken under the "timber-culture act," without seeing an artificial grove even in incipiency, and can scarcely recall an instance in any one day's travel where the ground had been more than scratched with the plow for the purpose of planting trees.
> I have seen small patches of land (possibly 5 acres) were the prairie sod had been "listed" in furrows 6 or 8 feet apart each way, and occasionally a sickly cottonwood-sprout, 2 or 3 feet in height, of the thickness of a man's thumb, standing thereon. In other cases the land had evidently been honestly plowed at some time, but through neglect had grown up again to grass, and the trees (?) were holding up their tiny cattle-browsed, fire-burnt branches in mute protest against the farcical absurdity of the "timber-culture act."
> As to the proportion of land entered under the timber-culture act that is not improved as required by that act, I give it as my opinion that in Kansas, Nebraska, and Dakota the proportion is 90 per cent. to 10 per cent. of bona fide and possibly sucessful cultivation.
> A more vicious system of fraudulent entries has been successfully practiced by and in the interest of cattle-men and stock corporations. If the law had been enacted solely for their benefit it could scarcely have been more successful.
> I have been told that entrymen engaged in this character of frauds seldom make a pretense of plowing or planting trees or complying in any particular with the law. My own observation confirms this statement, and I believe it to be true. This is largely the case in Colorado, Dakota, Montana, Nebraska, and New Mexico, where immense stock ranches have been established and all the valuable grass land and water have been secured. This system also obtains to no inconsiderable extent in Kansas, I believe.
> The method is simple, effective, and infamous.

Thus I might go on for a score of pages in this report, but I will not further trespass upon the time of the House by reading.

Whence does the opposition to the policy of the Land Office emanate?

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. No, sir, I can not; I have only five minutes. It emanates chiefly from the cattle syndicates, the land speculators, and the loan agents. I now send to the Clerk's desk an item which I cut from one of the city papers and which I will ask the Clerk to read, leaving the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] to make an explanation of it if he desires.

The Clerk read as follows:

> SIX AND EIGHT PER CENT. INVESTMENTS—PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST GUARANTEED—ABSOLUTE CERTAINTY AND SECURITY.
> The Equitable Trust and Investment Company, Wichita, Kans. Capital, $200,000. Hon. B. W. Perkins, M. C., president. Loans from $500 to $5,000, running from three to seven years, secured by mortgage upon some of the best lands in Kansas, at one-third their value at forced sale. Also 8 per cent. bankable commercial paper, running from ninety days to six months. Interest collected without any charge, payable at any bank the investor may direct. No expenses whatever to the investor. Recommended by Hon. JOHN J. INGALLS, Hon. PRESTON B. PLUMB, United States Senators; Hon. John A. Martin, governor of Kansas; Hon. George W. McCrary, ex-Secretary of War; leading bankers and others, whose recommendations are in our office.
> STONE & LITTLEFIELD,
> Washington Agents, 1226 F Street Northwest.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DOCKERY was recognized, and yielded to Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa.

Mr. PERKINS. If the gentleman is going to charge me anything for this advertisement I do not want to pay it. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I charge you nothing, sir. This loan office of which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] is president (as he has a perfect right to be) is situated in the Wichita land district. Within this district during the past few years, as the gentleman knows or ought to know, fraudulent entries were made of some of the very best lands in Kansas, out of which entries prosecutions arose which resulted in sending some men to the penitentiary.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] is not ignorant of the fact and ought not to be unmindful of the fact that large numbers of fraudulent entries have taken place within his own district, and that those transactions are notorious throughout the entire State of Kansas. Now, I have said, and I believe it to be true, that the objections to the policy of the Land Office come, as a rule, from the cattle syndicates, the loan agents, and the land speculators. I protest against a land policy which enables the speculators to get hold of the virgin lands of the West to the exclusion of the poor settler who seeks to secure a home.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let me ask the gentleman if there is anything in the order of the Commissioner that necessarily throws any cloud or doubt upon the right or title to a patent?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. There is not. It only suspends the granting of a patent until the question can be investigated. The opposite policy is to grant the patent without an investigation, and now it is proposed here to strike out this entire appropriation, which is designed to enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to continue his investigations for the protection of the public domain—it is proposed to strike out that appropriation and turn over the remaining public lands to the speculators and the land-grabbers.

Mr. PETERS. As the gentleman has spoken of Wichita and of Sedgwick Counties and of fraudulent entries there, I wish to ask him a question. If there is such a large proportion of fraudulent entries as the gentleman states and as the Land Office claims, how does it happen that the population of that country increased from 18,753 in 1880 to 36,022 in 1885? And then I want to ask him this further question: How is it that Sumner County, just below Sedgwick, on the Territory line, where thousands of these "Oklahoma boomers" are waiting to go into the Indian Territory to take up land—how does it happen that the population of that county increased from 8,812 in 1880 to 32,889 in 1885? I say that these figures, upon their face, show that no such wholesale frauds on the public domain as are alleged can possibly have been committed.

Mr. PERKINS. And I ask him further whether he does not know that every quarter-section of land in those counties has an occupant.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Oh, I will answer the gentleman. I am posted about Wichita.

Mr. PETERS. I want to say that the gentleman knows nothing about Sedgwick County or Sumner County, while I have been over every foot of both, and I know that every quarter-section that is available for farming has a farm upon it and a farm-house.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Yes, but those lands are not held by the entrymen.

Mr. PETERS. They are held by men who have gone upon them to make homes.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Does the gentleman deny that men were arrested there for making fraudulent entries and sent to the penitentiary?

Mr. PETERS. No, sir; I do not claim that there were no frauds committed.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Ah! Then it is a question of how many.

Mr. RYAN. Is that evidence of wholesale frauds?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It is a question of how many such frauds were committed.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I insist that I shall not be deprived of my time. I do not deny that there have been frauds committed under the pre-emption act, the homestead act, and the timber-culture act, but I do say that any person who makes the assertion that 90 per cent. or 60 per cent. or 50 per cent. or 25 per cent. of the entries in those counties in Kansas have been fraudulent makes the statement either ignorantly or maliciously. It is perfectly evident that the increase in the population of those counties that has taken place could not have taken place if there had been any such wholesale frauds committed on the public domain as have been charged here.

I want to answer another suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] who paraded before this House advertisements of sales of relinquishments. Is there anything strange or suspicious about that? A man goes out there and takes up a claim. He finds that his health fails. He goes to a claim agent and says, "I have put improvements to such an amount on my land; I am not able to stay and comply with the law; I do not want to lose all the work I have put on the place; therefore I wish to sell to some man the improvements I have put upon it, and let him go on and complete the entry." That is all there is of it.

Mr. PERKINS. And such a man is branded by the Commissioner as guilty of fraud.

Mr. PETERS. Yes; that honest homesteader, that honest mechanic, it may be, who has gone out there for the purpose of establishing a home, and has found himself unable to stay there and comply with the provisions of the law, when he wants to obtain a little money for the improvements he has placed upon the land is branded as a fraud and a rogue.

Mr. HOLMAN addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. PAYSON. I yield my time to my colleague [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. Chairman, the provision of this bill which appropriates $90,000 for protecting public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry is a necessary one and ought not to be stricken out.

That frauds have been committed against the Government under existing laws providing for entries on the public lands has become so notorious as to demand serious attention. It would seem, Mr. Chairman, that for some reason the public lands have come to be regarded as legitimate public plunder. The idea prevails that because the Government has, with great generosity, provided easy conditions upon which the homeless and landless can secure for themselves sufficient land for their actual needs, therefore a strict conformity to the letter and spirit of the laws governing entries of public lands is not required by any code of morals now extant.

Men who would scorn to commit a dishonest act toward an individual have come to listen with eagerness to all kinds of schemes for evading both the letter and spirit of our public-land laws. I do not say, Mr. Chairman, that no pretense has been made by those individuals, syndicates, and companies which have engaged in this nefarious business to observe the requirements of the United States statutes; but, sir, I do maintain that whatever is done in that direction is done with the intent and purpose of getting possession of lands in a manner not intended by the Government, and in fraud of the rights of the landless and homeless with which the country is filled.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to describe some of the methods by which these land-robbers get possession of the public domain. The first thing done is to seek out some fertile spot where there is a large body of land subject to entry. This prospecting is done by some speculator, or a syndicate of speculators who have homes of comfort and an abundance of this world's goods. They know, or ought to know, that these lands are designed for the actual settler, but they are rich lands, and, although now remote from settlements and from railway communication, yet the speculator sees that in a few years these lands will be reached by settlements and railways, and will be increased in value; and he determines to get possession of them, law or no law; and, sir, the process is to hire men to go to these lands under a false pretense that they are actual settlers, either as homesteaders, pre-emptors, or on soldiers' claims. These hirelings are employed in a pretended compliance with the law which provides for actual improvements.

In some cases a small house is built and placed on wheels, so that when it has stood on one of these fraudulent claims long enough for the pretended actual settler to make the oath required by law, it is forthwith removed to another pretended claim, and is thus made to repeat its fraudulent purpose over and over again. Even soldiers, who by law are entitled to homesteads, are in some cases induced to "sell their birthright" for a few dollars, and their declaratory statements suffice to "hold down" the entry made under them until by other means these claims may be secured by the land-grabbers. Then comes the "timber-culture" scheme, under which section after section of these lands pass into the speculators' hands.

Mr. Chairman, the methods I have briefly described have been in use for years, and for years the United States Land Commissioner has called attention to the violations of the law.

The present Commissioner, General Sparks, says:

> At the outset of my administration I was confronted with overwhelming evidence that the public domain was being made the prey of unscrupulous speculation and the worst forms of land monopoly, through systematic frauds carried on and consummated under the public-land laws.

Does any one pretend to doubt the correctness of the statements of the Commissioner?

In view of these disgraceful facts, is it surprising that Commissioner Sparks should say:

> The question of my own duty as the administrative officer immediately charged under the law with seeing that the public lands were disposed of only according to law was at once forced upon me. Should I continue to certify and request the issue of patents by the President indiscriminately upon entries which there was every reasonable ground to believe were fraudulent in the greater part, or should I withhold such final action until examination could be made and the false claims separated from those that are valid? Should I disregard cumulative evidence of the universality of fraudulent appropriation of public lands and become an official instrumentality of their consummation, or should I say, "I mean to know what I am doing before I ask the President of the United States to sign any more land patents?"

Now, Mr. Chairman, I maintain that the Land Commissioner has done right, and, sir, it is to me strange that any one should think otherwise. It has been common for members on this floor to sharply criticise the action of Commissioner Sparks, and it has been here stoutly maintained that his action has been adverse to the interest of the settler and opposed to justice. Sir, I can well understand that in cases where the entries of land have been honestly made either for a homestead or by pre-emption, delay in securing title may work a temporary inconvenience. I can also see that it might interfere with the purpose, common among actual settlers, to take up larger quantities of land than a single quarter-section, such as adding to a homestead a pre-emption and then a timber-culture entry—a practice of doubtful profit to the settler; and that cases of real hardship like those described by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] exist there can be no doubt; but, sir, I fail to see that such inconvenience or even loss to one actual settler can properly be urged as a justification for such remissness of the Land Commissioner as must result in defrauding other homeless citizens out of their portion of the public domain—an injustice, in fact, to millions of the landless which this country is certain to produce.

It should be remembered that there has grown up in our system of disposing of the public lands an enormous and deep-seated wrong—a system so thoroughly tinctured with fraud as to almost defy correction. Overwhelming evidence of the existence of wide-spread frauds has been furnished by my colleague, Mr. PAYSON, in this debate, and it is unnecessary to repeat them here.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is in vain to expect that such a condition of things can be changed without the most radical measures. The Commissioner of the General Land Office is confined to the means placed at his command by law. He has no power to go beyond the appropriations made in putting agents into the field to ferret out these frauds. If it were not so, then it would be just to hold him accountable for hardships endured by the honest settler in consequence of any delays in coming at the real facts of each particular case.

The mistake has been made of making the appropriations for this purpose too small, and now, Mr. Chairman, gentlemen on this floor seem anxious to dismiss every one of these agents by striking out of this bill the entire sum appropriated. If the sum named in this bill is to be changed at all, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] should be adopted; then, Mr. Chairman, the Commissioner could expedite the necessary examinations and more speedily remove every cause of complaint.

Mr. Chairman, it is doubtful whether among the various economic questions with which our Government has to deal there is one of more importance or further reaching in its effect upon the prosperity and happiness of the people than that of land ownership and land occupancy.

It is not surprising that in the infancy of the Republic, when population was sparse, numbering less than some of our States now contain, and the public domain seemed limitless in extent, there should have been no proper comprehension of the importance of this question or of its bearing upon the permanence of our institutions. A century, however, has radically changed the relation between the existing population and the remaining quantity of lands available for homes. With great prodigality and in a variety of ways the public domain has been disposed of until we find ourselves face to face with the fact that but comparatively little land remains Government property that is available for the actual settler, and with the reasonable probability that by the middle of the next century there will be in the United States over two hundred millions of people. We are, moreover, compelled to contemplate these conditions in full view of what is now transpiring in other and older countries in which the soil has been monopolized by the few, and as a consequence of the great wrong thus perpetrated on the people the governments in those countries are this day menaced with internal dissensions bordering on revolution itself.

Mr. Chairman, it is not too much to say that if the people of Ireland had such a tenure to the soil as would secure it to them for tillage, either by small holdings of their own, or by government ownership, there would not be heard a note of discontent anywhere in the Emerald Isle. And, sir, what troubles Ireland is also deeply felt in England, and in my opinion nothing short of a radical change in the land tenure of that country will prevent such a revolution there as will right the terrible wrong. With this condition of things existing on the other side of the Atlantic, under our gaze, should we not avoid the fearful danger which has already arisen in these older countries, and from which we may not escape?

How can this important work be better begun than to earnestly second the work which Commissioner Sparks has inaugurated? The object should be to preserve with care every acre of the public lands for the actual settler. The holding of large areas of the public domain by the supeculator, whether individuals, a syndicate, or corporation, benefits no one but the speculator. The public is in every case directly and seriously damaged. In all instances where the actual settler with limited means is obliged to go further or accept of less valuable lands, not only is the settler a loser but there is left behind the curse of unoccupied territory. The benefits and pleasures of good neighborhoods, social intercourse, schools, and churches are made difficult to secure, and financial burdens are greatly increased.

Mr. Chairman, if there be one injury greater than another that can be inflicted on a new country it is the existence therein of a waste of speculators' land, waiting for a large increase in value which the hard-earned improvements of the settler on his homestead is sure to bring.

The people of this country are giving earnest thought to this land question, and, sir, as it has been in the past so it will be in the future, whenever the masses of our citizens at their places of business, in their workshops, and on their farms discuss public questions for themselves and come to a conclusion as to what ought to be done, their conclusions are correct and may be safely followed.

At the recent session of the National Assembly of the Knights of Labor at Cleveland the land reform that was unanimously demanded was as follows:

1. We demand the creation of a system that shall make future generations more than mere tenants at will so long as there is land idle that is needed by American citizens to live and work upon.
2. We demand the reservation of the public lands for actual settlers only, and that all lands owned by individuals and corporations in excess of 160 acres, not under cultivation, shall be taxed to the full value of cultivated lands of like character.
3. We demand the immediate forfeiture of all lands now under grant to corporations or individuals, the conditions of which have not been complied with.
4. We demand that all lands now held by individuals or corporations upon which patents have not issued, and which are not forfeitable, shall be patented without delay and taxed to the full value of lands of like character under cultivation.
5. We demand the immediate removal of all fences upon the public domain without authority of law, and that equal protection be secured to all citizens of the United States, in the use of public lands for free commonage.
6. We demand that on and after A. D. 1890 the Government shall obtain possession by purchase at an appraised valuation of all lands legally held by non-resident aliens, and from and after A. D. 1886 aliens shall be prohibited from acquiring title to or owning lands within the United States of American, and that all deeds by citizens of the United States to aliens after said last-mentioned date shall be null and void, and land so deeded shall revert to the Government.

These, Mr. Chairman, are the demands not of a political party, but of a large body of earnest, intelligent men whose purpose is to so act upon the National Legislature as to secure this and kindred reforms, and they will be heard; their demands are in the interest of justice and must be met.

It may well be doubted whether among all the economic questions which are demanding discussion and settlement by the people of this country there be any farther reaching or more important than that of man's right to land. With us it has long been settled that all men have "an inalienable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," and it must follow that whatever is indispensable to the enjoyment of these rights should be kept sacred for the use of the citizen. It also follows that any law or custom through which a portion of the people get absolute control of land to an extent beyond what is needed for their own use, by which others are deprived of it, is a direct infringement of natural right. All acknowledge that man has a right to the air to breathe, and to deprive him of it is as direct a denial of his natural right as to deprive him of life. If, then, man has a natural right to the free air because it is necessary to life, has he not an equal right to land for the reason that it is indispensable not only to his life but to his liberty and happiness?

But, it will be said, a man can live and enjoy liberty and happiness without land. Is that a fact? Grant that a man does not need to own a farm in order to live, that a house in which to live is all that very many require, does he not still need a spot on earth on which to erect his house? Can he get on without land?

It must be conceded that land is indispensable to man. Now, suppose three human beings inhabit a fertile island, and two of them assume to own every inch of the soil on that island, how can the third man live there except by the sufferance of the other two? What has become of his liberty, and if he love liberty where is his happiness? Is he not almost as subject to his stronger companions as though he were their slave? What essential difference is there between the unfortunate man on the island and thousands in countries claiming a high civilization and boasting of equal rights for all—every country, in fact, where by law those who possess capital are allowed to become owners of more land than they can use?

Mr. Chairman, every man who stands on his own feet, having a head that can think, limbs to clothe, and a stomach to feed, has a natural right to so much land as he can cultivate in order to supply his wants, and whenever the enjoyment of this right is denied him he has just occasion for complaint; and, sir, the homestead laws on our statute-books show that one government at least has made some progress toward recognizing this right.

Mr. Chairman, I do not propose or desire to ruthlessly attack land tenures or to change existing order, but, sir, may we not with propriety from this time endeavor to check the manifest evil of permitting the few to monopolize the soil in this country, and henceforth, as far as government can do, to preserve the public domain in small quantities for the ownership of those and those only who will use it?

Mr. Chairman, we may well congratulate ourselves that public thought is in the direction of radical land reform. The people everywhere demand that railway land grants shall be settled equitably and the land subsidy business closed forever. They demand that foreign ownership of American soil shall cease and be determined, and that every attempted wrongful seizure of the public domain shall be thwarted; and for these ends they will stand by an honest administration of the General Land Office, such as I for one believe that of General Sparks to be.

Mr. Chairman, it has given me unalloyed pleasure to thus bear testimony to the faithful manner in which one Democratic official has discharged his duty, and were it not that some who may have followed my remarks thus far might conclude that I have become a convert to Democracy as illustrated by the administration of President Cleveland, I would not further occupy the time. But, sir, such is not the case. It would indeed be strange, and very disheartening, if a search through the Departments of the Government under this administration, from President Cleveland down to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, there could not be found one spark to commend.

The Democratic party came into power on promises of reform written in its platform and proclaimed everywhere on the stump by the advocates of a change in the administration of the Government. It pledged itself in the Chicago platform "to reduce taxation;" but instead of doing so a Democratic Congress proposes an increase by the levy of an income tax. The same convention solemnly declared that "sufficient revenue to pay all the expenses of the Federal Government economically administered, including pensions, interest, and the principal of the public debt, could be got from our present system of taxes;" and yet before the administration is two years old its leaders on this floor declare that it can not be done without a resort to an entirely different system of taxation.

The same document denominates the internal-revenue tax, which amounts to $112,000,000 for the last fiscal year, "a war tax," and solemnly pledges that amount "to defray the expense of the care and comfort of worthy soldiers disabled in the wars of the Republic, as well as for the payment of such pensions as Congress may from time to time grant to such soldiers;" and notwithstanding the fact that the entire sum required to meet pensions already granted is only about $80,000,000—leaving a balance of over thirty millions of this war fund for pensions—the party in power, in utter disregard of its promises to the soldier, refuses to use this balance for further pensions.

After asserting "the equality of all men before the law, and promising to mete out equal and exact justice to all citizens of whatever nationality, race, or color," this same party fails to even investigate instances of outrage on colored citizens where more than a score of them have been massacred on one well-known occasion—in a manner cold-blooded and cowardly enough to crimson with shame the cheek of every American citizen.

This same party claims to believe in "a free ballot and a fair count," and yet it is believed that not less than thirty of its members on this floor come from Congressional districts where a free ballot and a fair count has not been known for years.

The Democratic platform declares "in favor of an honest civil-service reform," and in his letter of acceptance President Cleveland said "the selection and retention of subordinates in Government employ should depend upon their ascertained fitness and the value of their work." And again in his inaugural address, and in his first message to Congress, these avowals of devotion to the platform of his party were repeated with renewed emphasis; and for all this, the leaders of that same party declare it to be their purpose and wish to withhold the means of continuing this great reform, until the President and the Civil Service Commission will consent to abdicate their legal power and honest purpose to administer the law in an unpartisan manner; and what is more reprehensible still is the fact that the most flagrant and notorious violations of the law are practiced in some of the Departments of the Government which are not only not rebuked by the President, but are boldly defended and justified on this floor.

On the subject of extending our commerce, the Democratic party avow themselves "in favor of more intimate commercial and political relations with the fifteen sister republics of Central and South America," and yet they steadfastly refuse to pay such a price for carrying the ocean mails to these countries as would initiate trade between our manufacturers and merchants and those countries, and thus secure to our artisans profitable employment.

In place of the true American policy of fostering our own ship-yards, both of the Government and of the citizen, so that we may replace our navy and our merchant marine with ships of our own building, from materials of our own production, and by the employment of our own laborers, we are urged to purchase these ships abroad, as if it could possibly be wise for a great nation to allow ship-building to become to it a lost art.

The party represented by a majority on this floor pretend to be the friend of the laboring man, and yet, but for a defection in its own ranks, would so legislate as to reduce the price of labor to a level with European wages, and, what is more, would insure a collapse of all financial, commercial, and agricultural interests by destructive inroads on established protection.

This same Democratic platform declares "in favor of gold and silver coinage," and yet a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury vies with the President in persistent and repeated demands on Congress to cease the coinage of "silver, the money of the Constitution."

Mr. Chairman, I might well pass from this exhibit of the failure of the dominant party here to perform its solemn pledges and turn to its significant failure to make good its charges against the Republican party.

The people were told that there was an immense surplus in the Treasury which was kept there by the unwise management of the Republican administration, and that if the money was actually on hand—of which grave doubts were expressed—it should be promptly used in reducing the public debt or be distributed among the people. Upon the accession of a Democratic Treasurer every cent of the public fund was found in place, and yet after fifteen months of opportunity to make the promised reduction of the public debt behold the result!

Since the inauguration of President Cleveland, up to and including that of June 21, 1886 (a period of sixteen months), there have been calls for redemption of the outstanding bonds of the United States amounting to $58,000,000—a monthly average under Democratic management of $3,625,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us see how this compares with the debt-paying done by Republicans. From February 21, 1881, to March 4, 1885 (a period of forty-eight months), the bonds called for redemption made the sum of $556,969,950, or a monthly average of $11,603,540, showing a difference in favor of Republican management of $8,000,000 a month, or about one hundred millions each year. This showing is made from copies of bond-calls now before me—from the one hundred and first to and including the one hundred and thirty-eighth call made on the 21st instant. The one hundred and third, one hundred and sixteenth, and one hundred and twenty-first calls were for residue of certain issues named in these calls, the amounts of which are not stated, but which should be added to the sums called within the forty-eight months of Republican management.

What a difference between Democratic promises before the election and their fulfillment afterward!

Mr. Chairman, after a quarter of a century, within which the Government has been saved as by fire from the attempt of Democratic leaders to destroy it, and in which the country has enjoyed a prosperity and growth unparalleled in the history of the world, in every step of which the Republican party has been the exponent of the people, this same old Democratic party comes again into power and is now making its second attempt to direct the administration of the Government of this great country.

Seventeen months have not elapsed since its accession to power, and yet, by its complete failure to inaugurate its promised reforms and to redeem its pledges, and more especially by its utter inability to bring forward measures to meet the business requirements of the country, it is becoming apparent to all that Democracy is unequal to the task it has undertaken.

During the forty years of the supremacy of the old Democracy its leadership and control was in the South, and this leadership influenced the party to adopt the heresy that capital should own labor.

This utterly false idea of economics was the corner-stone on which they determined to build the Republic. They looked with contempt upon the laboring man, and while professing Democracy were building up an aristocracy. They sought to extend their infamous labor system into territory sacredly consecrated to freedom, and failing in this, they conspired to destroy the Government itself.

Long years of undisputed power, led by their selfish doctrinaires, had bred in the minds of Southern leaders of the Democracy an imperiousness that could brook no interference; their plan was universal domination; and when at last the manhood of the North was aroused, when Kansas was rescued from the baneful touch of this heresy, and the noble Lincoln was chosen as the first Republican President, frenzy and madness seized the discomfited plotters against labor, and in a condition of utter madness (led by that arch-conspirator whose gaunt form still stalks the earth, and who with sepulchral voice still declares "the cause is not lost") they aimed a shot at their country's flag. But alas for the conspirators against free labor, that shot did not reach the flag but killed their darling institution.

Since that fatal shot the disembodied spirit of the peculiar institution—as the ghost of the suicide is wont to do—still lingers around the spot where its old body met its tragic end. It seems still anxious to vex with its presence the children of men. It manifests its old-time tendencies through the Democratic party in many ways, and especially so in its policy of striking down protection to labor.

Mr. Chairman, I have endeavored to express my approval of the course pursued by the Democratic Commissioner of the General Land Office and my disapproval of the course of the administration under which that officer serves. I have pointed to the propriety and necessity of land reform, and have claimed for it a close relation to the labor question. I have referred to the fact that inasmuch as the leaders of the Democratic party are yet in sympathy with the dead past, they do not and can not administer government for the living present.

Sir, new questions are every year being discussed by the people on which Congress is called to legislate—questions such as are necessarily involved in that expansion of liberty which the new era in our country's history has made possible.

To which political party can the solution of these questions most safely be intrusted?

The Republican party was conceived that this new era might have birth, and it came forth amid the pangs of that fearful struggle which made us one great nation in which there is no slave. But, Mr. Chairman, no political party can live in the presence of the great questions I have referred to if it relies upon its past achievements. It must be abreast of the times if it would have for its supporters those who constitute the strength of the Republic.

Mr. CANNON obtained the floor.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I rise for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

Mr. RANDALL. I am ready to answer the question of the gentleman from Maine.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman will yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to the gentleman from Maine asking a question if it does not come out of my time.

Mr. RANDALL. No; it will not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will then recognize the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I wish to go back to paragraph commencing in line 851 and ending in line 860. I am satisfied the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations would not permit that to pass if the terms of it had been carefully scrutinized.

Mr. RANDALL. Read the language the gentleman refers to.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It is as follows:

No purchases shall be made on contracts executed in pursuance of appropriations made for the Navy Department or hereafter authorized by Congress, nor shall any property belonging to the Government be sold, until after publication of an advertisement calling attention in the briefest practicable form to the facts in each case, and stating where detailed information may be had; such advertisement to be inserted in a daily newspaper published in the city of Washington, D. C., to be designated annually by the President.

Mr. RANDALL. I can not consent to going back, but I can say this: that the paragraph which the gentleman has read comes from the Navy Department, and is designed to save a large sum of money.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think I can demonstrate that it is a job.

Mr. RANDALL. Prove it is such, and I will go as quickly as the gentleman from Maine or any other to vote it out of the bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think so, and that is why I wish to prove it.

Mr. RANDALL. If there is any job about it, it comes from the Navy Department.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Very possibly; with the Navy Department I have nothing to do. It proposes every article of property sold by the Government shall be advertised in a daily newspaper published in the city of Washington, D. C., no matter what the character of that property may be, no matter where the property is, no matter how absurd it may be. It is evidently a job, and that paper is to be designated by the President of the United States.

Mr. RANDALL. It is no such thing. It is to abridge advertisements in this connection, but not to cut off in any degree what is necessary for public information in reference to these sales.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the language of the paragraph:

Nor shall any property belonging to the Government be sold, until after publication of an advertisement, * * * such advertisement to be inserted in a daily newspaper published in the city of Washington, D. C., to be designated annually by the President.

Mr. RANDALL. I have your statement to prove that it is a job.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I purpose to do it. I want you to give me time. Here is the language which I have already quoted. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I do not wish this complicated by any misunderstanding. I do not think I have made any statement which reflects on any gentleman in this House or anybody else. I do not mean that. I do not mean to have it complicated by any suspicion.

I say furthermore, the remarks made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania in regard to this proposition indicate he has not fully weighed the language which has been furnished him by some one.

Mr. RANDALL. Nobody furnished me with anything except the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Precisely, because the debate shows the gentleman regards it as applying to the property which might be sold by the Navy Department; but if he will read the language carefully he will see it not only applies to the property sold by the Navy Department, but to the property belonging to the Government, which may be sold anywhere. [Cries of "Order!"] It reads, "any property belonging to the Government."

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question before the committee.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania is permitting me to go on.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is not entitled to the floor; the gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I will tell you what I will do. [Cries of "Regular order!"] We will let this matter go over until to-morrow morning, when I will discuss it with you.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Precisely; that is all I ask. If it be shown the interpretation given is not correct, then I have nothing more to say.

Mr. RANDALL. I have nothing to conceal.

Mr. REED, of Maine. No one would be further than myself from charging any member of the Appropriations Committee, or even the man who drew this——

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know who drew it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I am only talking about the effect of it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in the five minutes allotted to me that I have no doubt frauds have been committed in acquiring titles to the public lands. I have no doubt in these same sections grand and petty larcenies, homicides, and all of the crimes known to the calendar, not only along the border but in the older States, have been committed. I have no doubt that frauds in all other business transactions have run riot along the border as well as in the older States. But I never knew before that fraud was to be presumed against a whole population or against all transactions touching any class of business.

In 1870 a young man who read law in my office, after he fought through the late war, went to Wichita when there was no Wichita there, when he had to travel 150 miles over the vacant prairie to get there. I passed through that part of the country last fall in company with the gentleman from Indiana and found at Wichita a city of fifteen thousand people, a higher order of cultivation and civilization than exists in some parts of my own State that have been settled for three-quarters of a century.

Now, I want to say here that it is to the interest of every man who is seeking to find a home for himself on the agricultural public lands of this country to contest every fraudulent entry. He can do it, and when he makes the contest successfully he gets the title.

I want to say that self-interest in the conflict between the settlers, as I understand it, unearths more fraud in a month than the Commissioner of the Land Office, even with his one hundred and fifty special agents if you give him that number, can in a year or two years.

I am surprised that my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], with his almost life-long record against the swelling up of appropriations for men to roam up and down the country, will come now, under this Democratic administration, too, and seek to swell this appropriation to $150,000 for an additional number of Democratic employés to be appointed throughout the length and breadth of the country, with large salaries, upon a heavy per diem, to roam up and down at will seeking fraud and professing to have discovered fraud, because they know that the discovery of fraud is an absolute necessity upon which their employment rests.

They are compelled, therefore, to find it whether it exists or not. It does not comport well with the reputation of the gentleman from Indiana and his practices heretofore; and for one I will not stand here and help to swell this appropriation for that purpose. I noticed it not only upon this item of the bill, but upon the other item for the protection of the timber. The gentleman from Indiana wanted to swell up that appropriation; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania in charge of the bill resisted so strenuously that he withdrew his advocacy of swelling the appropriation and allowed the proposed amendment to be withdrawn.

I want to say that I understand something of the trials of poor men in a new country, for I lived in my early life upon the frontier, and I know something of what every man, when he goes into that country as a settler, must undergo, especially when he goes without capital, as most of them do. I know what must be borne, for I have been there, in the way of privation, hunger, and suffering. I recollect to have gone through it in the earlier part of my life, and I have some sympathy with the 90 per cent. of honest people who go to Kansas and Nebraska and Dakota without anything but their hands to make homes. And so far as any order of a Department will make a general rule that sweeps into the same common vortex the man who commits fraud with the honest man, the settler in good faith, I stand against such order and against all appropriations to carry it out and enforce it.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. REAGAN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

PUBLIC BUILDING, WILLIAMSPORT, PA.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report from a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2148) making an appropriation for a public building at Williamsport, Pa., having met after full and free conference have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, and 4, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: "Including the cost of any additional ground for site, which the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to purchase, if in his judgment necessary;" and the Senate agree to the same.

SAMUEL DIBBLE,
THOMAS D. JOHNSTON,
W. W. BROWN,
Managers on the part of the House.

WILLIAM MAHONE,
J. D. CAMERON,
J. N. CAMDEN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement accompanying the report is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 2148) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a building for the use of the United States circuit and district courts of the United States, the post-office, and other Government offices at Williamsport, Pa., and making an additional appropriation therefor," respectfully submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action of the committee of conference:

1. The Senate amendments 1 and 2, which the House is recommended to concur in, simply correct an error in placing the words "and twenty-five thousand" in the wrong place in the bill. The House passed the bill with a limit, for site and building, of $225,000, instead of the original limit of $100,000, and the Senate amendments 1 and 2 make the bill conform to this action of the House, as expressed elsewhere in the same section of the bill.

2. The Senate struck out section 2 by its amendment numbered 4. This section appropriated $50,000 for purchase of additional ground and continuation of work; and in lieu thereof the Senate added at the end of section 1 of the bill the words "including site," which is the Senate amendment numbered 3. The committee of conference recommend concurrence in the action of the Senate in striking out section 2, and that amendment 3 be agreed to also, being first amended to read as follows: "Including the cost of any additional ground for site, which the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to purchase, if in his judgment necessary."

Under the action of the conference committee the action of the House in the passage of the bill is sustained without any increase of expense or material change.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

SAMUEL DIBBLE,
THO. D. JOHNSTON,
W. W. BROWN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there any change in the amount from what was in the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. The amount is neither increased nor diminished.

Mr. HOLMAN. Did not the Senate increase or diminish the amount?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Neither. The House bill made a present appropriation. That has been stricken out, and the House conferees agreed to the action of the Senate.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILES F. WEST.

Mr. MCMILLIN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 9724) for the relief of Miles F. West; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE OVER BIGBEE RIVER.

Mr. MARTIN (by Mr. MCMILLIN), by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 9725) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Bigbee River at or near Jackson, Ala., and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 544) granting leave of absence to employés in the Government Printing Office.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Several messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

OTOE AND MISSOURIA RESERVATION.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Indian Affairs the bill (H. R. 7087) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to extend the time for the payment of the purchase-money on the sale of the reservation of the Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians in the States of Nebraska and Kansas. The bill has been reported from the Senate with an amendment. By direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs I ask non-concurrence in the Senate amendments and that a committee of conference be requested.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think this can not be understood without some explanation.

Mr. PERKINS. I think that there can be no objection to my request.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen may be allowed to publish in the RECORD remarks on the land question.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And also on the Geological Survey.

There was no objection, and leave was granted.

And then (the hour of 5 o'clock having arrived) the House adjourned.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Nathaniel A. Hawes, late corporal of Company G, First District of Columbia Cavalry, transferred to Company L, First Maine Cavalry, praying for $1,350 damages, with interest, on the ground that he should have been mustered out with the former regiment instead of being transferred to the latter regiment, in which event he could have availed himself of the opportunity of re-enlisting and securing the large bounty offered at that period of the war, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

MANAGERS FOR NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOME.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 177) appointing managers for the National Home for Disabled Soldiers to fill vacancies in the board which occurred by expiration of terms on the 21st day of April, 1886, and I ask immediate action thereon.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It proposes to appoint General WILLIAM J. SEWELL of New Jersey, Martin T. McMahon of New York, and Capt. John L. Mitchell of Wisconsin managers of the National Homes for Disabled Soldiers, to fill vacancies which occurred by reason of the expiration of the terms of members of the board on the 21st day of April, 1886.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator from Connecticut state whose terms have expired?

Mr. HAWLEY. The term of General Martin T. McMahon, the term of General George B. McClellan, and the Senator from Wisconsin can perhaps tell me the other member, one from the West, whose place Capt. John L. Mitchell is to fill.

Mr. MANDERSON. General Fulton, of Wisconsin.

Mr. HAWLEY. This joint resolution is acceptable to the Military Committee of both Houses, and the board desires immediate action, because it has business to do.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 2769) for the relief of the legal representatives of Maj. William Kendall; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BECK introduced a bill (S. 2775) to authorize the Postmaster-General to appoint and remove postmasters of the third class; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. BECK. I ask that the bill be read at length.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 3830 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by inserting the word "third," on the first line thereof, before the word "fourth;" so that the section will read:

"Postmasters of the third, fourth, and fifth class shall be appointed, and may be removed, by the Postmaster-General, and all others shall be appointed and may be removed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall hold their offices for four years, unless sooner removed or suspended according to law. All appointments and removals shall be notified to the Sixth Auditor."

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I desire to have the bill referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. It seems to me that we are wasting a great deal of the valuable time of the Senate and of the committees by dealing with inferior officers of that sort when there are so many so much more important who are appointed by the heads of Departments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MCPHERSON introduced a bill (S. 2776) granting a pension to Cyrenius G. Stryker; which was read by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT FOR 1885.

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate why the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1885 has not been delivered for distribution.

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further "concurrent or other resolutions" the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], which comes over under objection. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing is hereby authorized and directed to inquire into the public printing and binding, and the distribution and sale of public documents, including the reports of debates, showing the manner in which the work has been executed in years past, with the cost thereof; with authority to sit during the coming recess, to employ a stenographer, and to call for information upon those Departments of Goverment which have printing and binding executed at the Government Printing Office, with a view to the reduction of expenses, and to report a codification of the laws on printing and binding in print, at the commencement of the next session, embodying such reforms as may to them seem desirable and practicable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. MANDERSON. There is an amendment submitted yesterday by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed in line 2, after the word "printing," to insert:

Engraving, lithographing, photolithographing, and other illustrations connected with the public printing.

So as to read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing is hereby authorized and directed to inquire into the public printing, engraving, lithographing, photolithographing, and other illustrations connected with the public printing and binding, and the distribution and sale of public documents, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. To meet the views of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], expressed yesterday, I move to add after the word "binding," at the end of line 9, the words "distribution and sale of public documents;" so as to read:

And to report a codification of the laws on printing and binding, distribution and sale of public documents in print at the commencement of the next session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

EXECUTIVE SESSIONS WITH OPEN DOORS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have received this morning from my much-esteemed friend and neighbor the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] a letter, which I will send to the Secretary's desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, June 29, 1886.

DEAR SENATOR: I notice that the resolution in relation to executive sessions with open doors is to be taken up. I have some remarks long since ready on the subject, but shall be unable to be present in the Senate. You will do me a special favor, therefore, if you will ask leave of the Senate to read for me these remarks, which I will place in your hands. They are not long, and I hope that you at least will find them tolerable and to be endured.

Very truly, yours,

JUSTIN S. MORRILL.

CHARLES F. MANDERSON, United States Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I gave notice yesterday that to-morrow I should ask the Senate to take up that resolution in order that I might make some remarks upon it, but I will waive any right that that notice gave me with very great pleasure, and will say what I have to say after the remarks of the Senator from Vermont shall have been read. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the remarks may be read by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that consent will be given. The Chair hears no objection, and leave is granted.

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire to express my sense of obligation and that of the Senator from Vermont to the Senator from Massachusetts, and to give notice, in accordance with the expressed wish of the Senate, that I shall to-morrow morning ask leave to read the remarks of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. HALE. It is not understood that this gives consent that the resolution shall be taken up for final action, but only for the purpose of the speech being made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that that is the only consent which is asked for.

Mr. MANDERSON. I so understood it.

Mr. PLATT. Before the matter passes from the consideration of the Senate, I wish to say that I should be very glad to have the resolution referred to disposed of at this session of the Senate, but I have been advised that several Senators aside from the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Vermont desire to discuss the resolution, and, so far as I am concerned personally and so far as I have any relation to the resolution, I am content to have it go over until December if it can be made a special order for that time. At the proper time I shall make such a motion.

EULOGIES ON REPRESENTATIVE HAHN.

Mr. EUSTIS. I desire to give notice that on next Thursday, at half past 4 o'clock, I shall ask the consent of the Senate to take up the message from the House of Representatives advising the Senate of the death of Hon. MICHAEL HAHN, late a Representative from the State of Louisiana.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. CAMDEN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege. I ask the Secretary to read a short notice in the Cincinnati Commercial of the 27th instant.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia asks for the reading of a paper. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

"FIVE TO ONE ON PAYNE"—SIX VOTES WANTED AT $50,000 EACH.

Mr. George Fox, of the Friend and Fox Paper Company, of Lockland, has just returned from a visit in West Virginia, where he represented some important interests. While there he heard a piece of news in relation to the Payne investigation that is of public interest. He was thrown into intimate relations with several prominent individuals, some of them Democrats of high political and official connections.

Just before he left West Virginia for Cincinnati he learned that Senator CAMDEN, whose intimate relations to the Standard Oil Company are well known, representing that State in the United States Senate, had telegraphed to a prominent Democrat from Washington that only six more votes were necessary to carry the Senate for Payne, and they were prepared to pay $50,000 each for them. He expressed great confidence that it could be successfully done, and that the Senate would vote against the investigation. On the strength of this message from Washington the parting counsel to Mr. Fox was: "As you are going to Cincinnati, where they possibly don't know as much of the inside as we do, it will pay you to bet five to one in favor of Payne."

Mr. CAMDEN. Mr. President, I am not in the habit of noticing newspaper articles of this kind, and would not do so now, but in this instance, when it relates to a matter pending before the Senate and is evidently intended to have its effect in the consideration of the question referred to, I deem it my duty to the Senate as well as to the Senator referred to, to denounce the article as maliciously false from beginning to end, false in every particular, false in every detail, and without the slightest shadow of foundation in truth.

I know nothing of Mr. George Fox. The article states that I sent such a telegram from Washington. Its absurdity is so apparent that it needs no explanation to this body. But if it were not for dignifying the article, which is beneath decent recognition, I would state that instead of being in Washington, I have been at my home in West Virginia for the past ten days, returning only yesterday.

Mr. President, such publications are an outrage upon the Senate, an outrage upon individuals, and an outrage upon common decency.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the veto message of the President of the United States of the Des Moines River lands bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 150) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding? And upon that question the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] has the floor.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I trust I may bring such observations as seem necessary within reasonable and even close limits.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has brought into notice some circumstances, such as the interests represented by citizens of New York and of some other States than the State of Iowa, coming in as a sort of foreigners, or under a foreign corporation, that is, a corporation of the State of New York; and some allusions, too, have been made to some of the efforts and influences which may have attended the procurement of the purposed extension of these grants. I have nothing to say on either of those subjects.

The whole matter before the Senate now is a question upon the veto message, and that has to do with a bill that is wholly occupied with affecting the interests in land of persons claiming or desiring to claim before the courts of the country.

But I think I may very shortly put at rest any imputations upon any of the original transactions with this Government in regard to this grant, or in regard to the interpretation of it as comprehending lands north of the Raccoon Fork, by simply calling attention, in the first place, to the original grant of 1846, which issues no lands unless there has been an expenditure which has justified the issue of the lands:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the lands hereby granted shall not be conveyed or disposed of by said Territory, nor by any State to be formed out of the same, except as said improvements shall progress; that is, the said Territory or State may sell so much of said lands as shall produce the sum of $30,000, and then the sale shall cease, until the governor of said Territory or State shall certify the fact to the President of the United States, that one-half of said sum has been expended upon said improvement, when the said Territory or State may sell and convey a quantity of the residue of said lands, sufficient to replace the amount expended, and thus the sales shall progress as the proceeds thereof shall be expended, and the fact of such expenditure shall be certified as aforesaid.

Giving the regulation of the proceeding.

Much was said about the absolutely baseless claim that these lands extended above the Raccoon Fork. Let me appeal from the judgment of the Senator from Iowa now to the letter addressed by the two Senators of that State and the two Members of Congress of that State to Mr. Walker, then Secretary of the Treasury, upon this subject. Under date of January 8, 1849, these representatives of this new State of Iowa write to the Secretary of the Treasury, that Department then having charge of the land control:

During the last summer we were much surprised to see lands proclaimed for sale by the President of the United States, which had been declared by the General Land Office and considered by the people of Iowa as the property of that State, under the act of 8th August, 1846, "granting certain lands to the Territory of Iowa, to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Des Moines River, in said Territory."

I read another clause:

The granting clause in the act of August 8, 1846, is so clear that we are constrained, by a due regard to the interests of the people of the State of Iowa, to ask your consideration of the subject; and we are further encouraged to take this course, as the Commissioner, we are assured, will be pleased to extend to the State the full complement of the grant, if the law, in your opinion, should bear that construction.

Citing the language then of the court:

This language is so plain that the extent of the grant is a self-evident proposition, and requires no argument. But the idea is entertained that the improvement governs the extent of the grant. This construction, we beg leave to state, has never obtained.

Again:

The reason for this extension of the grant to Iowa above the terminus of the improvement is, moreover, manifest; because near the mouth of the river that improvement will be very expensive; and there the grant does not attach, because the lands on the Missouri side of the river, below Sullivan's line, are in Missouri, and those on the Iowa side are the property of individuals; and, further, most of the lands some distance up the Des Moines have been sold by the Government; and, as the grant is only of the unsold and unappropriated lands in the alternate sections, the only equivalent for those which had been sold that could be given are the vacant lands far in the interior from the Mississippi; and hence the terms used in the law.

As the terms of the act, then, are so clear and explicit, and as the reasons for the extension of the grant, as provided by that act, are so obvious, we respectfully request in our own behalf, and in behalf of the State and her citizens, who look with that confidence heretofore so fully justified, that you will not withhold the munificence of Congress, and thus cripple this young and rising State in her first great enterprise, and thus involve her in inextricable debt and difficulty.

That was the situation as it then stood; and now we are told that this was so baseless a pretension that it was hardly to be reconciled with sincerity and integrity in the transaction. I appeal from the subsequent status and the later representatives of the State of Iowa to the condition of things as it existed then, and to the united representation of the Senators and the Congressmen of that State.

Mr. ALLISON. By whom was the letter signed?

Mr. EVARTS. By A. C. Dodge, George W. Jones, Shepherd Leffler, and William Thompson.

Now the Secretary replies:

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of 8th of January last, and accompanying papers, on the construction of the act of Congress "granting lands to the Territory of Iowa to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Des Moines River, in said Territory," approved 8th August, 1846. I concur with you in the views contained in your communication, and am of the opinion that the grant in question extends, as therein stated, on both sides of that river, from its source to its mouth, but not to lands on the river in the State of Missouri. I have transmitted your communication and accompanying papers, with a copy of this letter, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

That was the establishment, and from that time forward there never came to be a moment when under the land system of the United States a pre-emption or a homestead footing could be gained within this land thus withdrawn.

Mr. GEORGE. From whom did the Senator read just now?

Mr. EVARTS. I read a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GEORGE. I refer to the last extract. Who was the author of that?

Mr. EVARTS. The last extract was a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Walker, under date of March 2, 1849, in immediate reply to this application.

It is said that in changes to a certain extent, and obtaining for limited periods, there was a revision and reversion and then a restoration of this original proposition of the Secretary of the Treasury, and there has been a pretension, and a pretension lawfully put forth no doubt, and agitated in the courts, that there might have been or was an opportunity for a footing of a settler under the homestead or pre-emption acts during some interval of this change of purpose. The courts, as I understand them, have held the contrary; that without any reference to the question of whether the title was or was not good in the State under the original grant, so far as it reached lands above the fork, and whatever may have been the intervals of administrative views and action that bound the reservation which had never been released, there was no footing in the courts for claimants of that kind. There are cases, one is the case of Riley vs. Welles, and another the case of Crilly, referred to by the honorable Senator from Iowa, and these suitors may have thought they had a footing. The courts entertained the propositions, examined them, and decided that whatever formalities, however early and however honest their claims, this land had never been opened to the footing of a settler.

Mr. President, the regular proceedings were had by which the Government could be informed how and in what proportion the issues should be made that would permit the title to these lands. Now let me show the connection of the Des Moines company with the title, whatever it may be, that the State of Iowa had.

The State of Iowa under the impulse of this generous grant had itself undertaken the business by its board of improvements and had spent $475,000 upon it. That plan was relinquished, and this corporation was employed under proper authority from the government of Iowa to complete the work, and the completion was to have included the expenditure of $1,320,000 I think, and to have been compensated by the lands at the rate of a dollar and a quarter an acre. The State of Iowa was master of that situation, and this company was able to make such a contract as it found suitable to itself.

Under this contract this company went on and expended $332,000, or its equivalent, what is so regarded and so stated by the authorities of Iowa, and they came to a conclusion between the State and themselves that the matter should be released and ended and the account closed between them. Whatever may have been the real moving impulses in this new settlement—and there is no reason for suspecting anything—there would seem probable at the bottom a conclusion that the river improvement would have to give way to the advancing system of railroads that were to prevail all over that country. There was a large improvement in Wisconsin, in which very promising adventures, both of profit and of utility to the company, were entered upon on the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers. Nothing, I believe, came of them that was important; and railroads, as we all know, contend even on the Hudson River in the business of transportation of freight and passengers.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator will permit me to call his attention to one paragraph of the veto message, I should be very glad to hear at the proper time his remarks in reference to it. I see in the veto message of the President the following language:

For the purpose of validating such titles and to settle all disputes so far as the General Government was concerned, the Congress, in the year 1861, by a joint resolution, transferred to the State of Iowa all the title then retained by the United States to the lands within the larger limits which had been claimed, and then held by bona fide purchasers from the State; and in 1862 an act of Congress was passed for the same general purpose.

If that statement is correct—and I have no doubt it is—I should be very glad to be informed what Congress has to do with this question? If the General Government parted with all title to these lands to the State of Iowa, it seems to me the State of Iowa should settle with her citizens.

Mr. EVARTS. The Senator from South Carolina is quite right in his interpretation of the language of the veto message and quite right about the facts that govern the case. He is quite right also in his conclusion, as it seems to me, and that conclusion has been reached by a unanimous report of the Judiciary Committee in a report in 1880, and by an important and weighty minority that up to this time from the Public Lands Committee have expressed in full their views. But I will bring out very distinctly in a few words the relations which the act of 1861 operated upon.

I have got the grant of 1846, forty years ago, construed by all the public men of Iowa, pressed upon this Government, executed by this Government, and on these contracts that were proceeding upon that basis this company were to get these lands above Raccoon Fork. There were none below it at all adequate in amount or in value to cover the transaction of $1,300,000. In 1858, the Senate will notice, quite in advance of the act of 1861, the State and this company came to a settlement, approved by a joint resolution of the Legislature approved on March 22, 1858, authorizing abandonment of the contract with the navigation company and a settlement with said company. This settlement conveyed these lands on the part of Iowa to this company—I mean all that are now in dispute; not what it would have acquired if it had gone on with its further work, but what it was to take in satisfaction of the $332,000 that had been earned, and that was at the rate of a dollar and a quarter an acre, and gives this company about 266,000 acres. This formal contract is before me, but I will not read it.

Now, let us come to a definite statement on the part of the authorities of this State of Iowa in the very matter of its arrangement and its appeal—that is, the State's appeal—to the United States for the issue of lands. You have noticed in the section I have read from the act of 1846 a requirement of a certification which should justify the issue of the land by the United States.

EXECUTIVE CHAMBER, IOWA, Des Moines, April 28, 1858—

Following this settlement—

To his excellency JAMES BUCHANAN,
President of the United States:

I, Ralph P. Lowe, governor of the State of Iowa, as required by act of Congress, approved August 8, 1846, "granting certain lands of the Territory of Iowa, to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Des Moines River, in said Territory—

That is, the granting act—

do hereby certify that there has been expended from time to time, prior to the date hereof, on the improvement of said river, as the work has progressed, and the money has been required under certain contracts made by the State of Iowa with the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, the sum of $332,644.04, and in consideration of said expenditures on said improvement, and in pursuance of the provisions of the act of Congress, approved as aforesaid, there will be conveyed to said Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company 266,107.23 acres of the lands belonging to said grant, and which have been certified and approved to the State of Iowa under said act, for the prosecution of the improvement of said river Des Moines.

In testimony whereof I, Ralph P. Lowe, governor of the State of Iowa, have caused the great seal of the State of Iowa to be hereunto affixed, together with my signature.

[SEAL.] RALPH P. LOWE.

By the governor:

ELIJAH SELLS, Secretary of State.

Many deeds were issued by that State to this company, and a general deed, very brief, which I will call attention to—and this is under the date of May 18, 1858—on the part of the State of the first part, and the navigation company on the second part, reciting:

That the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of $1 paid by the parties of the second part, and in pursuance of a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, approved the 22d day of March, 1858, does hereby sell, grant, bargain, and convey to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company the following described lands, to wit: All lands granted by an act of Congress approved August 8, 1846, to the Territory of Iowa, to aid in the improvement of the Des Moines River, which have been approved and certified to the State of Iowa by the General Government, saving and excepting all lands sold or conveyed, or agreed to be sold or conveyed by the State of Iowa, by its officers and agents, prior to the 23d day of December, 1853, under said grant, and said company, or its assigns, shall have right to all of said lands so herein granted to them as fully as the State of Iowa could have under or by virtue of of said grant, or in any manner whatever.

I will not go over the proceedings of the Land Office, and we come to the resolution of March 2, 1861. Under the induction of the facts and the train of negotiations we are ready now for this action of Congress in executing at the request of the people of Iowa what was a confirmation of what had been treated as accurate and true, but by a recent decision of the Supreme Court in 1859 had been held as an improper interpretation of the act of 1846.

Resolved, &c., That all the title which the United States still retain in the tracts of lands along the Des Moines River and above the mouth of the Raccoon Fork thereof—

That is the part in which the title had failed, as was supposed—in the State of Iowa, which have been certified to said State improperly by the Department of the Interior—

That is, the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States had shown that the true construction of the act did not cover the land above the Raccoon Fork—

as part of the grant by act of Congress approved August 8, 1846, and which is now held by bona fide purchasers under the State of Iowa, be, and the same is hereby, relinquished to the State of Iowa—

On the ground that in good faith this State had sold these lands, treating the construction as it was treated by the Government, whatever variations of administrative judgment there may have been until the Supreme Court of the United States had determined it authoritatively to the contrary. There was a debate here, and Mr. Polk, who then represented Missouri, said:

Mr. POLK. I move to insert "and by the State sold to actual settlers."
Mr. GRIMES—

Who then represented in this body, and with great distinction, his State of Iowa, said:

If the Senator will change it so that it will apply to any purchaser or grantee of the State it will be entirely satisfactory. * * * The man who, by virtue of his own action, the action of your own officers, went there and obtained the land, if he be not an actual settler, he is morally and politically and in every way just as much entitled to receive justice at the hands of the Senate as the man who is an actual settler. He is a bona fide purchaser. If the Senator will insert the words "any bona fide purchaser from the State of Iowa" I shall be satisfied.
Mr. HARLAN—

The other Senator from that State—

A part of this land has been sold by the State to actual settlers. A part of this grant has been sold to gentlemen who were applying their money in putting in locks and dams, * * * and they in turn have sold to other parties. Some of them, perhaps, are not improving the land, but many of them are actual settlers. The purpose of the amendment he proposes (Mr. Polk's) is to cut out all those who may have bought these lands of the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company. That would be unjust to the company and unjust to the purchasers of the company. All that we claim is that the General Government shall quitclaim to Iowa the amount of lands conveyed to Iowa by the officers of the General Government, although, as alleged, wrongfully conveyed or without legal authority. We do not claim an acre above the Racoon Fork which has not been certified to the State, &c.
Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move an amendment "by the State or grantee of the State to any actual settler."
Mr. POLK. I will accept that amendment.
Mr. CRITTENDEN. I would suggest, as there is some difficulty about the provision in reference to actual settlement, to say, all bona fide purchasers deriving title under the State. It seems to me that would cover everything.
Mr. GRIMES. That will be entirely satisfactory to me. It seems to be just to all parties. I understand it is satisfactory to the Senator from Missouri.
Mr. POLK. I agree to it.

And so the clause reads in that resolution, "and is now held by bona fide purchasers under the State of Iowa." There came up questions of law, as this was a relinquishment to the State of Iowa, how it would inure in law, in ejectments, as a pure question of title of land in regard to this property which was not vested in the State of Iowa under the original grant but which had been confirmed to it under these terms. These lands of ours in 1862 were reported by the register of the State land office for the State of Iowa to this Government, enumerating all these classes.

I now come to the question of judicial decisions, and shall be very brief upon it. Something has been said about an important, an initial case, that of Wolcott, as having been in some sense an agreed or stated case, and some suspicion is thrown upon that. But the Senate will have observed that there never was anything in question except pure legal conclusions from pure statutory transactions either on the part of Iowa or on the part of the United States, and the only defect in the sincerity and candor of the record was that only a part of the granting act of 1846 had been contained in the record. Well, there is no opportunity for debate on that subject. I have not examined it to see whether it is so; but it was not a matter of pleading to be brought to the notice of this court or of any court; it was a public statute of the United States.

I have before me the opinion of Mr. Justice Nelson, given in that case, but which I will not read. It shows that the subject then disposed of was accurately before the court, and it was disposed of fully, as a question of law.

More thorough investigations have occurred since, and, as I have said to the Senate and will now repeat, I am not able myself to see any condition of facts or any arguments of law, either in morals, in equity, or in law, that have not been pressed upon the attention of the Supreme Court of the United States in successive arguments, and this statute now proposed to be passed by Congress is a recognition of the fact that under the law as it is applied to the situation of claimants and competitors under the transactions on the statute-book and in the public archives there is not a footing upon which one of these original settlers can put himself as a plaintiff to obtain a recovery.

It must be that the United States somehow or other, notwithstanding the act of 1861, notwithstanding the act of 1862, notwithstanding the act of 1871, has some title in these lands; but I am not able to discover any such title; and as this is made, as it seems to be now made, by the fiat of Congress, from the moment the law is passed, and not resting upon any antecedent rights or laws, it is a simple question of whether the situation, not being capable of reagitation in the courts or law, shall now be reagitated in the name and by the power of the United States and under a footing not of somebody else's right, but of the absolute right of the United States to resume this land and then distribute it honorably and generously, if you please. But it comes from the United States by this right and not by the right of any competing litigant that can be brought into a court of justice.

In one of the cases the Supreme Court say:

Although the State possessed no title to the lot in dispute at the time of the conveyance to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, yet having an after-acquired title by the act of Congress, it would inure to the benefit of the grantees, and so in respect to these conveyances to the plaintiff. This is in accordance with the laws of Iowa.

The plaintiff had derived under that deraignment of title. This is in accordance with the laws of Iowa, I believe; for the rule of law is in Iowa that a subsequently accrued title does inure to the benefit of the purchaser under the idea that there was an existing title.

It has been argued that these lands had not been reserved by competent authority, and hence that the reservation was nugatory.

* * * * * * *

That there was a dispute existing as to the extent of this grant of 1846 in no way affects this question. The serious conflict of opinion among the public authorities on the subject made it the duty of the land officers to withhold the sales and reserve them to the United States till it was ultimately disposed of.

And they were so reserved. A later case than that of Riley vs. Welles, which raised this question of whether there could be a pre-emption claimant, and as the Senator from Iowa I believe stated and I suppose accurately, because he meant to state it correctly, this plaintiff might have had a footing under the pre-emption law. Mr. Justice Nelson says, delivering the opinion of the court:

It will appear from the case of Wolcott vs. The Des Moines Company that the tract of land, of which the lot in question was a part, had been withdrawn from sale and entry, on account of a difference of opinion among the officers of the Land Department as to the extent of the original grant by Congress of lands in aid of the improvement of the Des Moines River, from the year 1846 down to the resolution of Congress of March 2, 1861, and the act of July 12, 1862, which acts we held confirmed the title in the Des Moines Company. As the husband of the plaintiff entered upon the lot in 1855 without right, and the possession was continued without right, the permission of the register to prove up the possession and improvements and to make the entry under the pre-emption laws were acts in violation of law and void, as was also the issuing of the patent—

Because the lands were not open to settlement under the reservation. That is a hardship undoubtedly. Let it be counted up to those who have suffered a hardship of that nature by the principles of equity and justice. It does not lie as an imputation upon the Des Moines Company or the Des Moines Company's grantees. It is the United States' action, the authorities of the Government, by placing an expectant settler in this predicament of disaster.

George Crilly claimed another section. The tract had been sold by the Navigation Company to R. S. Burroughs, late of Albion, N. Y., who filed a bill to set aside Crilly's patent. In deciding the case at December term, 1872, Mr. Justice Davis said:

We have already decided that the Des Moines River lands were reserved from sale, and this reservation continued until Congress, by the joint resolution of 1861, released to the State, for the use of its grantees, the legal title still in the General Government, without any saving clause in behalf of settlers or those who might claim under the pre-emption laws of the United States.

Here is the case of Williams vs. Baker; decided in 1875 or 1876. That was an equity suit, where every point of legal attention was presented in evidence and in argument to the court. Baker had a good title under deraignment from the Des Moines company, and he filed a bill in equity to get an injunction against Williams, who claimed a right under another grant to a railroad company under authority from the United States, dating in 1856, I think. All that I refer to this case for is that it was not a case where a defendant would succeed as he would in ejectment, from the plaintiff's title failing. Here is a case where Baker comes into a court of equity as a claimant and must make out a good title, a most exhaustive one as against the world in competition. The injunction proceeds upon the ground that there is no foundation whatever, because the title of the plaintiff Baker is perfect.

The Senate will see how impossible it would be to argue all the questions that have thus been disposed of. I only desire to have every member of the Senate understand that if any case was ever examined and exhaustively considered and authoritatively disposed of by the Supreme Court of the United States as matter of legal title it is this case.

In a later case, Mr. Justice Davis, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

This case presents another phase of the Des Moines River land litigation. The main question involved in this case is the question of title to the Des Moines River lands, which was settled several years ago by the decision in the cases of Wolcott & Burr (5 Wallace, 681), and in the subsequent and unreported case of Welles vs. Riley, adversely to the title set up by the appellants. At the present term of this court the principles involved in these decisions were reconsidered and reaffirmed. (See Williams vs. Baker, and the Cedar Rapids and Missouri River Railroad Company vs. Martindale and others.) It is, therefore, no longer an open question that neither the State of Iowa, nor the railroad companies, for whose benefit the grant of 1856 was made, took any title by that act to the lands then claimed to belong to the Des Moines River grant of 1846, and that the joint resolution of 2d of March, 1861, and act of 12th of July, 1862, transferred the title from the United States and vested it in the State of Iowa for the use of its grantees under the river grant. If so, the claim of title by the appellants, who are grantees under one of these railroad companies, to the lands certified to the State of Iowa, under the act of August 8, 1846, above the Raccoon Fork of the Des Moines River, has no foundation to rest upon.

But this court has treated the matter more lately, and in a very late decision the court says, the Chief-Justice delivering the opinion—and

I ought to say here that I do not know that any dissent has shown itself in any of these determinations—in introducing the subject:

The following are no longer open questions in this court: (1) That the grant of lands to the Territory of Iowa, for the improvement of the Des Moines River, made by the act of August 8, 1846, chapter 103, 9 Statutes, 77, did not extend above the Raccoon Fork. (Dubuque and Pacific Railroad Company vs. Litchfield, 23 Howard, 66.)

In 1859—

(2) That, notwithstanding this, the odd-numbered sections within 5 miles of the river, on each side above the Raccoon Fork and below the east branch, to which the Indian title had been extinguished, were so far reserved "by competent authority" for the purpose of aiding in the improvement of the Des Moines, that they did not pass under the act of May 15, 1856, chapter 28, 11 Statutes, 9, granting lands to the State of Iowa to aid in the construction of certain railroads; and (3) that the act of July 12, 1862, chapter 161, 11 Statutes, 543, "transferred the title from the United States and vested it in the State of Iowa for the use of its grantees under the river grant."

The court say this:

The relinquishment under the joint resolution is of all the title which the United States retained in the tracts of land above the Raccoon Fork "which have been certified to said State improperly by the Department of the Interior as part of the grant by the act of Congress, approved August 8, 1846, and which is now held by bona fide purchasers under the State of Iowa;" and by the act of 1862 the lands are in terms to be held and applied in accordance with the provisions of the original grant. This legislation, being in pari materia, is to be construed together, and manifests most unmistakably an intention on the part of Congress to put the State and bona fide purchasers from the State just where they would be if the original act had itself granted all that was finally given for the river improvements. The original grant contemplated sales by the State in execution of the trust created, and the bona fide purchasers referred to—must have been purchasers at such sales.

That is, "referred to" in the act of 1861—

It is very obvious, without insisting more fully upon these decisions, that no injustice has been done to Iowa by the United States; and it is very apparent that the transactions between this improvement company and Iowa have been distinct and public and decisive, and it is perfectly clear that as toward Iowa this improvement company owns every dollar that it claims by deeds, which if not attended by warranty yet carried the obligation of estate that if the title failed this improvement company the State of Iowa should make it good. Why should it not? You can not refer to any discussions or agitations of whether the original transactions were or were not of this or that degree of value and service to the State. They made the contract; they closed the contract; they accounted for what was due under the contract. They took a certain conveyance in money and in valuable property in closing up the matter, and they gave these acres at the rate of $1.25 an acre in satisfaction of what was then computed and ascertained. So then, although this Government may well feel that the embarrassment by the construction of administrative officers has led innocent people into misfortune, yet it was not as against Iowa that any imputation could be made. Iowa asked for this interpretation; Iowa took the land; Iowa took the confirmation in 1861, and took it for its obligations already covered by these grants which had been executed in deed; and that is the end of that matter.

Mr. GEORGE. May I ask the Senator from New York a question without disturbing him?

Mr. EVARTS. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I have attended to the debate, and I do not know that I exactly understand the position of the Senator from New York. I understand it this way, and I wish to know if I am correct, that by judicial decision it has been settled by the Supreme Court of the United States that the improvement company and the persons claiming under them have a valid title to these lands. Is that so?

Mr. EVARTS. That is so.

Mr. GEORGE. If that be so, then what harm can the passage of this bill do to that company? The United States can not withdraw any right it may have granted. What harm then can arise from the passage of the bill?

Mr. EVARTS. Well, I suppose that when a freeholder has his land under the laws of the land, he does not like to have a great government set up to persecute him in regard to his title.

Mr. GEORGE. But there are other persons, poor persons I understand, who can not undertake litigation, who assert, contrary to the view of the Senator from New York, that the title has not passed to this company, and they ask that the Government of the United States, the common government both of the improvement company and of these parties, shall merely institute proceedings for the purpose of determining these various litigated questions. In that suit, if I understand it, all the rights of this improvement company and persons claiming under them will be given to them. Congress can not take any right away from them; and all that we do by the bill, as I understand, is for the United States to step in in behalf of a large number of poor persons who have settled upon this land and institute legal proceedings, the end of which shall be that if they are not right they go out, and if they are right they will be quieted in their title. I do not see any objection to a provision of that sort.

Mr. EVARTS. In the first place, if that is all, there is not any law necessary. If the United States has a right to an acre of this land, it can pursue it into the last stage, if it sees fit; and if it does not wish to be a cruel tyrant it may do it on the ground that it wishes to be benevolent after it has succeeded. That I agree to; but this act undertakes to impute to the United States a footing which it now does not possess, in the very distinct proposition that this land is restored to the public domain. How can it restore to the public domain your land or my land or the land of anybody claiming under the United States?

Mr. GEORGE. I agree that it can not do it if the land has actually passed from the United States.

Mr. EVARTS. Then I would not do it if I could not do it. I would stand on my rights and not profess to go into the court-room brandishing before the judges a law which has given me a footing that I did not possess before then.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand the effect of that provision of the statute is to give the United States the right to impose upon the Attorney-General the duty of litigating the question in the courts.

Mr. EVARTS. That is not it, I think.

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly if the United States has parted with its right it can not recapture it.

Mr. EVARTS. That is the very reason we do not want the United States by law to enact a footing for it to go into court. If the Attorney-General of the United States will go into court claiming in ejectment or in equity a possession of one acre of this land, the courts will entertain it. We do not need to empower the courts of the United States to entertain this great suitor, the United States, by its law. The condition of the whole is that there is not a footing for the United States without an enactment taking the land where it now belongs in point of law, and putting it by this enacting clause in the United States.

Mr. GEORGE. But I understand the United States does not want the land, but it merely intervenes—and that is the purpose of this bill—for the purpose of settling the various disputed rights between the parties. That is the whole effect of it.

Mr. EVARTS. That may be a benevolent motive. I am not discussing that question.

Mr. GEORGE. But has not the Government a right to entertain a benevolent motive in favor of these settlers?

Mr. EVARTS. Now, having said that much for the first clause, I pointed out yesterday, and will repeat if it is necessary, that beyond that footing thus given, which does not now obtain and which will not exist after it is given, in my judgment, because, as the Senator from Mississippi says, it can not do this if it can not be done, still, although not being himself or his friends involved in any of these titles, he thinks there is no harm in stirring up a hornet's nest there. There are nineteen hundred claimants under our title.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask in the line of the argument of the Senator from New York whether the land under this grant that came to the navigation company has not in the process of time come into the hands of bona fide purchasers from that company, and large numbers of them?

Mr. EVARTS. Of course; something like 60,000 out of the 266,000 acres.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like, in connection with the question of the Senator from Mississippi, to ask the Senator from New York if he does not think there is sufficient ground for the intervention of the Government in behalf of this large body of people, including the nineteen hundred people on the one side and the twelve hundred on the other, inasmuch as the Government of the United States in numerous instances has issued patents to one class of people and in numerous other instances has taken from them large sums of money which are now in the Treasury?

Mr. EVARTS. By law or regulation it can be returned.

Mr. GEORGE. Allow me to ask the Senator from Iowa what was his point?

Mr. ALLISON. My point was as to the duty of the Government. Here are a body of men, ten or twelve hundred, who have settled on this land in good faith under the homestead and pre-emption laws, have paid their money into the Treasury of the United States, and many of them have received patents. Now one suit ought certainly to be prosecuted, and the Government having their money as well as having parted with the land, it seems to me a proper case for the Government to settle all these questions as proposed by the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. The Government has received their money and actually conveyed by patent its title?

Mr. ALLISON. In many cases.

Mr. EVARTS. I can not go into that because I do not know about it, but I read you decisions made long ago. I stated in the opening yesterday that when there was an honest effort in 1873 to count up all the people who were involved in dispute, they were three hundred and forty-four up to that time, and now only of them twelve had any footing prior to the act of 1861 when the dispute was ended, and of the three hundred and forty-four, two hundred and seventy-seven were settled with by the Des Moines company, and those antecedent claimants were wiped out. Of the remaining seventy-seven, as left in that computation, now there are not more than ten or twelve that have not been settled with; and the point here is that if there is to be provided a footing under this act or under any tribunal whatever, it is in favor of people that have undertaken to settle on this land prior to 1880, for this bill generously limits them to that time, gives those who came in between 1861 and 1880, not with proved claims, not with a footing as claims, but that have had an honest intent to get the pre-emption or the homestead right. I do not object to their having good and honest intentions, but an honest intention is not sufficient to change the title of land, and this bill undertakes to do that.

Now I read what you must give them a footing for, when the United States begins this paternal lawsuit that is to shake up this whole neighborhood for another five or ten years with new litigation. But I say to my friend the Senator from Iowa that the party to settle the question of these conflicting claimants in Iowa is the State of Iowa. Then let the State come here for aid if she wants it. The State got this land from the United States, reported that these 266,000 acres by metes and bounds were earned and were to be delivered to the Des Moines company, and that was done. Now, if other people, under mistake, or under misfortune, have got into relations that, disastrous to themselves, may be fairly regretted, and we may fairly sympathize with them in regard thereto, but let Iowa do her justice. This land did not cost Iowa anything. It discharged her obligations, and by her own choice and direction just as distinctly as if that government had asked this Government to execute a deed of protection so and so to A B so and so.

The Senator from Mississippi thinks that it is no harm to give a litigant a footing that he has not got, and that he can not get until it is given to him if he has not got it already. Let us see whether this litigant is brought in to agitate upon existing propositions of law and of right in regard to titles to land:

Are hereby declared to be, public lands of the United States.

You might just as well pass a law, if it has not the title, to vest in A B the title which is now in C D.

Provided, That the title of all bona fide settlers under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees—

That covers us, does it not?

which do not come in conflict with pre-emption on homestead claimants, are hereby ratified and confirmed, and made valid.

That is to say, all our land that nobody disputes; and the United States will not dispute itself, notwithstanding it is carried into the public domain.

Provided further—

Having started us in that way—

That the claims of all persons—

Now the people that are to overthrow us—

That the claims of all persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, entered or remained upon any tract of said land prior to January, 1880—

It does not say when they entered or how long they staid. If they entered there on the 31st day of December, 1879, with a bona fide desire to acquire that piece of land, they come within the paramount title that is to override us—not exceeding 160 acres, are hereby confirmed and made valid in them, their heirs, or their proper assigns, and upon due proof thereof, and payment of the usual price or fees, where the same has not been paid, shall be carried to patent.

Then there is a further proviso:

Provided further, That the title of all bona fide claimants under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, settled upon the said lands prior to January, 1880, are confirmed and made valid.

That is the destruction of titles which are to be introduced by this statute to the consideration of the courts of the United States. Three clauses—one in our favor, that the United States will not take from us anything if nobody else claims it and if anybody else claims it we shall have none of it; and there are two clauses which are intended to secure that result. There is no escaping this matter. If the United States otherwise has rights, let her exercise them. If Iowa has rights and duty in regard to this property, let her go on with the course of law. But for the first time in the knowledge of the administration of law has there been presented a definition first of the plaintiff's title, second of the defendant's defense, and third of the plaintiff's conclusive integrity if anybody chooses to impugn it.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will allow me, I will state right here that I regard all these confirmations contained in these provisos as having this effect and no more, that so far as any right or title now remains in the United States that title and right are released in favor of the parties named here. It does not take a right from anybody, but it assumes that there may be a right in the United States, and so far as that right is concerned it is transferred to these parties.

Mr. EVARTS. Well, I can not add to my views already stated. I think they are clear. I think the necessity of the law indicates why it was desired. I see that the lines drawn about it as results to be reached show the reason why all these clauses were put in, and I do believe that the United States courts will find no footing for these cases under this bill. But it is not a good reason for passing a bill that it will be void and nugatory before the courts of law; indeed it is the duty of the President, as it is the duty of the Senate, to reconsider the topic as it is thus brought to their attention.

Now I will read one sentence from a unanimous report of the Judiciary Committee in 1880. Mr. Garland I think was chairman then of that committee, and it contained as well very eminent men on both sides of the Chamber. That report reviews and considers the authorities as cited; and is not this conclusion to be regarded as a just one on this subject of law? The conclusion is:

The more recent decisions (Wolsey vs. Chapman, 101 U. S. R., 755, and Litchfield vs. County of Weber, ibid., 773) approve the earlier cases on this subject already cited, and from them all it is clearly to be gathered that this matter has passed beyond the reach of Congress, and whatever rights the settlers seek to show or may wish to establish, they are not within any remedial legislation of Congress; they can not be affected by any act of Congress; in fact, it is a subject over which Congress has no jurisdiction; and the committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and recommend it be indefinitely postponed.

I now read the concluding clauses of the minority report of the Committee on Public Lands last year, signed by Mr. MORGAN, Mr. DOLPH, Mr. GIBSON, and Mr. Walker, who is not now a member of the Senate. The whole case is reviewed by these members, and after reviewing it and introducing this report of the Judiciary Committee they close in this way:

The number of suits that may be brought under the provisions of this bill is only measured by the number of claimants to the lands. A broad field of litigation is thus opened, and the Government, with all power and prestige, would go into court alone, or in company with all the claimants mentioned in this act, and would defray all the expenses of the many suits to assist them in the assertion and protection of the titles conferred upon them by this act.

In any case such a course would necessarily be unfair and unjust toward mere private persons of limited means, but in this case it would array the power of the United States to destroy titles acquired in good faith and paid for in full to the State of Iowa, confirmed by the joint resolution of Congress relinquishing the lands to bona fide purchasers and afterward upheld and confirmed in the courts.

Congress had better appropriate any amount of money to compensate the claimants of these lands for the losses they have sustained through the mistaken or improvident procedure of its land officers, than to attempt to avoid such a debt of justice by taking the lands from one bona fide purchaser to give it to another bona fide pre-emptor or homestead claimant.

This strife will continue as long as Congress shall give it encouragement by efforts to remedy the troubles about these lands by transferring titles from one man to another. Such efforts are misleading because, they must result in disappointment. It is better, in the opinion of the undersigned, that Congress should at once assume the duty and burden of making just compensation for losses that have been sustained by those who bought these lands from the United States under the mistaken belief of the land officers that they were open to settlement and disposal as part of the public domain, and have lost the benefits of their purchases.

In the State of Iowa and its courts these matters in various forms have been considered. This land has been taxed and taxed and taxed and is taxable now, and all this land is taxable while all this litigation goes on as I suppose, unless Iowa suspends its taxing authority in regard to it. Nothing can come from this bill in point of law in my judgment, nothing good can come to the disputants, the claimants who get this footing. Iowa has its duty to its discontented inhabitants, and for the United States to deal out of its own means and rights with such ought not to be thought of.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I shall ask but a very few minutes to respond to the suggestions made by the Senator from New York; and first as to the joint resolution of 1861 and to what classes it applied.

Any Senator who will look at the history of and the debates on that resolution will discover that the Secretary of the Interior sent down to Congress the form of a bill which in terms was intended to grant whatever title the United States had in these 271,000 acres to the State of Iowa for the benefit of this improvement company. That bill was changed in both Houses of Congress so as to confine its terms to bona fide purchasers, and every man knows who will study that case that in the nature of things the navigation company could not be a bona fide purchaser. They took this title for whatever it was. The dispute about the title had existed since 1849 as to them. How could the company be a bona fide purchaser when they only took from the State of Iowa a disputed title, which was well understood and well known everywhere, not only in the State of Iowa but in the Departments of our Government.

Mr. GEORGE. Had they a title from Iowa?

Mr. ALLISON. A quitclaim from Iowa.

Mr. EVARTS. I read the deed.

Mr. ALLISON. I know the Senator read the deed, but it was a deed granting whatever title the State of Iowa had; and the governor of that State could make no title that was not authorized by the Iowa act of 1858, and when that act was passed it was understood everywhere that this was a dispute which had been settled adversely to the State of Iowa by several Secretaries of the Interior, beginning with Mr. Ewing in 1851. That is all I desire to say upon that point.

The Senator from New York says that the State of Iowa should deal with this question. I am quite willing that the people who claim this title from the State of Iowa should deal with the State of Iowa. The Congress of the United States has never dealt with this navigation company or with its grantees. Congress and the Departments have always dealt with the State of Iowa and with no other party. The Congress of the United States has never known the Des Moines Navigation Company or its grantees. We have dealt with the State of Iowa, and Congress most generously granted to the State of Iowa lands as indemnity for the lands lost by the decision of 1859, and let the men who had those lands set aside to them by an act of Congress as a special trust fund go and pursue that trust fund in the hands of the State of Iowa and its legitimate authorities.

Now, who are the people who are provided for in this bill? They are the people that the United States have dealt with. The State of Iowa has had no relation to a pre-emptor; the State of Iowa has had no relation to a homestead settler. These men have gone there under the laws of the United States, and the United States has taken from them through its officers their money for this land as pre-emptors and homestead settlers. That money is now in the Treasury of the United States, as I am told, to the extent of more than $70,000. Much of it has been there since 1855; more of it was put there in 1863, when the Secretary of the Interior opened these lands, and more of it again in 1867, when the Secretary of the Interior again opened these lands to settlement.

We have dealt with these people directly, and it is our duty so far as we can honestly and fairly to give this multitude of men in the State of Iowa an opportunity of settling in a single suit whether or not they are to have the lands which they have tilled, the homes in which they now live, or whether this corporation and its grantees shall have the lands. That is all there is of that matter. So whatever relation Iowa may sustain to this question, it sustains that relation to the party with whom it dealt, namely, the navigation company and its grantees, and we are in honor bound to treat with the people with whom we dealt, the homestead and pre-emption settlers. So whatever obligation rests upon Iowa rests upon it with reference to the people with whom it has contracted, and not with these homestead and pre-emption settlers.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to ask the Senator if the United States Government had not already done its duty by the resolution of 1861 and the act of 1862. It seems to have parted with all its title.

Mr. ALLISON. These lands were not involved in the legislation of 1861 or 1862, except so far as those acts affect bona fide purchasers. So far from these lands being involved, the United States granted expressly indemnity lands to cover the loss of these lands, and those indemnity lands were part of the trust fund for the State of Iowa to settle with the Des Moines Navigation Company and its grantees.

Mr. BUTLER. Did not the Government also grant land to the State of Iowa with which it settled with the innocent purchasers the Senator refers to—the pre-emptors and the homesteaders?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; the indemnity was especially to indemnify those whose lands had been improperly certified, and if they had said in express terms that we give this indemnity to indemnify the State of Iowa for lands that it certified to the Des Moines Navigation Company, it could not have made it more clear. It said, we certify these lands to the State of Iowa for the benefit of the Des Moines Navigation Company if on examination they have any rights, and made the State of Iowa a trustee for that purpose; and in the execution of that trust the State of Iowa distinctly stated through its Legislature that the Des Moines Navigation Company had already received largely beyond the amount they had expended in behalf of this improvement.

I did not rise to prolong the debate; I only wished to call attention to these two points.

Mr. EVARTS. In regard to this indemnity matter that arises under the act of 1861——

Mr. ALLISON. Under the act of 1862.

Mr. EVARTS. And all that has been considered by the Supreme Court of the United States, and the indemnity matters do not apply to us at all. The Des Moines company never had a right to any indemnity land. We never have asked for it; but Iowa got them all anyway, the lands and the indemnity lands; and what have we to do with them? Indemnity land is as good to us if it is the same value as any other. Iowa has got them all. It has been said that we had no right to indemnity land by the courts.

Mr. ALLISON. Where is that decision?

Mr. EVARTS. The indemnity arises under the act of 1856. That is the basis of it. The act of 1856 has nothing to do with us. The 1853 grant is to Iowa to build a railroad, not connected with us. Then the question was when the settlement came up whether this railroad company had a right to some of our land, and that we were to have indemnity lands, and it was settled that the railroad company under the law of 1856 had not any right to our lands, and we had not any rights in the indemnity lands.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, I ask the Senator from New York to give me his construction of this proviso which I will read from the act of 1862:

Provided, That if the said State—

This is granting lands now to this company—

Provided, That if the said State shall have sold and conveyed any portion of the lands lying within the limits of this grant, the title of which has proved invalid, any lands which shall be certified to said State in lieu thereof by virtue of the provisions of this act, shall inure to, and be held as a trust fund for the benefit of, the person or persons respectively whose titles shall have failed as aforesaid.

If in express terms that proviso had referred to the Des Moines Navigation Company it could not have been more explicit. Therefore these lands that were granted in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in 1859 were to be held by the State of Iowa in trust for the benefit of the company until that trust was satisfied. Now, we are bound to presume, and I know the fact to be, that in the judgment of the trustee, the State of Iowa, this fund was so used as to satisfy that trust, because instead of granting these lands to the navigation company, it granted them to a kindred corporation, the Keokuk and Fort Des Moines Railroad Company. That is all I wish to say.

Mr. EVARTS. The case considering this is that in 17 Wallace, pages 164 to 166.

Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire of the Senator from New York what question was made in that case; what was the point involved?

Mr. EVARTS. About this other company.

Mr. BUTLER. What was the question involved so far as these lands were concerned?

Mr. ALLISON. It was a contest between the railroad company and the navigation company.

Mr. EVARTS. Iowa had all the land. There was a quarrel as to which was to have which and which was to be indemnified. That is all there was about it.

The appellants insist if they are not the holder of any titles which have failed within the meaning of the act of July 12, 1862, they are nevertheless entitled to a portion of the indemnity lands certified to the State under the act, because they were certified upon the assumption that the river lands had been granted by the act of May 15, 1856.

Our grants were all made by the act of 1846. Then this is discussed at length and the determination is:

Although the ratification of the adjustment and the grant to the Valley Railroad would seem to be inconsistent, yet Congress, with full knowledge on the subject, on the 3d of March, 1871, confirmed the title of the State and its grantees. It is true the law by which this is done says it is in accordance with the adjustment and the act of the General Assembly of Iowa, but, as we have seen, this act not only ratified the adjustment—

That is nothing we have to do with—but also granted the lands to the Valley road.

* * * * * * *

If Congress had withheld its consent to what the State had done, neither the State nor the road would have taken anything by the action of the officers certifying the lands.

It is of the other railroad.

This was also known to Congress, because the decision in Wolcott's case was then before the country.

Congress, therefore, with full information that the State of Iowa was not entitled to these indemnity lands by reason of any previous legislation, thought proper, nevertheless, to give them to the State, knowing at the time that they were to be used in building a railroad along the line of the Des Moines River.

Now, one moment as to the deed. The Senator from Mississippi asked if it was a quitclaim, and my honorable friend the Senator from Iowa concurred in that suggestion. The title was in the United States, the whole of it. The State was to receive it as it was earned, and in 1858 the settlement was made, mutual releases were made, a certain amount of money was paid by the Des Moines company, and this land was turned over to them—this 266,000 acres turned over to them in completion of the contract. Then the State gave the company regular formal deeds, special deeds, covering particular parcels, as I understand, and gave also this general deed, which is a quitclaim.

The party of the first part does hereby sell, grant, bargain, and convey—

All the words that make a fee, and then describes it—and shall have the right to all of said land so herein granted to them as fully as the State of Iowa could have under or by virtue of said grant.

Very well; and in 1861 it is confirmed to us as the bona fide purchaser, so referred to in the debate and so held by court after court, as the very grantee that was to take the title, and it did not need any new title from Iowa to confer it, because the laws of Iowa when they made a grant without a good title and afterward Iowa came to get a good title, it was a good title inuring to the benefit of the grantee. That is the whole of that.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, I know how anxious the Senate is to get on with its business, and therefore shall consume but little time in submitting what I have to say concerning this measure.

There are a few points involved which I desire to get clearly before the minds of the members of the Senate because of their practical bearing upon the case; and I may state first that it is admitted that the Government of the United States asked these settlers to go upon these lands where they now reside. It did that in that due form of law found in executive orders and declarations, by which it was asserted that these lands were subject to homestead and pre-emption entry. No one disputes that. The Senator from New York will not dispute that. No officer or member or stockholder of the Des Moines Navigation Company will dispute that. Everybody admits it. In pursuance of that lawful invitation the men who now reside upon these lands and for whose protection this bill was proposed went there in good faith, many of them more than a quarter of a century ago. That they did go there in good faith is evidenced by what they have done since taking possession of those lands. There they have builded their houses and their barns; they have planted their orchards and cultivated their fields; they have reared their families with hope before them every day and hour that at the end of the controversy the homes thus made would belong to them. Every movement of these settlers has been in good faith, induced by the invitation of the Government, and it is now the duty of the Government to protect them as it may.

The Senator from New York will not pretend to claim that when the settlers went upon these lands one acre north of the Raccoon Fork was embraced within the grant for the improvement of the Des Moines River. He can not claim it for the reason that the decision of the Supreme Court on which he relies says to him and to all others that there was no grant north of the Raccoon Fork, and that decision, thus relating back to the time when the settlers entered upon the lands to make their homes, only confirms what I have said that they went there in obedience to the invitation of the Government and in pursuance of law.

Time went on and a contract was made with this navigation company for the completion of the improvement contemplated by the act of 1846. What was that contract? Its effect is stated in the report of the committee in these words:

On the 9th day of June, 1854, the State contracted with a corporation, known as the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, to complete the improvement, estimated to cost $1,300,000, and agreed to convey to the company all the land then or thereafter to be certified to Iowa for improvement purposes.

When the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, on the 10th day of November, 1856, declined to certify any more lands under the grant, the company—declined to proceed with the work, and dispute arose between the State and the company which, by joint resolution of the Iowa Legislature, approved March 22, 1858, was settled.

What had this company done up to that time, Mr. President? How much money had it expended toward the completion of that work? The precise amount is stated in the letter of the then governor of the State as being $322,644.04. That is the entire outlay of the Des Moines Navigation Company in the matter of constructing that improvement of the Des Moines River, and up to that time how much had they received? As my colleague stated yesterday, 53,000 acres of land south of the Raccoon Fork, estimated to be worth, as my colleague showed, not less than $10 per acre. So that for the amount of money expended by them, being $332,644.04, they received, without counting anything north of the Raccoon Fork, more than half a million dollars. That of itself was a very respectable speculation.

That settlement was had, and in pursuance of that the Senator from New York says that the governor of Iowa executed a deed. So he did, and what does that deed include? All of the lands which belonged to the State by virtue of the grant of 1846 for the improvement of the Des Moines River; nothing more, nothing less. That is the whole of it. That is the language of the deed in effect. If more should come north of the Raccoon Fork under that grant of 1846, then the company would get it in addition to the 53,000 acres they had received below the Fork; but did it come? The Senator from New York admits that it did not, for he says the court decided, and he quotes the decision, that the grant did not extend north of the Raccoon Fork. If it did not, please tell me how much land the company took by virtue of the deed executed by the governor of Iowa in 1858. The court says in that decision that it took nothing above the Raccoon Fork. Then so far as the effect of that deed is concerned it has no effective place in this case. The Senator from New York smiles.

How does it get effect? Oh, he says, by the joint resolution of 1861; that is, several years after this deed was made; not by any force of words did any interest in those lands go to the State of Iowa under the act of 1846, but a new grant, so to speak, was made in 1861. Can that relate back and deprive these settlers of their rights? If rights they had, of whatever character and to whatever extent, they were vested rights, and with such rights Congress can not interfere by statute. Those rights can only be determined by the judicial power of the Government. No joint resolution of Congress can say, and enforce the declaration, that the settler who went upon the public lands in pursuance of the laws in force at the time can be ousted by a subsequent act of Congress of the right which became vested in him by that act; and yet that is the case the Senator from New York presents here to-day.

Are we to say, having dealt directly through our public-land laws with these settlers, that we will not extend to them even the poor effort of a suit at law by the United States in its own courts to determine whether their rights are not so firmly vested that even judicial power can not interfere with them?

Mr. President, there are from one thousand to twelve hunded families living on these lands who will derive whatever benefit may be involved in the terms of this bill should it become a law, and they will have accorded to them the opportunity of one thing which at no stage of the proceedings in the case thus far has made its appearance there, and that is an assertion of the title of the United States in these lands. That is the material point in this case. In not one case the Senator has quoted, in not one case that has been decided, has the paramount title of the United States to these lands been asserted; nor was there a case in which it could be.

But after the joint resolution of 1861 had been passed it became a matter of consideration with this company whether by some means it could not derive benefits from that legislation of Congress and get an affirmance by the courts of some kind of right to itself in these lands.

What was the course pursued? A case was made up, plaintiff and defendant desiring the same result, a record made calculated to induce that result put in the courts, and of course it came out as both parties desired it should and intended it should. But that can not interfere with the rights of these honest settlers nor divest them of whatsoever interest they have in these lands. No cooked-up case of that kind can stand against the interests of these people if they can but have the opportunity accorded of the United States asserting in their behalf in the courts its paramount title.

Mr. President, there are some other features connected with this case involving the movements of this company. This disputation concerning these lands has clouded the title for a quarter of a century of all the lands embraced within the alleged grant, lying in one of the most beautiful sections of Iowa. Men who have gone upon those lands as settlers in the early days when that region was the advanced frontier post of civilization, having clustering around the lands upon which they settled and the homes which they there created all of those tender sentiments that tie men to home, were not willing, even if it required personal sacrifice, to have those ties all sundered and go out in the world again in search of other homes. So they said to this company, some of them, "In order to have peace we will buy in your title such as you have." So contracts were made with many of them by this company through an agent it had out in the State of Iowa. Rather than resist, rather than be troubled, in order to have some ascertainment of their cases, they entered into the contracts and agreed to pay, and many of them did pay, the contract price to the agent of this company. The agent was unfaithful. He did not account to his principals for the money thus received, and they repudiated his authority to receive the money, asserted that the contract was yet subsisting, sued upon the contract, and in some cases ousted these people from their homes.

This company come here to plead not only law but equity. Will it come here with the clean hands that must go in where equity obtains? It is not found in the record of that company in the State of Iowa, neither in the greed which it has manifested concerning the return for the comparatively small outlay that it made in connection with that improvement, nor in the manner with which it has treated with the people settled upon those lands. I have here, but I shall not take the time to read them, letters from many of these men, men who have been there, as I have said, more than a quarter of a century, who have looked forward to the time when their titles should come to them from the Government, and their homes would be assured to them. While they have waited they have gone on as industrious pioneers are wont to do, reclaiming the wilds and making them habitations for progress and civilization. They have waited. Some of them have conference yet with this company. Others now occupying the lands, but as they say, tenants by suffrance, have had hard lines dealt out to them by this innocent company.

I have one case here where a settler entered upon an 80-acre tract of land as a pre-emptor. In the course of time he purchased from this company 80 acres more. He gave them his contract secured upon the 160 acres, and what was the result? The company sued him for the balance. It was but a small amount comparatively; only $500, but he had consumed what little savings he had in buying in the 80 acres of land and in making the balance. Judgment was rendered; execution was issued. The first 80 acres were sold. The tract did not bring enough to pay the judgment. The second 80 acres were sold, and the home of the man was gone, both that part of the land upon which he entered as a pre-emptor and that which he bought from the company. Has this company been harshly dealt with? It would have been at least humane for it to have allowed this poor man to retain one of the 80-acre tracts, inasmuch as this preposterous claim was the occasion of the small sum realized for the sale of that land. And why? Because a disturbed title is not a marketable article at fair value and because of this disturbed title claimed by this company the man's possessions went from him and to day he is homeless and his family with him.

I might go on with scores of cases like this, but I will not consume the time of the Senate. I insist that the United States shall, by the enactment of this bill notwithstanding the President's objection thereto, make at least an honest endeavor to protect the men it invited upon these lands twenty-five years ago. I insist not only for them that this remedy shall be accorded, but for all, the company itself as well as its grantees. Therefore it is provided in the bill that in all cases where there are not conflicting claims the title shall be confirmed in the holders, whether they be the Des Moines Navigation Company, its grantees, or others, the purpose of the bill and the remedy it provides being to settle now within the reasonable time which may be necessary to devote to the proposed remedy the titles to the lands in that great section of Iowa which have been disturbed so long. This, as I said in the last Congress when discussing the question, resolves itself on that account into a public question, for the disturbance of title is a serious injury to public interests and affairs.

Mr. President, I do not care to consume more of the time of this body in a discussion of this measure, but am content to let Senators by their votes say whether this remedy which will give peace to that region of country, whatever the result of the judicial determination may be, shall not take its place upon the statute-books and let its movements go on to the assurance of that stability of title so much needed not only there but everywhere in order that the best conditions of society may obtain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, in the chair). The pending question is, "Shall the bill pass notwithstanding the objections of the President?" Under the Constitution this question must be determined by a yea-and-nay vote. Is the Senate ready for the question? The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House still further insisted upon its disagreement to the third, fourth, and sixth amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. M. TAYLOR, and Mr. BINGHAM managers at the conference on its part.

The message also announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 985) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer the United States barracks at Baton Rouge, La., to the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College at said place for educational purposes, and agreed to the same.

JOHN A. LOGAN,
P. B. PLUMB,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

EDW'D S. BRAGG,
EGBERT L. VIELE,
GEO. W. STEELE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PLUMB. Before the question is put I desire unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a brief statement of the differences which were adjusted in the conference committee; and I will state in a word, for the benefit of the Senate, that the bill as it passed the Senate appropriated $138,000 less than the bill as it came from the House of Representatives appropriated, and that in the conference the conferees agreed to an increase in various items amounting to something over $60,000, and diminutions in other items amounting to over $77,000. So the bill as it finally passes and becomes a law appropriates about $150,000 less than the bill as it passed the House originally.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6395) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7481) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. Is there some special reason for that?

Mr. HOAR and Mr. ALLISON conferred together.

Mr. ALLISON. I had hoped that the legislative appropriation bill could be passed through the Senate so that it could receive the signature of the President before the beginning of the next fiscal year, as unless this bill passes before the 1st day of July a joint resolution will be necessary covering all the expenditures embraced in the bill. But of course if there is an understanding that we are to have an executive session at this time, agreed to by both sides of the Chamber, I shall not interfere.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think I have a right to say that it has been agreed to. It has been agreed to by one gentleman on the other side and myself.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the Senator will allow us to go on.

Mr. HOAR. I will say to the Senator that I do not think I should want to discuss any arrangement which might be made as to the order of business. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. ALLISON. Now let us go on with the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Iowa to allow me to give a notice. If the Senate should finish the legislative bill this afternoon, as I understand the Senator hopes to be able to do though he is not sure, I shall move to go into executive session to-morrow as early as 2 o'clock.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope we shall finish this bill to-night. We ought to do so.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent for the convenience of the Senate that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations may be considered as the bill is read and that the committee amendments may be considered before other amendments are in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent of the Senate that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be acted upon as they are reached in the reading. There being no objection, that order is made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If a committee amendment relates to some one section or paragraph of the bill that needs some other little amendment, the Senate might be willing to finish that paragraph at the same time.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course that is allowed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be adjusted according to the circumstances, as is the custom.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 5, after the word "appropriated," to insert "in full compensation;" so as to read:

That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, for the objects hereinafter expressed, namely.

Mr. HAWLEY. The effect of that amendment, if I understand it correctly, is to render it possible to change all salaries fixed by statute in the course of this bill without any notice or knowledge whatever to the Senate in acting upon the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator desire that this particular amendment shall be passed over until we go through the bill? Is that the idea?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think it would be well to do so, and I should also like to have notice wherever salaries are seriously changed. I should like to know whether there is much of it done in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say that so far as I know there are but two or three changes from the law as it exists under the appropriation bill for the current fiscal year, and the exact language now proposed in this bill is the language of the bill for the fiscal year 1886. I do not think the Senator need be at all disturbed by the insertion of these words although of course in this bill there are some salaries that are below the statutory compensation provided years ago and there are a few salaries that are above the statutory compensation. Of course all salaries that are above the statutory compensation, I understand, will be subject to a point of order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are those which are above shown in the bill?

Mr. HAWLEY. How are we to know?

Mr. ALLISON. They are not shown. If any Senator desires, or if it is the desire of the Senate, I will endeavor to call attention to such statutory salaries as they occur.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish then for one to ask the chairman of the committee to call attention to every instance where the statutory salary is increased under this bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Or by any amendment to it.

Mr. ALLISON. That is rather a peculiar task in reference to the diminution of salaries, but I will endeavor to do it as near as I can.

Mr. MAXEY. I wish to say in regard to these words, "in full compensation," that the statute has fixed the salaries of the officers of the United States Government; and the effect of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill has been in many instances that the salary fixed by statute has not been appropriated. The Supreme Court in the case of Langston, minister to Hayti I believe, has decided that an appropriation bill simply appropriating a certain amount of salary without saying "in full compensation" does not change the statute.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We can not hear the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is too much noise in the Chamber.

Mr. MAXEY. I should like to be heard, for I think I am talking very good law.

I was observing that in the Langston case, recently decided by the Supreme Court, that court held that where the words "in full compensation" were not incorporated in the appropriation bill, but simply an allowance was made for salary different from the statutory rate, it did not change the statute, and that if the allowance were less in the appropriation bill than that fixed by the statute the officer would be entitled to the difference between the amount in the appropriation bill and the amount fixed by statute. But they go on to say—I am speaking from memory but I think I am quoting correctly—that where the words "in full compensation" are inserted in the appropriation bill, that is a repeal pro tanto of the statute.

We have a rule as I understand—but on the subject of rules I confess I am not authority—that we have no right to put original legislation on an appropriation bill. Now that clause "in full compensation" does come in and does repeal existing statutes. That is original legislation put on an appropriation bill, and I make that point of order on the proposed amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that, if the point of order is taken, the proposed amendment does change existing law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Suppose every salary is not exactly what the bill names?

Mr. INGALLS. It does not appear that that changes existing law. It may be that if the sums named vary from existing statutes, then it would change existing law; but that does not appear yet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair takes the statement made by the chairman of the committee as correct, that there are changes made in the existing law which this provision is made to cover.

Mr. ALLISON. I would not desire to have the Chair make his decision on a mere statement of my own, because I think it is subject to very grave debate whether or not this bill does change existing law. The statute of last year appropriating for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses had, in the words we propose to insert, "in full compensation," and at the end of the law it was provided:

That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

And it has been claimed elsewhere, if I may allude to what occurred elsewhere, that the effect of that repealing clause in the law of last year is to make the statutory compensation provided for in that bill the absolute compensation. So this bill has at the end of it the same words, repealing all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act. It is claimed elsewhere that the effect of that is to provide for the salaries and compensation of all officers embraced in the bill as the bill provides, notwithstanding that in the Revised Statutes or some other statute a different compensation is provided.

The Committee on Appropriations had in view the decision made in the Langston case, which was a case where there was no provision either at the end of the bill or in the beginning that the salary appropriated should be in full compensation. We thought in view of the decision of the court in that case that it was a wise thing to insert here in the beginning of this bill a provision that the salaries which we provide for should be the salaries for the current year, which would make it more certain and definite than the provision which we found in the bill as it came from the House.

That is all I have to say.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I wish to suggest that as this matter will cover a variety of topics as we go on, it be passed by until we have gone through with the various items, and then we shall all understand exactly how it applies, reserving the question of order so that it can be renewed, not being waived at all, and go on with the items in the bill.

Mr. MAXEY. If the Senator from Vermont will yield to me a moment, I wish to state one point. As I remember the statute it fixes the salaries of the Auditors of the Treasury at $4,000 per annum and this bill appropriates for each of the Auditors of the Treasury $3,600. Without the words "in full compensation" the Auditors unquestionably could go into court and recover the $400 difference. This clause is therefore a change of existing law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is perfectly clear that the Auditor would have a right to sue the United States and get his judgment and collect his pay on the case as stated; but whether that affects the point of order may be another question which I shall hold in reserve for consideration; and let us go on with the items, saving that until a later period.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas consent that the point of order be waived for the present?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the clause itself shall be passed over without being voted on, and reserved with its point of order until we go through with the items.

Mr. MAXEY. I have no objection with the understanding stated by the Senator from Vermont that this matter is to be settled and decided, because I am clear in my mind that if it is passed by and I should waive the point of order——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish that, because I think we ought to consider it carefully and dispose of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be held in reserve saving the point of order.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does not the ruling of the Chair that it is a change of existing statute stand?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not yet make a ruling, because some question has been raised whether or not there is any change of the existing law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Chair merely suggested the impression he then had.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is due to frankness to say that on reference to the rule it expressly provides that—

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

The Chair is inclined to the opinion, without making a decision that will bind him on further hearing, that this is general legislation which may change the law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Chair will hold that in reserve, because at this moment I am inclined to agree with the Chair, but I see that there are difficulties about the matter.

Mr. BECK. I want to make a suggestion and call attention to some matters.

I suppose if these words are stricken out there will be under this bill one hundred cases of difficulty, perhaps more. I hope Senators will watch the bill as it proceeds. There are four or five amendments I desire to offer, and I call attention to them now.

The law for the current year provides that the sums appropriated shall be "in full compensation for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, for the objects hereinafter expressed," and then provides in section 3—

That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

As to the Auditors—for those are the men in regard to whom I propose to offer an amendment, for they illustrate it as well as any others—the present bill provides that the First Auditor of the Treasury shall receive $3,600, the Second Auditor $3,600, the Third Auditor $3,600, the Fourth Auditor $3,600, the Fifth Auditor $3,600, and so on, and the Revised Statutes provide—

SEC. 276. There shall be connected with the Department of the Treasury six auditors of accounts, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be known as the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth auditors, respectively. Each auditor is entitled to a salary of $4,000 a year.

In the bill now presented the law of last year allowing them $3,600 a year each is followed; and the question is whether the Revised Statutes which fix the salary at $4,000 a year are still the law, or whether when the law for the current year said they should receive $3,600 in full compensation for their services, and "that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed," the Revised Statutes are still the law.

Senators may as well consider about that, as these and perhaps one hundred other cases will come up. I had proposed to amend this bill by making the salary of each Auditor, when the proper time comes, $4,000, but that is only a specimen of the cases.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. Has this matter passed from the Senate or not? If it is to be determined now I have no objection to debate, but if it is not to be determined now——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is open to debate without any limit. The Chair is not aware that he can trench on debate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to debate the bill, Mr. President.

Mr. HOAR. I renew the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the Senator from Vermont is in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The remarks of the Senator from Kentucky open really a new aspect of this question. The act of March 3, 1885, the last law of Congress upon the subject of legislative appropriations, &c., started in its beginning just as this does:

In full compensation for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, &c.

Then the third section, the very last section of the bill, on page 425 of the twenty-third volume of the Statutes, says:

That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

If in this act of 1885 which stated itself to make full compensation for every subject provided for there was a change of existing compensations, making them greater or making them less, then followed the third section, which said that every law existing at that time which made a different provision for compensation is repealed—that is what it says—and it is not repealed for that year, but it is a total repeal; it is gone; and therefore I should say at the present moment as a first impression—I only state it for consideration that it may be thought of when we come back to it—it is open to consideration whether the appropriation bill of March 3, 1885, does not fix by law the salary of every officer named in that bill. If it does, then of course it is the existing law as to those salaries; and the suggestion made by the Chair would have the same force and effect, but we should have to look, not to the Revised Statutes but to the act of 1885, for a guide of what the existing law is.

Mr. HALE. Before the Senator takes his seat, let me call his attention to this condition: The act of appropriation for the current year contains a provision declaring that the sums appropriated shall be in full compensation, and at the end of it is found the further provision that all acts inconsistent with that act are repealed; but that act only attempts to fix salaries for the year. That act only claims or seeks or pretends to fix salaries for the year. It does not claim to go further. It has no force at the end of the year. There is nothing in the appropriation bill that in terms or by inference could be construed as fixing the salary of any public officer beyond that year, no matter how much force you give to it as a repealing act.

Now if, as indicated and suggested as the present impression on the mind of the Senator from Vermont, the old fixed and fundamental statute is repealed, it has ceased then to exist, and there is no law about these salaries; there is no law after the year just expiring which limits and confines the scope of the appropriations, if the old statute is swept away, the statute which by the appropriation bill only exists for the year; and when the 1st day of July, 1886, comes there is no law left for salaries.

Mr. HOAR. Is there not a change of existing law?

Mr. HALE. I am not discussing the point of order. I am discussing the point as to where we should find ourselves if we adopted the conclusions, which I am bound to say at first suggested themselves to my mind as they do to the Senator from Vermont—where we should find ourselves if we held that the old fundamental statute about salaries is repealed. We have then got no law.

That throws light upon the point of order as to the question of new legislation. If there is no legislation, if there is nothing to conflict with it, an appropriation bill may go on and provide appropriations for the year of the sum that the Government will pay for a particular service, and may declare that that shall be in full; but if there is a law in operation that it conflicts with, it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to suggest to my friend from Maine and to the Senate that I did not intend to express any final opinion about it, but only to suggest a question as the matter was reserved for the consideration of Senators and so that they might examine and reflect about it and be ready to act when the matter came up. There is great force in what the Senator from Maine says, and I did not mean to say that I had come to a definite conclusion.

Mr. HALE. I did not so understand the Senator. I am only saying what now falls from my lips in the same way that the Senator uttered his remarks as a subject to be thought about. It is a subject beset with difficulties. It is a pretty difficult thing to tell, if we embark upon this consideration, where we shall come out with reference to the salaries. I make the suggestion about the situation that we may find ourselves in that Senators may let their minds rest upon it before it comes up finally for action.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, at first blush it would seem that there would be much in the point suggested by the Senator from Vermont, but I do not think it will bear analysis.

The act of March 3, 1885, opens out with a declaration that there shall be appropriated the following sums for the fiscal year. That does not pretend to change existing laws, but simply to make an appropriation of a given amount of money for that fiscal year. Very well. Now you come down to the section which was referred to by the Senator from Vermont, and what was that? "All acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed." What inconsistency? The act of the 3d of March, 1885, simply makes an appropriation for that year, and any amount which is inconsistent with the amount fixed for that year is repealed. That is all. It does not pretend to repeal the existing laws and leave us, as the Senator from Maine very well observed, without any law on the statute-book whatever, but practically it was only holding in abeyance or suspending during the next fiscal year ensuing March 3, 1885, any act inconsistent with the act making appropriations. That is all there is in that, and there can not be anything other in it than just that.

It is a rule of law as old as the horn-books that repeals by implication are never looked upon with favor. Here is a statute which has been in existence for lo these many years, placed upon the Revised Statutes, a part and parcel of our existing law; and if the construction should be placed upon the third section of the act of March 3, 1885, that it swept out of existence all antecedent laws fixing salaries inconsistent with that particular provision for a particular year, you will leave the country without any law fixing any salary whatever. It is practically a reductio ad absurdum. Never is a repeal by implication received with favor. The bill does not pretend to take up the various acts fixing salaries as specified in the Revised Statutes and repeal them, but it applies simply to acts which are inconsistent with that particular act for a particular time and for one particular year.

Mr. BECK. I have said all I care to say. I have called attention to the difficulties which Senators will see all around them in regard to these salaries in view of those provisions, and they will find when they come to look for the existing law that even the salaries fixed in the Revised Statutes are simply a compilation of what was found to be the amount that was then in the appropriation acts for the year before the statutes were compiled, and they occupy no higher relation upon the statute-book than any other appropriation acts, simply being the amount that happened to be provided for the year previous to the time the revision of the statutes was made. So it has been year after year ever since. Statutes prior to the act of 1885, the one of 1883, contained the same provision, that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with or in conflict are hereby repealed. You will make it almost impossible for any gentleman to ascertain, in many cases, what is the salary fixed by law, unless he follows previous appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. These words, "in full compensation," have been in every appropriation bill of this character since 1877. The Revised Statutes gathered together the compensation at that time, but the Treasury Department, for example, was entirely reorganized after the Revised Statutes, and a whole line of salaries was fixed beyond what is now appropriated for in this bill and what has been appropriated for since 1876.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was that done on an appropriation bill or by a separate bill?

Mr. ALLISON. It was in a separate and distinct bill known as the Kellogg bill, which Senators will remember; a House bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a standing law then, unless repealed.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a standing law unless affected by the statutes. So I submit to the Senators it would be rather confusing if we are to look among the numerous statutes to find out what the statutory compensation is and if those persons whose salaries have been reduced by the bill shall have an opportunity of going into the courts and recovering the additional amount.

Mr. INGALLS. Under the interpretation which has been placed on these words let me ask a question. The salary of the President of the United States is now fixed by law at $50,000 a year. Suppose that in this bill it was provided that for the salary of the President of the United States there should be but $25,000 appropriated, do I understand the Senator to say that if the words "in full compensation" are retained as provided by the committee in this bill the result would be to repeal the $50,000 statute and fix the salary of the President of the United States at $25,000?

Mr. EDMUNDS. So it would, but it would be unconstitutional.

Mr. BECK. The salary of the President can not be reduced during his term.

Mr. ALLISON. That would not be the effect of it.

Mr. INGALLS. Take a case where the Constitution would not come in.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the purport of the Senator's question and I will answer it. It is the intention of the bill to make the salaries herein provided, whatever they are or may be when the bill becomes a law, the statutory salaries for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1887, notwithstanding what may have been the salary prior to that time.

Mr. INGALLS. So if there is a reduction of the existing salary of any officer and the words "in full compensation" are retained, that officer will not have the right to go into the Court of Claims and sue the United States for the deficit——

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is it.

Mr. INGALLS. He will not have a right to sue the United States for the difference between the amount in this bill and the amount fixed by law?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is it.

Mr. INGALLS. But I understood the Senator to say that these same words had been included in every appropriation bill since 1877.

Mr. ALLISON. In every legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. INGALLS. My recollection is that there have been repeated instances where the officers whose salaries have been diminished in those bills have gone to the Court of Claims and asked for a judgment for the amount to which they were entitled, as they claimed, being the difference between the statutory salary and that provided for in the appropriation act.

Mr. ALLISON. That is true; and the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court have frequently decided that where the words "in full compensation" were inserted they were controlling and the parties could not recover. Under the consular and diplomatic bill what is known as the Langston case arose. We reduced the statutory compensation from $7,500 to $5,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Failed to appropriate the full amount.

Mr. ALLISON. We failed to appropriate what was the statutory salary as fixed in 1871, and the Supreme Court finally decided that, inasmuch as we did not have the words "in full compensation" inserted, Langston was entitled to recover.

Mr. MAXEY. I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if the Supreme Court in that same case did not say that the words "in full compensation" were in full compensation for that year; but did they pretend to say that they repealed the antecedent act?

Mr. ALLISON. There is great force in what the Senator from Texas says in regard to the effect of this bill only lasting for the year, but the Supreme Court has not passed upon that question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The words "in full compensation" are one thing and the repealing section is quite another thing.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish to ask another question, and that is whether the amounts in the bill as it came from the House appropriating for the salaries of these officers are in accordance with existing law. Does the bill provide for the payment of salaries to these different officers in accordance with existing law?

Mr. ALLISON. In some cases so; in many cases not so.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the bill show where there has been a departure?

Mr. ALLISON. No; the bill does not show it.

Mr. INGALLS. The bill ought to show it. Before we are called upon to vote in these words we ought to see whether there is any conformity between this bill and the existing law, or whether it is going to precipitate ten thousand lawsuits on the Government to recover deficiencies in appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course that depends upon what the existing law is. The Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Kentucky have expressed the opinion, great lawyers both of them, that this repealing clause changes and modifies all prior law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not expressed that opinion. I have merely called it to the attention of the Senate for consideration as a serious question.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand.

Mr. INGALLS. Turning to page 85, lines 2091 and 2092, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether the Commissioner of Pensions under existing law is entitled to $4,000 or to $5,000?

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator asks me whether the statute organizing the Pension Office, separate and distinct from appropriation bills, allows the Commissioner of Pensions $4,000 or $5,000, I will answer that the statutory compensation aside from these annual appropriation bills allows the Commissioner of Pensions only $4,000, but the appropriation bills for the last four or five years have appropriated $5,000.

Mr. INGALLS. With these same words in?

Mr. ALLISON. With these same words in.

Mr. INGALLS. The words "in full compensation?"

Mr. ALLISON. The words "in full compensation;" and so it is with a number of other officers. In some cases the statutory compensation is larger than is provided for in this bill. That is so in quite a number of cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill at line 9.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the legislative appropriations, under the head of "Senate," in line 14, to increase the total appropriation "for compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the Senate" from $285,141.92 to $297,899.92.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph:

Office of the Vice-President: For secretary to the Vice-President, $2,102.40; for messenger, to be appointed by the Vice-President, $1,440; telegraph operator, $1,200; in all, $4,742.40.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether there is any existing law now for the condition of things which makes the description of this officer as the Vice-President a proper one, and whether there might not be a serious question as to the official authority of the messenger to be appointed under this proposed statute?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It clearly ought to read "President of the Senate," because that would include both the Vice-President and the President pro tempore.

Mr. HOAR. I should like, then, to suggest an amendment at this point, if there is no objection, to substitute the words "President of the Senate" in both places where they occur.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to such an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. With all deference to the Senator from Massachusetts, while I have no objection to the amendment, I should say that the President pro tempore of the Senate was acting in the office of the Vice-President, and that therefore the language of the bill would be sufficient.

Mr. HOAR. The question suggested itself to me suddenly and I put my suggestion in the form of an interrogatory. But as I at present understand it, the office of Vice-President is created by the Conntitution of the United States, and he is to succeed to the Presidency, or to discharge the functions of the Presidential office, according to different theories of the Constitution, in case of the President's death or resignation or disqualification. One of his functions under the Constitution is that he is to be President of the Senate, and then it is provided that there may be a President of the Senate elected by the Senate, who officiates in the absence of the Vice-President.

That latter officer was very often designated as Vice-President, because under the power conferred upon Congress until recently he, by statute, succeeded to the Presidency, there being no Vice-President; so that he had that possible succession as well as the other qualities of Vice-President. But since the late law the President pro tempore of the Senate is never Vice-President and has nothing whatever to do with the Vice-Presidency. The office of President of the Senate when a Vice-President is living is exercised by him and is now exercised by a Senator elected for that purpose. Therefore it seems to me questionable whether a statute which authorized the appointment of an officer (under the power of each House of Congress to provide for its own officers) by the Vice-President would authorize the President pro tempore of the Senate to appoint the officer. Certainly the words "President of the Senate" properly describe that officer. There can be no doubt about that.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. I hope we shall amend it without further debate, so as to read:

Secretary to the President of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. Change the title of the paragraph also.

Mr. ALLISON. "Office of the President of the Senate."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would venture to suggest, as a mere matter of form, to avoid the ambiguity, and make it unnecessary to change the law hereafter, the insertion of the words:

For Secretary to the Vice-President, or in case of the death or inability of the Vice-President, the President of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I accept the modification suggested by the presiding officer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clause will be so modified.

Mr. ALLISON. That will cover any case that may arise. Then on line 20 the second clause should read, "to be appointed by the President of the Senate," because that will include both the former designations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will also be made.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 48.

Mr. PLUMB. I observe in lines 14, 15, and 16 that the appropriation for compensation of officers, &c., of the Senate has been increased from $285,141.92 to $297,899.92. I should be glad to have the chairman of the committee state wherein that increase consists.

Mr. ALLISON. The chief increase, in fact the whole increase, relates to clerks to Senators. The House of Representatives made no provision for clerks of Senators. We have reduced considerably, quite largely indeed, the House appropriations for officers of the Senate. Our changes there reduced the appropriations, but the increase comes from the insertion of the provision allowing clerks to Senators.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask is there any case where any number of employés or their compensation has been decreased?

Mr. ALLISON. I did not say the compensation had been decreased. The numbers have been decreased.

Mr. PLATT. There has been a decrease in compensation on the top of page 5, as I understand.

Mr. ALLISON. Only one decrease of compensation, I think, is provided for. There is to be found in line 124 an item of eight skilled laborers instead of ten; line 125, twelve laborers instead of fourteen; in lines 84, 85, 86, 87, and 88, two messengers instead of three in each case; in line 109, twenty-five messengers instead of twenty-seven; and so on, as the Senator can see by looking at the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to say, not because I think it will have any effect but in the discharge of what I consider a duty, that I think the force of the Senate is much larger than it ought to be, and is much more largely paid than it ought to be. This is a subject which is a somewhat delicate one, and one which we approach with a good deal of diffidence, from the fact that the persons who get this enormous pay are those persons who serve us from day to day in a most satisfactory way and to whom we have been in the habit of tossing fifty or sixty thousand dollars as a present out of the Treasury at the end of every session heretofore. I hope we shall be virtuous enough not to do that at least this session; but considering the fact that the average service rendered by the employés of the Senate does not exceed six months in the year, it is perfectly safe to say that the salaries paid are 50 per cent. higher than in any other department of the Government, and they are at least that much higher than are paid for similar services in private callings, and that the number is largely in excess of any possible necessity for the service.

When I have said that about the Senate, in order to be as impartial as possible I will add that the other House is similarly situated, and I desire to call attention to just two items as illustrating the extravagant character of these provisions.

There are seventy-six Senators, who get their mails of course through the means of distribution provided at the Capitol. It costs over $12,000 a year to do that service under this bill. A country postmaster would do that for about $700 I think, except the distribution so far as the messengers are concerned; of course that is a different thing; but so far as the inside service is concerned a country postmaster would be paid only $700 for all the service rendered.

When we come to the House, I find that that service in the House costs $21,220. It is true the service is rendered for a larger number of persons, but that service does not require a proportionately large number of persons to do the work.

I am not saying this with the slightest expectation that anybody will rise to move or that even myself will move an amendment—I have tried it before with no consequences—to cut down the salary of a single person or to cut off a single employé of either House, but simply to call attention to that which I regard as one of the grossest abuses that exist to-day in the public service, in which the Senate and House are equally guilty of what I regard as a grossly improper expenditure of public money and in a wholly unnecessary way without the shadow of a justification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning in line 48.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the "office of Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate," in line 84, after the word "dollars," to strike out "three messengers acting as assistant doorkeepers, $1,800 each," and insert "one messenger acting as assistant doorkeeper, $1,800; one messenger acting as assistant doorkeeper, $1,600."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 97, after the words "document-room," to insert "(Amzi Smith);" so as to read:

Superintendent of the document-room (Amzi Smith), $2,592.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 109, before the word "messengers," to strike out "twenty-seven" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read:

Twenty-five messengers, at $1,440 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 117, to strike out "one fireman, $1,080."

Eight skilled laborers, at $1,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 125, before the word "laborers," to strike out "fourteen" and insert "twelve;" so as to read:

Twelve laborers, at $720 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 126, after the word "each," to strike out—

Two janitors, at $900 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to reduce the total amount of the appropriations for "office of Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper" from $141,910.12 to $130,710.12.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 134, before the word "clerks," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty-six," and after the word "thousand," at the end of line 135, to strike out "one hundred and fifty" and insert "eight hundred and seventy-six;" so as to make the clause read:

For twenty-six clerks to committees, at $6 per day during the session, $18,876.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 137, to insert:

For clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, at $6 per day during the session, $23,232.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations "for contingent expenses of the Senate," in line 142, after the word "including," to strike out "six" and insert "three;" and in line 144, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twelve;" so as to read:

For stationery and newspapers, including $3,000 for stationery for committees and officers of the Senate, $12,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 144, to insert:

For postage-stamps for the office of the Secretary of the Senate, $100; for the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, $100; in all, $200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 157, to reduce the appropriations "for furniture and repairs of furniture" from $10,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 158, before the word "dollars," I move to strike out "seven" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

For packing-boxes, $870.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 159, to increase the appropriations "for miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor," from $10,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 165, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

And for expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers to committees, at such rate as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding $1.50 per printed page, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 165, to reduce the total amount of the appropriations "for contingent expenses of the Senate" from $47,770 to $37,770.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The attention of the Senator from Iowa is called to the fact that the aggregate must be changed in consequence of the amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the Secretary do it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary would not feel at liberty to do that without an order to that effect.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the aggregate be changed to correspond to the changes in the text.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "House of Representatives," in the clause making appropriations for "office of the Clerk," in line 206, after the words "journal clerk," to insert "(H. H. Smith)"—

For Chief Clerk, journal clerk, tally clerk, and two reading clerks, at $3,000 each, and for the journal clerk (H. H. Smith) for preparing Digest of the Rules, $1,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. After the word "doorkeeper," in line 287, the committee move to insert "George A. Bacon," in parenthesis, "to be employed in the document-room." That is an amendment sent over to us by the House Committee on Appropriations, who ask that it be inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 287, after the word "doorkeeper," it is proposed to insert "(George A. Bacon) to be employed in the document-room;" so as to read:

Assistant doorkeeper (George A. Bacon) to be employed in the document-room, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the clause making appropriations for "office of Doorkeeper," in line 313, after the word "employé," to insert "(John T. Chancey);" and in line 315, after the word "messenger," to insert "(C. W. Coombs);" so as to read: "For one employé (John T. Chancey), $1,500; one Department messenger (C. W. Coombs), $2,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 332.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 325, at the beginning of the line, I move to insert in parenthesis "A. H. Pickens and H. T. Lyle;" so as to read:

Two chief pages (A. H. Pickens and H. T. Lyle), at $900 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 349, after the words "occur in," to strike out "the foregoing" and insert "this act;" so as to make the clause read:

And wherever the words "during the session" occur in this act they shall be construed to mean four months, or one hundred and twenty-one days.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "public printing," after the word "thousand," at the end of line 373, to insert "five hundred;" so as to read:

For compensation of Public Printer, $4,500.

Mr. ALLISON. I feel bound, in view of the suggestions made to me, to state that the old statutory compensation of the Public Printer was $4,000, but it has been $4,500 for some years in the appropriation bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 376, after the word "all," to increase the total appropriation for the public printing from $14,800 to $15,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Library of Congress," in line 391, to increase the appropriation for compensation of two assistant librarians from $480 to $600 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 393, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for compensation of the Librarian and his assistants from $38,320 to $38,560.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 396, after the word "thousand," to insert "five hundred;" in line 402, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one" and insert "two;" and in line 404, after the word "all," to strike out "nine thousand" and insert "ten thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For purchase of books for the Library, $3,000; for purchase of law-books for the Library, $1,500; for the purchase, by the Librarian of Congress, of new books of reference for the Supreme Court, to be a part of the Library of Congress, and purchased under the direction of the Chief-Justice, $1,500; for expenses of exchanging public documents for the publications of foreign governments, $2,000; for purchase of files of periodicals and newspapers, $2,500; in all, $10,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to lines 394 and 395, the extravagance of the sum appropriated to this great national Library for the purchase of new books. It rises to the dignity of $3,000, which is frequently spent in small villages in this country for the increase of a library, and it is $2,000 less than was appropriated last year. If he has no objection I should like to raise that to the sum appropriated last year at least.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Amendments are not now in order.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg pardon. The Chair is quite right.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator can go back to that later. We have agreed that the amendments proposed by the committee shall be first considered.

Mr. HAWLEY. I know.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be moved now to save time.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Committee on the Library are prepared to add $2,000——

Mr. HAWLEY. If no objection is raised, I move to restore that item to $5,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves in line 394, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "five;" so as to read:

For purchase of books for the Library, $5,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say in justification of the Committee on Appropriations that we have been informed that it is quite difficult to find storage places for books, and we thought we would allow the $3,000 suggested by the House to stand for this year until we could build a new library; but the Senator speaks more advisedly on that subject and I do not resist the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not speak more advisedly than the committee on the subject; as far as advice is concerned they have had more than I have; but I presume to say that I think I know better than the committee seem to do by their $3,000 for this item. I think $3,000 will not answer for the great national Library, will not begin to answer its desires and needs in purchasing new books. It increases the Library very largely by its copyrights to be sure, but there are a vast number of new books that ought to be added there in order to keep up with the current literature.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not resist the amendment. The Librarian was before the committee, and he stated, although it was rather a scant allowance, he thought he could get along with it. I do not object to the increase.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. Then the aggregate in line 404 should be changed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be changed to correspond with the increase in the item.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the end of line 414, after the word "thousand," to insert "five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Librarian to continue the preparation of the historical manuscripts in the Library known as Force's American Archives, for publication at the Government Printing Office, under direction of the Joint Library Committee, as provided by act of March 3, 1885, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of the clause, appropriating for the Civil Service Commission, ending in line 457, as follows:

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

For three commissioners, at $3,500 each; one chief examiner, $3,000; one secretary, $2,000; one clerk of class 4, who shall be a stenographer, $1,800; one clerk of class 2; one clerk of class 1; one messenger, $840; and one laborer; in all, $21,400.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not seek to open any discussion concerning the Civil Service Commission, an old and well-worn subject, but simply to suggest that so long as the commission exists, if we have any confidence whatever in it, it should have the assistance that seems to be absolutely necessary to its work. I propose to give that commission three additional clerks in that paragraph.

Mr. ALLISON. As that is likely to lead to some debate, I ask the Senator to wait until we get through with the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations. He can recur to this paragraph then.

The PRESDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the Civil Service Commission, after the word "expenses," in line 458, to insert "including those of examiners acting under the direction of the commission;" so as to make the clause read:

For necessary traveling expenses, including those of examiners acting under the direction of the commission, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I spoke out of order inadvertently, having in mind that I had something to propose in this paragraph that was in order. I am justified by the estimates submitted by the Treasury Department in moving to strike out "three," in line 460, and inserting "four."

The communications sent by the Civil Service Commission to the Committee on Appropriations, supporting the recommendations of the Treasury Department, say:

TRAVELING EXPENSES.

The current appropriation for traveling expenses is $3,500. An increase of $1,000 is desired, the present appropriation not being sufficient to enable the commission to exercise a proper supervision of the local examining boards and to hold examinations in the various States and Territories as often as the law and the needs of the service require.

Necessary traveling expenses, including those of examiners acting under the direction of the commission:

Present	$3,500
Desired	4,500

It seems that the House—if I may say as much about it as that—omitted the expression "including those of examiners acting under the direction of the commission," of which the Commissioners say:

The appropriation for traveling expenses of examiners should be increased $1,000. The House, by confining the appropriation to the three Commissioners and the chief examiner, makes the examinations required by law in all the States and Territories an impossibility. The three Commissioners and the chief examiner have office duties which preclude their attendance at all examinations. No more effective mode of defeating the objects of the commission could be devised. Examinations upon special subjects are frequently required in several States at the same time, and expert examiners are necessary and could not be supplied unless this restriction be removed.

The committee has wisely removed the restriction by the words in italics. The commission declare themselves unable to execute the duties of their office fairly and justly and fully unless the allowance be somewhat increased. In accordance with the estimates—which I take it to be in order—I move to strike out "three" and insert "four."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves to amend by striking out "three" and inserting "four."

Mr. ALLISON. While I concur in the views of the Senator from Connecticut and agree with what he says, I suggest that he make the amount $4,000 instead of $4,500. I think the commission can get on with that, and I think the committee will not object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 460, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

For necessary traveling expenses, including those of examiners acting under the direction of the commission, $4,500.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out "five hundred."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves to amend the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is not worth while to prolong the controversy. I followed the original estimate of the Commissioners. I will make no objection if the Senator desires to split the difference.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it go. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 463, after the word "ice," to strike out "car-tickets;" so as to make the clause read:

For furniture and repairs of furniture, file-cases and file-boxes, books, typewriters, stationery, printing, advertising, telegraphing, telephone service, typewriting, ice, and other absolutely necessary expenses, including heating, lighting, and altering rooms, and care of same, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to propose a similar amendment to that paragraph, in line 465, by striking out "three" and inserting "four," so as to make the amount $4,000. In this again I follow the formal estimates submitted by the Department. The commission say:

An increase of $1,000 is also desired in the appropriation for contingent expenses.

The present appropriation of $3,000 is barely adequate under existing conditions, and will be insufficient, if the commission is obliged to move and settle in new quarters, as now seems probable.

They have had notice to quit the Agricultural Department. An attempt was made to hire quarters elsewhere, which they shall be obliged to abandon probably, for the House has failed to appropriate the $2,400 asked, and another appropriation bill contemplates the possibility of fitting up rooms in the court-house for $11,000; and in the mean time the commission is quite uncertain as to where it will live, but it will be undoubtedly required to move, at some time during the year and declares that an additional thousand dollars ought to be given for contingent expenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. ALLISON. This amendment is not in order, I suggest. I will say in reference to this provision that the committee believe that $3,000, with the sum which is to be appropriated in the sundry civil bill, will provide for these necessary expenses during the current year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained if insisted on.

Mr. ALLISON. I will suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that he withdraw the amendment, for the present at least.

Mr. HAWLEY. Very well, I will do so.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "Department of State," in line 476, to increase the number of clerks of class 3, provided for, from "four" to "five."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the chairman of the committee state whether this amendment in line 476 provides for an increase of the force in the State Department. I make no commentary upon it; I only wish to have the record show whether the service is being increased or diminished.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 476 we add one clerk of class 4, which is an increase in the force; and it is less than the Secretary of State asked the committee to insert. He desired that we should give him a considerable advance beyond what is provided for in this bill, as will appear from his letter, which will be found in the report of the committee, Report No. 1387.

Mr. INGALLS. And this recommendation of the Secretary of State was communicated to the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives?

Mr. ALLISON. I can not say that this particular communication was sent to the House committee or to the House of Representatives, but these items are all inserted in the regular Book of Estimates, which of course must go to the House.

Mr. INGALLS. That is to say, in the annual estimates of appropriations sent up from the Secretary of State's office there was a request for further clerical assistance?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. And that of course went to the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, which is composed of a majority of the political friends of the Secretary of State, and that body, which was elected on the basis of reform and economy in the administration, saw fit not to heed the application of their political friend the Secretary of State for additional clerk-hire. They passed upon it, having jurisdiction and authority, being primarily responsible as the authors of this bill. If the committee of the House of Representatives which originated the bill had this information in their possession and heard the Secretary of State upon the subject and saw fit to leave the number of clerks as the bill came to us from the House, I do not understand upon what theory of policy or upon what theory of political morality a committee composed of a majority of the political adversaries of that official and representing a body politically constituted different from the House of Representatives should increase the number of clerks that the committee of the House thought was sufficient. And if we are to go to the country on the allegation of reform in the civil service and economy in the administration of Government, I should hope that a Republican Committee on Appropriations of the Senate would pause before they increased the clerical force in these various Departments when the House of Representatives had refused to do it.

I trust that if the House committee, as the Senator from Iowa informs us, had full possession of the demands of the Secretary of State, and saw fit to leave him with four clerks instead of five of this class, after all the battering we have had in the country, after we have been punished with stripes here for years upon the ground of extravagance, we at least shall not put this whip in the hands of our adversaries to say that they left the clerical force of this Department officered by their political friends, and then that the Republican Senate refused to allow them to carry out their professions of economy, refused to allow them to be frugal in the administration of the public service, but put it up, elevated it, increased the clerical force and the expenditures.

If the Secretary of State needs additional clerical force I am willing to give it to him, but I want the committee of the House of Representatives that originates this bill, and that is composed of a majority of the political friends and associates of this officer, to say so, and not after they have passed this bill in its curtailed form to come in here and say that the Republican Senate increased it and refused to co-operate with the Democratic committee of the House in their efforts to give us an economical and frugal administration of this Department.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations did pause upon this item and consider it with some care. They did not, however, perhaps consider as they should have done that the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate has a majority of Republicans, while the Committee on Appropriations of the House has a majority of Democrats.

In these appropriation bills the committee have endeavored as far as possible to inquire into the actual needs of the public service without respect or regard to what particular persons held the offices or to what particular party they belonged. The Secretary of State came before us in person and made a number of requests, and then retired from the committee-room as we requested him and placed in writing these requests in order that we might lay them before the Senate and his reasons therefor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is found on page 10 of the committee's report.

Mr. ALLISON. And that is found on page 10 of the committee's report, and I shall ask that that report be inserted in the RECORD, and I desire to call attention to it.

In the first place the Secretary of State asked us to increase the compensation of a number of the employés now there, and gave us some very good reasons, stating that these were efficient and careful persons and deserved more compensation than they were receiving by the current law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Were they the same persons who were there under former administrations?

Mr. ALLISON. Most of them the same persons. I believe the Secretary of State stated to us that most of his clerical force now employed there was the clerical force that has been in the employ of the Department for some years.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And he thought they had been underpaid in former times?

Mr. ALLISON. He thought they had been underpaid in former times and that their pay should be increased. He stated to us also that the indexing in the State Department was behind owing to the fact that there had been hitherto an insufficient clerical force. He stated that when he came into the Department of State he found an insufficient clerical force for the current work, and he asked us to give him two index clerks at a compensation of $1,800 a year each, in order that the work might be brought up, because in that way he said he could more economically and efficiently carry on the work of the Department. Now instead of giving him these two clerks that he asked for of class 4 for indexing, we only gave him one, although I think he made out a very good case before the committee for two index clerks.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is an entirely new thing?

Mr. ALLISON. An entirely new thing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How about the item on page 11 of the report:

Two clerks to assist in the compilation and publication of the monthly consular reports, at $1,600 each, $3,200.

Mr. ALLISON. The Secretary personally, as he does here in detail, stated that that was a very important matter. I stated that the committee agreed to give him one clerk instead of two.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How did they get on before with the consular reports without these clerks?

Mr. HALE. They got on with less force.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know precisely. I take it for granted that the clerks have been working extra hours, or perhaps the consular reports are more difficult to arrange and compile and edit now than formerly. I do not know precisely what the reasons were that operated upon the mind of the Secretary of State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no change in the form of the consular reports.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the chairman did not the substance of what the Secretary said in this and another case amount to this, that he found that he had not enough clerical force to do the work of the Department?

Mr. ALLISON. He stated that distinctly.

Mr. HALE. That was the fundamental ground, not that there was new work, but that he has insufficient force.

Mr. ALLISON. That was the statement. I will read the statement:

The publication of the monthly consular reports was begun, under authority of statute, in 1880. The utility of the undertaking was soon evident. Additional appropriations have from time to time permitted the development of the work, until now, with a greatly increased circulation, the publication reaches a very large circle of interested persons at home and abroad. Besides the regular monthly issues, special numbers are issued from time to time, giving the reports of the consuls on the particular subjects and industries concerning which the Department calls for information in response to the public demand.

Much labor of a peculiarly responsible character is thus entailed on the Bureau of Statistics, which has these publications in charge. Its working force now consists of one chief of bureau, an assistant at $1,800; one clerk at $1,600, and three copyists.

All the labor of compilation, editing, revising, proof correcting, and distribution falls on the chief and his two assistants, who are often obliged to work far beyond the usual departmental hours to accomplish their ordinary task. Thus overburdened, it is quite impossible for the bureau to respond to even the most simple demands upon it for statistical information without neglecting the work to which Congress and the public attach so much importance; and so the supplementary duty of the Bureau of Statistics has superseded the indispensable duty for which it was established.

Two clerks of the third, or $1,600, grade are asked for. It is thought that for this salary men can be obtained possessing the necessary qualifications, which are quickness and accuracy as calculators, knowledge of one or more tongues, editorial ability, facility of composition, expression, and condensation, and the typographical knowledge necessary to accurate proof-reading.

In this way not only can more useful extension be given to the work of collecting and distributing the monthly reports, but the statistical function of the bureau, which is really its most indispensable feature, can be set on a proper footing and receive the attention which it is impossible to give it now, even with greatly increased hours of labor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The point of that is, clearly and rightfully if he is correct, that the former Republican and extravagant administrations had been overeconomical; that they had not got Congress to give them force enough without overwork to do the business that ought to be done, and the reform of this administration is that we are to have more force and less hours.

Mr. BECK. I should be glad, while this is going on, to inquire how many men have been changed in the State Department since the present Secretary took that place. If there has been any change, I have not heard of it. I think Mr. Hunter, one of the men there, has been a supernumerary for years. He has done so much good service that they do not like to let him go and put another man in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the Secretary of State has fulfilled the wishes of the President, as stated in his proclamations and letters, more fully than the head of any other Department. The point I was calling attention to was not——

Mr. BECK. Does the Senator from Vermont know of a single change or of a single man being removed in that Department?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, I do not, nor in any other office or Department, because for more than ten years I have had nothing to do with them at all. I am not talking about the personnel of this force; I am only trying to understand and find out on what ground it is that this important and responsible branch of the administration asks for so large an increase of public expenditure, whether it is because the work has been neglected and inefficiently done before, or whether because under former administrations, as the Secretary of State very fairly states and implies here, Congress had not given the State Department the force that the public service requires, and that the administration before him had been overworked. That is what I want to get at.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator from Vermont states substantially what is stated in the memorandum and letter sent by the Secretary of State, that the number of clerks in the State Department is insufficient for the performance of the regular duties of the Department.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the query still remains unanswered why it was that if the information which the Senate Committee on Appropriations has given us was fully in possession of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives they did not give the Secretary of State the force he wanted; and if they thought that the requirements of the Secretary were unnecessary and unjust, upon what theory should we be called upon to increase his force, and thereby give color to the claim the Democrats in the House of Representatives are making, that they are being thwarted and frustrated in their efforts at economy by a Republican Senate.

The House committee had the same information we have got. They are the political friends of the Secretary of State. They said they would not give the increase he asked; and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the House undoubtedly this fall will make the welkin ring with the declarations of the efforts at economy that were made by the House of Representatives in the various appropriation bills and point out this very item and say, "Look at the State Department; we passed that bill through the House with only a certain number of clerks in it and a certain amount of money to pay them; and it got into that extravagant Senate, and they increased at once the clerks and increased the compensation, whereby we were thwarted in our efforts at economy!"

Mr. President, unless there is some stronger reason than has yet been adduced, something that is more pertinent and pointed and direct, I should hope that the majority of my political associates on this floor would not see fit to concur in this amendment. If the Democratic party want more clerical force let them say so. They have got an organ. They have a legislative body in their possession. They have a committee organized with a majority of their associates. And for them to send a bill in here with a certain number of clerks in these Departments in the possession of their representatives, to throw the responsibility for an increase in the clerical force and in the amount of appropriations upon us, is to me one of the most extraordinary spectacles in the whole range of Democratic reform.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] has sounded a note that he will need to keep up upon every appropriation bill; and perhaps there is no place where the commentary upon the charges of extravagance in the Departments of the Government which were rung broadcast by the Democratic party in its campaigns to secure the control of the Government will be shown so clearly as having no foundation as upon the appropriation bills. The Senate Committee on Appropriations is going through this sort of experience every day of its work.

The House of Representatives, in sympathy with the administration and with the Departments, takes up with deliberation and spends presumably the better part of the session in careful investigation as to the needs of the Departments which are under the control and administration of their friends. Late in the session, after more than six months have been spent by the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, the appropriation bills are matured, which limit and define the force to be employed in the several Departments, according to their judgment. Ample opportunity is given presumably to the head of every Department and every bureau and every division to appear before the committee of the House of Representatives that is maturing these bills; and it is the duty of that committee to investigate carefully and take the statements of its friends and representatives in these Departments before reporting their bills. When the judgment of the committee is made up and the bills are reported, after the heads of the Departments and bureaus and divisions have conferred with their political sympathizers in the House of Representatives, the bills are brought forward and passed by that body, and two things at once are seen and two things at once are brought to the attention of the Senate and to its Committee on Appropriations. These two things are, first, that no opportunity or little opportunity is found for reducing anywhere; and next, if any reduction is made the heads of Departments and bureaus and divisions apply at once to the Senate committee for relief and protection, and in some cases for increase, like that which is now before the Senate.

No matter how much the Secretary of State may have joined in the cry of extravagance and that the Republican party was keeping salaried employés here of no use to the country and wasting the public Treasury in that fashion, he suddenly discovered that the Republican administrations for the past years have been running the State Department and doing its business not in an extravagant way, but without force enough, and in the face of the declarations in the campaign and the charges of his fellows upon the stump and in the face of the act of his political sympathizers in the other body he is compelled to appeal to a Republican Senate to give him force enough to do the business of the Department.

This, sir, is only one case in a hundred. The Senator from Kansas, as I have said, will need to raise this note of his upon every appropriation bill. It is the publicly proclaimed confession on the part of gentlemen who have been in the habit of arraigning the Republican party for extravagance that there was no foundation for the charge. There has not been to-day a single instance where any head of a Department has been able to put his knife in and prune away any excrescences that the Republican party have foisted upon the service. Wherever the attempt has been made, and wherever it has been claimed that reductions because of economy are being carried out by the party in power in the administration of the Government, it is found that these reductions result from Republican legislation passed while the Republican party had control of the administration, and that the reductions are in accordance with that.

In the report which accompanied this bill to the other branch of the legislative part of the Government there are claims for reductions by the hundreds, and it was reiterated upon the floor of the other House, if I may refer to it; and yet examination discloses that these reductions came because of legislation in the last Congress where the Republican Senate insisted upon legislation that would in time reduce, and that it has only followed from that legislation. But the Committee on Appropriations awaits the first effort on the part of the head of any Department of this Government to put in the pruning-knife and cut off the extravagance that it has been claimed existed heretofore.

So we are confronted with what is an anomaly, and which I believe ought not to exist, as the Senator from Kansas has said, that where a Democratic House has refused to give the increases over and above any force in the past that the heads of Departments have asked for at the hands of that body, they come here and ask us.

If appropriation bills were made in the Senate pure battle-grounds for party conflict, and if every appropriation bill was a Belgium on which a battle was to be fought, then the Republican majority in the Committee on Appropriations could set its foot down squarely, as the Senator from Kansas advises, and say no to every one of these requests.

Though I am not as old a member of that committee as some others, I find that it has been the fashion heretofore not to deal with appropriations in that committee in a purely party and political sense, and great as is the temptation when a given case occurs, the Senate Committee on Appropriations goes further than the line indicated by the Senator from Kansas, whether it is wise politically or not, and examines the subject and tries to elicit from that examination the real question of the needs of the Government, not whether the charges made heretofore by the Democratic press and Democratic speakers are false and whether we shall hold them to their charges, but whether the need of a particular branch of the Government at this time is for more force.

The only reason which can be given why this additional clerk shall be put in the State Department is that the committee believed on investigation that the Secretary of State was right as a matter of business; that he was in humiliation obliged to go back upon what had been said before, perhaps by him but at any rate said by his associates; that he had found that the Republican party in administering that Department had not kept drones in the service and wasted the public Treasury for that purpose, but had proceeded economically, had worked and overworked its employés, and that he with the responsibility of the head of that Department resting upon his shoulders came before a Republican committee and said:

All this is wrong; I need another clerk here, and the Republican party did the work without the clerk I believe I ought to have. I do not mean to say that he put it in that form. That was not needed; and no member of the Appropriations Committee, I may say, in dealing with the heads of these Departments, finds it at all necessary to put it in that way.

These gentlemen realize the inconsistency of their position. They realize when they come before our committee that it is taking the back track on all their charges; but it will be found not only in this bill, but in every other appropriation bill that comes up here.

Then comes the question whether the Senate shall deal strictly politically with its majority upon the case and hold these Departments to the charges which have been made by their representatives in time past or deal with the question of the need of the Government; and I would as lief the Senate should settle that question here and now as to wait and settle it in the future.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I am opposed to this amendment; but I am not opposed to it for the reasons given by the distinguished Senators who have spoken on this question. This is a matter of charity; it is not a matter of justice. This is to enable a Democratic Secretary of State to retain in office an old Republican incumbent who can not do his duty, and who I think ought to be discharged, and discharged instantly, and young blood put in his place that can do his work. That is all there is now of this fuss. There is that old Republican who has been in there it is said for fifty years, or thirty or forty years, I do not know how long, and he is unable to perform the work.

Mr. CHACE. He has been there more than fifty years.

Mr. COCKRELL. And the question is whether he shall be turned out or if the Secretary does not need anybody else.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? Is this old official, who is aged and infirm, as the Senator says, and incapable of work, any more incapable of work this year than he has been for years when the Republican administrations got along with him?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir; I say emphatically so.

Mr. HALE. Is he more so?

Mr. COCKRELL. He is emphatically more so to-day.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if he is any more a Republican than he is a Democrat? He was put there in Democratic times, and he has remained there ever since. I never knew that he had any politics, and if the Senator has discovered them he has been on a search which has been more successful than that of any other member of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have not inquired about his politics. He was there under Republican administrations, and I presume——

Mr. DAWES. So he was there under Democratic administrations.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is true; but I presume he would not have been retained in that position under a Republican administration unless he had sworn fealty to that party. I ask the Senator to point to one solitary——

Mr. HALE. He has not served nearly as long under Republican administrations as he has under Democratic administrations from which he received his appointment. He never voted the Republican ticket in his life, and no man ever claimed here or there or anywhere that he was a Republican. I deny that. The Senator has no right to charge that this is keeping an old Republican official in office. He is an official who was appointed and served a generation under Democratic administrations and under administrations which turned out men very speedily who did not sympathize with them. There is no Republicanism in it and no Republican is being protected here.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then why are the Senators trying to make political capital out of the increase of one clerk, when they knew the fact that this additional clerk was to take the place of a decrepit old man who can not do anything?

Mr. HALE. Because the Secretary said he needed the additional clerk and could not get along without him.

Mr. COCKRELL. He needed him because this man who had been in there was unable to discharge his duties. That is all there is about it.

Mr. DAWES. Why can not the Senator say that he is unable to discharge his duties not because he is a Republican and not because he is a Democrat, but because he is an old, faithful servant who has worn himself out in the public service without regard to politics, whom all administrations, Democratic and Republican, have kept in there because of his value to the public service?

Mr. COCKRELL. He was not as superannuated when he was put in there by a Democratic administration, if he was put in there by it. I do not know that he was put in there by a Democratic administration.

Mr. DAWES. The only reason why the Senator does not know is because the Senator has not examined the subject he is talking about.

Mr. COCKRELL. You can not, to save your soul from perdition, tell whether he was put in there by a Democratic administration or not. The Senator is talking wild and flighty. He has seen somebody in the galleries and his mind has gone off in that direction.

Mr. DAWES. I can tell the Senator. He says I can not tell.

Mr. COCKRELL. When was he appointed? Under what administration?

Mr. DAWES. He was here when I came here, before there was ever a Republican administration at all, and no administration but a Democratic one.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator is simply talking wildly, just as Senators have been talking on this question of a Democratic Secretary of State asking an increase of one clerk in the clerical force of his Department.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator should not say that. He should not say that a Democratic Secretary of State asked for only one clerk. Let me read what he did ask. In the first place he asked for an increase of $200 in the salary of his stenographer. Last year, as the Senator well remembers, in view of the fact that there were some green people coming into the public service by reason of the election of Mr. Cleveland, we gave the Secretary of State what no Republican Secretary of State ever had had, and by anticipation put in a provision for a stenographer at $1,800 a year.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was all right.

Mr. PLUMB. We thought that coming in and being new to the public service that Department, where the very best of human labor and intelligence should be had, might fall short and need more help, and so we gave it to him; and this year he came back and asked that we give that man $2,000 in place of $1,800. Then he said he wanted two index clerks, whose duty it shall be to make synoptical and subject indexes of the correspondence of the Department of State, at $1,800 each, or $3,600—no $900 place, or $1,200 place, or anything of that kind, but the highest-priced clerks. Then he wanted two clerks to assist in the compilation and publication of the monthly consular reports at $1,600 each, making $3,200. Then he wanted a telegraph operator. That made $1,200 more. Then he wanted $5,000 for extra clerical labor to enable him to respond to calls of Congress, &c. Then he wanted for contingent expenses $200 more than he had the current year. Then he wanted the Historical Register for the Department of State, to purchase $6,000 worth of manuscripts of different kinds. Then he wanted a printing press and printing office for the Department of State, $5,000.

So the Senator will see a great deal of distinction at once between what the Secretary asked for and the comparative parsimony which the Committee on Appropriations exhibited in response to the demand. Here is a demand for about $17,000 or $18,000 for extra service in that Department, which the Secretary asked for and which the committee did not give him. While I have no doubt the Senator intended to be entirely fair about it, he was making a statement I think for the Secretary in a way not justified by the facts.

Mr. COCKRELL. We were not discussing anything about the estimates that were made by the Department. That was not the burden of the song of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] or the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. It was that a Democratic Secretary of State had asked an increase of one clerk of class 3, and they were pouncing upon him and the Democratic administration for that one increase, when they knew that that increase was made for the purpose of enabling a kind and generous hearted Secretary of State to retain in office Mr. Hunter, who was physically unable to perform the duties of that position. That is all there is of it, the alpha and the omega.

I am opposed to the amendment, because Mr. Hunter has been paid for every particle of service that he has performed the full equivalent. I hold that every civil officer of this Government, from President down to constable, receives in his salary and the honors of his position the full equivalent of all the services that he can perform and risks that he can take; and that when a man in the civil service of the Government becomes incapacitated mentally or physically for discharging the duties of that position, he is not to be pensioned upon the people or continued indefinitely in office drawing a full salary of $2,500.

This is simply a step in the direction of a civil pension to this man who faithfully has served a long time and now is incapacitated for further service. I say it was not exactly just, it was not exactly fair, that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] should make this attack upon the Secretary of State and upon the Committee on Appropriations for yielding, as I think unadvisedly, to the request to give an additional clerk to perform the duties of this official who is incapacitated for the performance of his duties, and whose salary is provided for in the bill under the head of class 4. We were not discussing, I will tell my good friend from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], the recommendations or estimates of the Secretary of State.

Mr. PLUMB. I was.

Mr. COCKRELL. They are not in issue. I am discussing the issue made by the Senator from Maine, and the Senator from Kansas, the colleague of the Senator. The Senator knows, as he has been here a long time, that all the heads of Departments are in the habit of asking largely, and I doubt whether ever any Appropriations Committee of the House or Senate gave to the head of any Department the full estimate made by him. It never has been done since I have been a member of the Senate. The Republican Secretaries in their estimates estimated more largely than ever the committees gave them.

But, Mr. President, you see how large a controversy can spring up over this little bit of a thing. It is simply one additional clerk of class 3 to the Secretary of State, a Democrat under a Democratic administration, in order to enable him to retain in office an old worn-out clerk who is no longer fit to perform the duty, and the Secretary of State probably did not have the nerve to discharge him in his present condition and employ a new one in his place.

Mr. PLUMB. I am a little bit sorry to see the Senator from Missouri attack the Secretary of State in this violent manner. I have here the literal recommendations of the Secretary of State for these additions to his clerical force, and he goes on at great length to explain the necessity therefor, and never says a word about some one to take the place of this superannuated individual of whom the Senator from Missouri speaks.

I am sorry to believe, but it seems that I am bound to do so under the circumstances, that the Senator is saying that the Secretary of State, whom he speaks of as so likely to need backbone, has been intending to deceive Congress in this matter, and under the pretext of actually wanting these people to render public service in his Department he has been trying to get somebody in order that he might put some other person upon the superannuated roll.

I do not believe so illy of the Secretary of State as that, even although it may come from as high authority as that of the Senator from Missouri. He may be willing to stand here and say that this Democratic Secretary of State had deliberately entered upon a course of deception, that he is intending to deceive and to defraud, that he wants to get out of Congress an increase of clerical force upon a basis of false pretension; but while I am as willing as almost any one is, and for pretty good reason, as I think, to believe that the Democratic party at all events as a party may do that thing, I am not willing to thus characterize the Democratic Secretary of State.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator allow me one word?

Mr. PLUMB. I will.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Secretary of State had nothing to do with it. The three subcommittee men of the Appropriations Committee who examined Mr. Bayard and who made this recommendation know what it was made for and the full committee knows. There was no deception on the part of Mr. Bayard, and if that man had been able to have done his duty the committee would not have put this additional clerk in the bill. That is all there is about it. There is no fraud and there is no deception on the part of the Secretary of State.

Mr. PLUMB. Does the Senator mean to say that the Secretary of State stated to the subcommittee that that was what he wanted this clerk for?

Mr. COCKRELL. He did not ask for the additional clerk for that purpose at all. The Secretary of State did not want to discharge that man.

Mr. PLUMB. But I am not talking about that.

Mr. COCKRELL. We determined simply to give him this additional clerk because this man was unable to perform the duties. The Secretary made no recommendation or representations, but if this man could do his duty he would not need any additional force or anything of the kind. It was playing an open and shut game when the Appropriations Committee put that in simply because this other clerk was not able to do the duty, and we were willing to give Mr. Bayard the same force that had been there before.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to ask a question. I suppose this discussion refers to Mr. Hunter. He is, as I understand it, the Second Assistant Secretary of State, and was nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I so understood.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President——

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator from New York will allow me just a moment, I wish to say that I have in my hand the statement at length of the Secretary of State made to the Committee on Appropriations for the purpose of inducing the particular appropriation that has been named in the bill and other additions to his clerical force besides. The statement is full under every head, and I will ask to have it published in the RECORD, in order that it may go also to show that there is not a single word in it that justifies the denunciation which the Senator from Missouri has put upon this gentleman.

Mr. ALLISON. The Secretary of State?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, the Secretary of State. Here the Secretary sets out what upon its face is conclusive evidence of the necessity for the clerk-hire which he asks for, not alone that which has been given him, because the committee has given him but a small percentage, less than 20 per cent. of what he asked for, and there is not a syllable which even is due to the fact, if it be a fact, as the Senator from Missouri says, that this additional clerk-hire was asked for, or any portion of it, for the purpose of enabling him to keep on the roll of superannuates the Assistant Secretary of State. On the contrary, he goes on at great length by way of statement of fact and argument to show that every single bit of force which he asks for is needed for the performance of the public service in his Department, and not for the purpose of enabling him to pension somebody whom he may happen to think pensionable.

As I said, while I originally started in this debate rather on the other side, I now confess I am here for the purpose of defending the Secretary of State against these rough and, as I think, unjust charges of the Senator from Missouri; and for the purpose of making the defense complete and showing that the Senator from Missouri has no leg to stand upon in thus characterizing the Democratic Secretary of State, I will ask that the statement of the Secretary of State accompanying his recommendations for an increase of the clerical force in his Department, including the $5,000 printing office, may be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to hear the matter read, if the Senator from New York pleases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas desire to have it read?

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator from Missouri desires to have it read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, I should like to hear it read.

Mr. PLUMB. And inasmuch as he was not willing to take my statement as to its contents I am very glad now to have it spread at length before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The statement will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the statement indicated.

Mr. PLUMB. Unless the Senator desires to have it read through I ask for unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD. I do not desire to have a further reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish it to appear in connection with this appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Iowa to ask that the report of the committee be printed in the RECORD. Did the Senator mean the whole report of the committee?

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no; down to the heading "Civil Service Commission," on page 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not at this moment, but some time ago the Senator from Iowa suggested that the report of the Committee on Appropriations should be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ALLISON. No; I only asked that so much as has been indicated, relating to the State Department, may he inserted.

Mr. COCKRELL. Down to "Civil Service Commission," on page 12.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; so much as relates to the State Department.

The statement referred to is as follows:

STATE DEPARTMENT.

The Secretary of State appeared before the committee and submitted the following requests for additions to the House bill and changes therein. Of these the committee recommend an addition of one clerk of class 3, and one telegraph operator, at $1,200, and an appropriation of $1,000 for editing and preparing the Statutes at Large of the Forty-ninth Congress.

Statement of Secretary of State showing the additional items of appropriation (legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill) asked for on behalf of the Department of State. (See Estimates, 1886–'87, pp. 15, 17.)

1. Stenographer to the Secretary of State—

Last year	$1,800
Asked	2,000

This increase of compensation is asked for on account of the important and confidential character of the office to which it relates. The first appropriation for a stenographer to the Secretary of State was made in the deficiency act of March 3, 1885, and was at the rate of $2,000 a year; which, it may also be observed, is the rate of compensation allowed the stenographer of the Secretary of the Treasury.

2. Two index clerks, whose duty shall be to make subject and synoptical indexes of the correspondence of the Department of State, at $1,800 each $3,600

It is proposed hereby to add two new clerks, of the fourth class, to the roll of the Department.

The efficiency of the Department demands the promptest and most intelligent response to all demands upon the Bureau of Indexes and Archives. It is not enough to keep a list of correspondence in the order of its reception or dispatch. That, like the accessions catalogue of a library or a merchant's day-book, is the raw material from which the true classification and arrangement of the records is made. Although seven or eight of the clerks of highest intelligence and longest experience are assigned to this bureau, it is impracticable to do more than keep up the entry registers. The work of the Department is rapidly increasing, the amount of correspondence has doubled within the past four or five years. The constant labor of the entry and recording clerks is inadequate to keep up the synoptical and subject indexes, which are now some four years behind. This entails much loss of time, and many pages of entry must be run over to find a paper which could be placed in a moment were the card subject indexes brought down to date.

To accomplish these only the most experienced clerical aid is serviceable. The few men who are competent, through training and linguistic knowledge, to conduct this work can not be taken from the other bureaus of the Department unless their places can be filled by equally competent and intelligent clerks.

Hence the indispensable recommendation that the clerks to be appointed to this special duty should be of the fourth or $1,800 class.

It would be worse than useless to set new, raw men at work on such a task. And if the synoptical and subject indexes are suffered to fall still further behind, the difficulty of promptly and efficiently meeting the daily demands upon the bureau for ordinary information will greatly increase and, in a short time, become practically insurmountable.

3. Two clerks to assist in the compilation and publication of the monthly consular reports, at $1,600 each $3,200

The publication of the monthly consular reports was begun, under authority of statute, in 1880. The utility of the undertaking was soon evident. Additional appropriations have from time to time permitted the development of the work, until now, with a greatly increased circulation, the publication reaches a very large circle of interested persons at home and abroad. Besides the regular monthly issues special numbers are issued from time to time, giving the reports of the consuls on the particular subjects and industries concerning which the Department calls for information in response to the public demand.

Much labor of a peculiarly responsible character is thus entailed on the Bureau of Statistics, which has these publications in charge. Its working force now consists of a chief of bureau, an assistant, at $1,800; one clerk, at $1,600, and three copyists. All the labor of compilation, editing, revising, proof correcting, and distribution falls on the chief and his two assistants, who are often obliged to work far beyond the usual departmental hours to accomplish their ordinary task. Thus overburdened, it is quite impossible for the bureau to respond to even the most simple demands upon it for statistical information, without neglecting the work to which Congress and the public attach so much importance; and so the supplementary duty of the Bureau of Statistics has superseded the indispensable duty for which it was established.

Two clerks of the third or $1,600 grade are asked for. It is thought that for this salary men can be obtained possessing the necessary qualifications, which are quickness and accuracy as calculators, knowledge of one or more tongues, editorial ability, facility of composition, expression, and condensation, and the typographical knowledge necessary to accurate proof-reading.

In this way not only can more useful extension be given to the work of collecting and distributing the monthly reports, but the statistical function of the bureau, which is really its most indispensable feature, can be set on a proper footing and receive the attention which it is impossible to give it now, even with greatly increased hours of labor.

4. One telegraph operator $1,200

The telegraphing of the Department of State is undoubtedly equal to, if not greater than, that of any other Executive Department. Besides a very large domestic correspondence, it embraces correspondence with our ministers and consuls all over the world, which latter, being mostly in cipher, requires great efficiency and care on the part of the operator who conducts it. Various other Departments are provided with telegraph operators, but the Department of State never has been. The Department has had the good fortune to find among its clerks a knowledge of telegraphy, but this knowledge can be utilized only at the expense of the clerical needs of the Department.

5. Extra clerical labor, to enable the Secretary of State to respond to calls of Congress for copies of correspondence and documents, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of State $5,000

Section 4 of the legislative, executive, and judicial act of August 5, 1882, makes it impossible to employ any clerical service in the Departments unless in pursuance of specific appropriation therefor at fixed compensation.

The force of the Department of State is, even under ordinary circumstances, inadequate to discharge all the duties devolving upon it. When Congress is in session it frequently happens that urgent demands are made upon the Department for copies of important documents, which it is quite impossible to fill with promptness. Many of the papers called for, being in foreign tongues, require to be translated before they can be transmitted to Congress and printed as public documents. But one translator it authorized by the appropriation acts, and one man can not, of course, respond to the extraordinary demand thus entailed in addition to the onerous labor of his regular duty.

Several important matters referred to in the President's annual message are not yet in a condition for submission to Congress, because it is simply impossible to give the clerical labor to their preparation. The concluding part of the Congo conference of Berlin and the important protocols of the Berne copyright conference of 1885 are among these. If these were called for by Congress it is doubtful whether they could be completed, with their lengthy translations, before the end of the present long session.

In the short sessions of the alternate years the demand is greater. At times the whole force of the Department, including chiefs of bureaus and assistant secretaries, is pressed into the mechanical work of copying and translating long after regular hours.

The $5,000 asked for is intended as an emergency fund. In cases of urgency, a sufficient number of skilled translators, draughtsmen, copyists, and type-writers can be temporarily employed from outside to prepare in a few days what could not now be done in less than as many weeks or months. It is not proposed to employ any regularly compensated labor. The Secretary is to be the sole judge of the sufficiency of the emergency, and only such extraneous help will be employed and for such time as will be found absolutely necessary. The sum asked, $5,000, is merely a maximum, and it is intended to keep the expenditure as far within that limit as possible.

6. Contingent expenses of the Department of State—horses, wagons, clocks, electrical apparatus, &c. Last year, $4,800. This year $5,000 is asked.

The itemized lists of expenses under this head, as found in the printed reports of the Treasury Department, show that the utmost economy is exercised and only for legitimate purposes. The necessity for repairs and expenses of this class increases with the lapse of time; it costs more to keep old things in serviceable condition than new, and this fact alone suffices to explain the small increase asked.

7. Historical Register, Department of State. To enable the purchase of the manuscript prepared by John H. Haswell (the printing and binding of 5,000 copies thereof being authorized) $6,000

The accompanying executive documents (No. 124, H. R., Forty-eighth Congress, first session, and No. 110, H. R., Forty-eighth Congress, second session) sufficiently explain and justify this recommendation.

8. Printing-press and printing, Department of State $5,000

One of the most necessary adjuncts of every well-regulated foreign office is a confidential press, to print copies of correspondence which it may be necessary to send at once to legations and consulates abroad for their information. The Department of State is probably the only one of the more important foreign offices of the world not so provided. Pen copies can only be prepared at great loss of time and labor and heavy expense.

This insures (1) accuracy in copies of important dispatches; (2) confidential secrecy; (3) promptitude; (4) easy multiplication of copies when needed; (5) enables each of our ministers to understand what the others are doing, and promotes co-operation.

This work can not be conveniently performed at the Government Printing Office. Much time is lost, and days are necessary to compose, revise, correct, and print a paper which could be finished on a confidential press in a few hours. The appropriation for the Department's printing is barely sufficient for its ordinary routine work, such as consular circulars, blanks, blank-books, &c. The Department has lately been obliged, through the exhaustion of this appropriation, to countermand a requisition for the printing of a draught-treaty. To preserve secrecy in a great establishment like the Government Printing Office is difficult, and requires extraordinary precautions.

The sum asked will afford a complete outfit, hand-press, fonts of type, and all accessories for the service required.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish simply to call attention to the fact that the committee gave one clerk at $1,600 and a telegraph operator at $1,200 on the basis of the recommendation, and that was all the additional force asked for by the Secretary of State that the Appropriations Committee conceded to him.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to call attention to the fact that he describes what he wants to do with that clerk of class 3, on page 11 of the report, but there is not a word in it about helping the Second Assistant Secretary of State. He refers to the publication of the monthly consular reports and the necessity of aid in getting those out. He wanted two clerks of class 3 for that purpose, and the committee gave him one.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I have looked at the paper containing the recommendations of the Secretary of State, and also at the bill before the Senate, to discover what there was in them that related to my friend, one of the Assistant Secretaries of State, Mr. Hunter. I do not find his name mentioned in any portion of this matter, and I do not find any relation to him in the subject-matter under debate; but I have heard him spoken of here by the Senator from Missouri in language that I should not use about any gentleman more than eighty years of age who had suffered the afflictions that may attend one of that age and has been a servant of this country for almost sixty years in the State Department. I heard him spoken of as a worn-out old clerk, who was to be replaced by somebody employed to take labor off his hands, an additional burden to keep a man as a clerk in employment who was unable to work, and have an additional workman provided in his place.

I do not know whether the Senator from Missouri knew what Mr. Hunter's career had been, or the degree of esteem in which he had been held through every administration from General Jackson's time down to the present day. Until about twenty-five years ago Mr. Hunter was the sole assistant of the Secretary of State, under the title of chief clerk. At one time Mr. Seward said of his Department, in comparing the routine of a great portion of it, that Mr. Hunter was able to run the State Department in all matters except of express political character and importance.

Now, because he is eighty years old, and because he is not strong enough to come in the regular hours of the office every day to the Department, he, here before the Senate and before the country and in every newspaper, is to be spoken of as a superannuated, worn-out, old clerk, who is to be replaced by the employment of another at $1,200. There is not one word in the suggestion of Mr. Bayard that has the least relation to Mr. Hunter, nor is any portion of this clerical aid to have the least relation at any time to the work that Mr. Hunter would have performed or did perform at any time of his service for the last forty years at least. It seems to me this is rather rash language about a gentleman entitled to as much respect, let me say, as any member of the Senate, and by his age to greater deference and greater tenderness of expression.

I hope, therefore, that as this record here shows neither in the bill nor in the recommendations nor in the amendment the least relation to Mr. Hunter, and, in point of fact, there is no relation whatever, this rash and as I think inconsiderate introduction of his name and his character and his position should be corrected, and firmly corrected, before the public and before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, in what I said I made no attack upon the Secretary of State. I do not charge that he is extravagant, that he is urging upon Congress improper expenditures. He has only been the victim of the circumstances surrounding his condition. He finds a Department that is not fully equipped with clerical force. Whatever that clerical force shall be employed in, if we give it to him, he must decide, and he has told us by word of mouth, by communication in regard to this bill and the other bill pertaining to his Department, the consular and diplomatic bill, that he needs more force, that the work of the Department can not be done without it. In saying that no attack is made upon him. Any other distinguished member of his party who had been selected by the President to preside at the head of that Department would have found the same situation, and I have no doubt would have been as frank as Mr. Bayard has been in disclosing his condition of needing more force; and any other gentleman at the head of that Department would have been submitted to what I must assume was the humiliation that the Secretary of State found himself submitted to in first going to his friends and being rebuffed, and then coming to the body that is in the hands of his political enemies. But he can not help it. I do not blame him. I presume no Senator here blames him. It is a part of the situation. It is not the one clerk or what he shall do, for the committee of the Senate did not content itself with giving him one clerk; it gave him a clerk and a telegraph operator, and a thousand dollars more for clerical service. He asked for four times as much as that, but the amendment which is in the bill and which we have reached brings it all up.

However, the controversy is not over this one clerk or what he shall do or whose place he shall take, but it is the first illustration in the debates in the last days of this session of Congress showing the attitude that the Departments are obliged to take here before the Senate. As I said, it will be repeated over and over again, and the men who come before the Senate and ask for more help, who ask for more clerks to do the business of their Departments, bureaus, and divisions, will not be to blame for it, because they will be confronted with the necessity.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, there is an old Spanish proverb which says, "Heaven protect me from my friends; I will defend myself against my enemies." It is my impression that when the Secretary of State peruses the RECORD to-morrow morning at his breakfast he will perceive a new significance and a more striking illustration of that proverb than it ever before has been his felicity to know when he discerns the attitude in which he has been placed by the champion of this administration. At last, after these many days, after all that we have heard and been through with here in the weary clatter of the last six months, it is gratifying that some one has had the temerity, the hardihood—I might say the effrontery almost—at least the intrepidity to rise in his place and defend this administration. The utterance of the Senator from Missouri during all the debates which have occurred is the first that has proceeded, so far as I am advised or now remember, from any Senator classified as a Democrat in defense of this administration, of which he is such an illustrious member and such a distinguished ornament.

He advises us, in the first place, that the reason why the Secretary wanted this additional clerk was to enable him to keep a superannuated old Republican on his force, as he called it, a man who some time since passed the fiftieth year of his continuous service in that Department, and whose official career therefore, if my chronology is correct, is coeval almost with my existence, and that began during the administration of Andrew Jackson, who I believe was never classified as a Republican. If there was any one in the Republican party at the time when this man was appointed it was in embryo; it was a germ. He was appointed during the reign of Andrew Jackson. The Senator from New York says he was appointed ten years before that in some capacity.

Mr. EVARTS. No, I said he has served nearly sixty years now.

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, nearly sixty years now, and during that time he has been continuously in the service in this city, where there has been for the greater period no political function to be exercised by any party whatever. That is the first ground on which the Senator from Missouri alleges that the Secretary of State presented this claim for additional clerical force before the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. I never said that he presented it on that ground at all, if the Senator will pardon me. I said the committee gave it.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator said the committee knew it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly they did.

Mr. INGALLS. And that every member knew it, and that the full committee knew it, and that the subcommittee knew it. With every variety of iteration that his vocabulary could command he said that the Committee on Appropriations knew that the reason why the Secretary of State wanted this clerk was to enable him to keep a superannuated old Republican on his roll. That was the first reason.

In the next place, he alleged that the reason why he wanted this additional clerk was to supply this vacancy which existed by reason of the extinction of this man's functions in the clerical force of the Department. He did not even know apparently that the man whom he thus stigmatized as a superannuated old Republican clerk is an assistant Secretary of State, nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate, I suppose with his own vote—I assume such at least—a man who for this long period during successive administrations of varying quality has conducted the functions of that office with a vigor and an efficiency and a patriotism without blot, without tarnish, and without stain.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And he commanded the support of every Secretary of State as an indispensable factor.

Mr. INGALLS. And, as the Senator from Vermont well suggests, he was so well advised in all the details of that great Department, in all its relations with foreign powers, that he had become practically indispensable as the coadjutor and associate and assistant of every Secretary of State, no matter what his politics may have been.

But that was not all. The Secretary of State was not yet sufficiently decorated as to ignorance and as to insincerity and want of candor by his friend and champion, the Senator from Missouri, but he says that the reason why he asked for this additional clerk to keep this superannuated old Republican assistant on the rolls was because he had not the nerve to turn him out. I quote the Senator's own language. He said the premier of this administration, the chosen confidant and friend of the President of the United States, was guilty of this collusion, this insincerity, this want of candor, before the committee because he had not the nerve to turn him out.

Mr. EVARTS. He had not the power to turn him out.

Mr. INGALLS. He had not the power to turn him out if he wanted to. But what kind of an aspersion, what kind of an insinuation and imputation upon the prime minister of this administration, coming from the Senator from Missouri, is the declaration that he came and postured and gesticulated and played a theatrical part before the Committee on Appropriations because he had not nerve enough to turn out a superannuated old Republican clerk? Heaven save me from my friends!

Mr. President, I return to a suggestion made by the Senator from Maine with regard to the action of the Appropriations Committee of this body. He admitted the force of the suggestions which had been made, and said that this presentation of the falsehood of the Democratic position would be presented to us in a hundred forms in every appropriation bill; but he said that the committee of this body, being constituted in its majority of Republicans, had not felt called upon to make these questions political in their consideration of matters of appropriation when they had been before them, but that they, with the heads of these Departments before them, had seen fit to inquire into the actual needs of the service, and if they found that additional clerkhire was necessary, disregarding political considerations they had recommended in favor of it.

Upon that matter I have this to say: The Republican party is not responsible to the country in any manner whatever for this administration. By the grace of God, assisted by some other mysterious influences, Grover Cleveland was chosen President by a majority of 1,149 votes in New York, without my co-operation, against my wish and desire and effort. He stands charged for the remainder of his term with the administration of this Government in all its executive functions. He is the executive head of the United States of America, and he is assisted in the House of Representatives by a majority of his own party. Under the Constitution and the laws and practices of this body and of both Houses that body has the origination of matters of appropriation.

The President of the United States and his associates in the House of Representatives hold the purse and they hold the sword; they are responsible to the people of this country for the administration of this Government, and so far as I am concerned I do not propose with my vote or with my voice to lend anything whatever of sanction to the allegations upon which the Republican party was overthrown in 1884. It was alleged by our adversaries in that conflict that the civil service of this Government under Republican administration for twenty-five years was inefficient and corrupt; it was alleged that the appropriations for a long period had been extravagant and unnecessary; and I propose that the President of the United States and his associates in the House of Representatives shall give proof to the country whether those allegations were true or whether they were false.

The House of Representatives sent us this bill. The Secretary of State went before the committee of that body and told them what he wanted, and the committee reported and the House passed the bill giving the Secretary of State the number of clerks that appear in the text of the bill as first printed. When the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations reports here that the information upon which the Committee on Appropriations of the House acted was not sufficient, when he reports that they did not have the information we have, or that anything supplemental has been handed in before our committee, I shall be ready, perhaps, to act otherwise; but when that committee inform us that the Secretary of State went before the committee of the House of Representatives with the annual Book of Estimates, with the supplemental requests that appear in this document, and that they, a Democratic body, refused to grant what the Democratic Secretary of State asked for, so far as my vote is concerned that Department will stagger along the best way it can under the force that was sufficient under a Republican administration and which a Democratic House has declared is enough.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator understood me to say that the Secretary of State had appeared before the committee of the House of Representatives and made the statements he made before the Senate committee he misunderstood me. I did not say so.

Mr. INGALLS. I did not so understand the Senator and I did not so state.

Mr. ALLISON. I simply meant to say that the annual Book of Estimates, which asked for every appropriation personally suggested to the Senate committee, was before the committee of the House, and therefore they ought to have had full knowledge of the needs of the office of the Secretary of State. What information they had or whether they even looked at the Book of Estimates I do not know.

Mr. INGALLS. Of course the Senator does not. I dare say they did not. I should judge from the looks of it that they never consulted any of the estimates or any of the previous appropriations.

But there is this to be said about it: As I understand the practice of that body these appropriation bills are distributed very early in the session, if not before the session begins, and I have heard that they sometimes take them in the month of November, among the House Committee on Appropriations, and that they then proceed forthwith to their consideration.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to inquire if that reference to the House of Representatives is in order? I submit that it is not.

Mr. INGALLS. Let me say to the Senator from South Carolina that the only thing that it is not in order to refer to, so far as the House of Representatives is concerned, is the particular vote by which any act was passed or the specific argument that was advanced upon any measure which was before that body.

Mr. BUTLER. I am very much obliged to the Senator for the information.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator is entirely welcome. I was proceeding to say that the Committee on Appropriations in the House of Representatives have undoubtedly had this subject under their consideration for not less than six months. They have had every opportunity, of which I dare say they have availed themselves, to ascertain in particular and in detail the specific needs and wants of every department of this Government, and after this long gestation they sent the bill over to us. It was reported here, I believe, yesterday; and now we are to be called upon hot-foot, without any opportunity for deliberation or consultation, to pass upon this bill to increase this force simply because it is reported by a majority ot the Senate Committee on Appropriations, I do not know how constituted, although I have heard some suggestions on that point that I do not care to refer to publicly.

I again submit to the chairman of the committee that there is no just ground or reason upon which, when the executive department and the lower branch of the legislative department have fixed these items as they have in the bill as it came from the House, the Republican party in the Senate should be called upon to give the orators of that organization the opportunity of saying in the approaching Congressional contest this fall, "We did what we could in the House to provide economical and frugal bills of appropriation, but were met in the Senate by a Republican majority there that overloaded them and overbore us and carried out the traditions of previous Republican administrations," thereby justifying, so far as we are able to do, the aspersions, the calumnies, the unjustifiable accusations that were cast upon us by our enemies, and which had, I believe, an injurious effect in the minds of the people at large.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] certainly misunderstood any remarks that I made in regard to the officer in the State Department as being intended as a reflection upon him. I have as much respect and admiration for that distinguished gentleman——

Mr. EVARTS. I had not the least idea the Senator from Missouri was referring to me; or did I refer to myself? I was talking about Mr. Hunter.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not see the appropriateness of that remark, for it is not a response to anything I was saying. The Senator from New York certainly did not understand or hear what I was saying or he would not have made such a response.

Mr. EVARTS. I am sorry if I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply desire to say that I certainly meant no reflection upon him in the world. I have the greatest respect and admiration for him, although I have never had the pleasure or the honor of seeing him.

Mr. PUGH. You are speaking of Mr. Hunter?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; I am speaking of Mr. Hunter.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator from New York thinks you are referring to him.

Mr. COCKRELL. I can not help it if he thinks I am referring to him. I am referring to Mr. Hunter. I say that I meant no reflection upon Mr. Hunter, but I have the greatest respect and admiration for him. He has been in service as I understand between fifty-five and sixty years; he has served under different administrations; he has discharged the duties honestly, faithfully, and efficiently so far as I know, and I understand that now in his ripe old age he is not able to perform the duties of his office.

The question then is, shall he continue to hold that office and draw the full salary allowed by law, which is simply nothing more nor less than a civil pension? Upon that proposition I have very distinct ideas, well-fixed principles. I hold that every civil officer of this Government, from the President down to constable, is only an agent and representative and servant of the sovereign people, and that let them do what they may in their official positions they can only do their duty, and can only render an equivalent for the honor of their positions and the salaries they receive.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator mean to say that Mr. Hunter is unable to perform any duties now?

Mr. COCKRELL. Well, practically so, I understand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not so understand it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Upon that proposition I shall always stand denying. I do not believe that the representatives of the people have a right to pension themselves upon the people. I do not believe that we have a right indirectly to create a civil pension-list. Service in the civil branches of the Government is very different from military and naval service. A different principle entirely applies.

There has been a tendency in this body for years to create and establish a civil pension-list. A distinguished Senator upon the opposite side of this Chamber years ago introduced a bill providing for pensions to civil employés of the Government. It is cropping out now and then. At that time I placed myself unequivocally in opposition to the theory, policy, or principle of granting any civil pension to any civilian employé of the Government, and I am now equally opposed to it. If Mr. Hunter or Mr. Anybodyelse has served the Government for forty, fifty, sixty, sixty-five, or even seventy years and has received his salary regularly and becomes incapacitated longer to perform his official duties, he has no right to be continued in that office and draw the salary of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then, if I may ask the Senator, why is it not the fair and square thing on that principle for the President of the United States to ask Mr. Hunter to retire and to give us an Assistant Secretary of State who has the character and capacity which no clerk can have to do the things that Mr. Hunter for so long a time has done for the honor and credit and promotion of the interests of the United States? If that is the state of the case, why do we not come at it fairly and squarely? Nobody can pretend that this clerk of class 3 is going to do any one thing that this most faithful and accomplished Assistant Secretary of State has been doing for half a century.

If my friend is right about his idea of civil pensions (and I express no opinion about that), and Mr. Hunter has really become so ill from old age or otherwise that he can not do the duty, why does not the President ask him to resign, if that is the theory, and not try to cover up under a clerk of class 4 or class 3 the idea that you are going to supply the place of Mr. Hunter, who has been primus inter pares there in all the business operations of that Department, by calling him a clerk of class 3 or class 4? That will not do. Let us have it out fair and square, and if we need another Assistant Secretary there by dismissing Mr. Hunter, why does not the President nominate him? If we do not want to dismiss him, as I do not, because he deserves as I believe the small pittance he has been having if he can not do a bit of work any more, but if you need somebody to do the work that he has been doing, then let us provide for an additional Secretary in that office.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was satisfied that the Senator from Vermont would wind up his position by favoring a civil-pension list, and in this case favoring the continuance of Mr. Hunter in office, drawing the salary. I believe it is now $2,500 per year, a pretty fair pension, I say. On that question I have stated my position distinctly and I have stated it emphatically, because I believe it is wrong that a civil-pension list shall be permitted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is——

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator just hold himself in patience now for a few moments?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. I believe that it is wrong for a civil-pension list to spring up in this country, directly or indirectly. Why the President does not remove Mr. Hunter and appoint another in his place I do not know, for I have never mentioned the matter to the President and have no means of knowing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There are no candidates from Missouri!

Mr. COCKRELL. There are no candidates from Missouri for the place. The effort has been made to make the impression that these appropriations are sought to be increased unnecessarily and that the Republican party is entitled to the credit for the reduced expenditures now allowed by law to the various branches of the Government. Ah, our friends have forgotten the beginning of the Forty-fourth Congress, the first Democratic House of Representatives for many years. Ever since the Forty-fourth Congress we have had a Democratic House, except one Congress, and that Democratic House has been year by year paring down the appropriations for every branch of the Government and cutting down the number of officers under the Government to the very lowest figure possible. I think myself in some instances they have probably reduced the number of officers under the Government and reduced the salaries even lower than might have been justifiable.

Mr. PLUMB. I know the Senator wants to do full justice to the Democratic House, and while he is speaking about it he might say in the same line that they even adjourned one year without making any appropriations for the Government, and thus were saving the entire amount of the appropriations.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, yes; all that is of record, Mr. President. Now, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] undertakes to make a great parade about some one coming to the defense of the administration and points to me as a leader and defender of the administration.

Thank God, Mr. President, Grover Cleveland and his administration need no defense at the hands of any Democratic Senator. His administration stands before the American people in all its perfection of symmetry and strength and beauty, and enjoys their confidence, their friendship, and their love as no administration for years has ever enjoyed. The people of the United States will live to bend their knees in reverential thanksgiving and adoration to Almighty God that Grover Cleveland became President of the United States. He is an honest man, he is a brave man, he is a true man, and he is doing all that any one mortal being on earth could do to give the good people of the United States an honest, frugal, economical, and constitutional administration.

Mr. President, such taunts fall harmless at the feet of this administration. It needs no defender upon the floor of the Senate. It has its defense, and its stronghold, and its abiding place in the respect, and the confidence, and the admiration, and the love of the American people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the pending amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 476, before the word "clerks," under the head of "Department of State," the Committee on Appropriations report to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Five clerks of class 3.

The amendment was agreed to, there being on a division—ayes 26, noes 16.

Mr. INGALLS. I assume that it will hardly be possible to get through with the bill to-night. With great diffidence, therefore, if the Senator from Iowa does not object, I will move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no; I appeal to my friend not to make that motion.

Mr. PLUMB. Before that motion is put I will ask my colleague to yield until I can bring up a conference report on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Senator from Kansas to yield that I may state, if he will allow me, that the President of the United States has got to have time to examine all these bills, and this special item that we have just passed in particular. We know how diligent he has been about pension bills and so on, examining about eighty in one day I believe, and vetoing twenty and approving sixty.

Mr. PLUMB. No, he vetoed thirty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Therefore we have got to give him time. It will probably take him half an hour to go through this bill, according to all accounts, and we have got to give him time to do it, and I hope we shall go on and get through with it as early as we can.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask my colleague to yield until I can bring up the conference report on the Post-Office appropriation bill, in order that the bill, which is now ready to be enrolled, may be enrolled and sent to the President.

Mr. INGALLS. I yield for that purpose; but in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, I would say that because the President of the United States may desire to inspect this bill or any other bill with any unusual scrutiny I do not propose to sit here, if I can help it, after 6 o'clock in the evening to enable him to do so; and I hope the Senate will be governed not by what the President of the United States may want to do, but by what may seem appropriate to themselves.

I yield for the purpose of enabling the conference report to be made, and then I will renew the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say also that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] desires to present another conference report.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5887) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, and 6 to the bill (H. R. 5887) "making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, and 6.

That the House recede from its amendment to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same.

P. B. PLUMB,
WILLIAM MAHONE,
JAMES B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES H. BLOUNT,
JOHN M. TAYLOR,
HENRY H. BINGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask the chairman of the conference committee whether the subsidy feature has been receded from by the Senate?

Mr. PLUMB. I will state the entire drift of the report.

There were four items of difference between the two Houses. One item was the addition of $80,000 to the appropriation for the postal-car service. That was inserted in the Senate after the bill was reported, on account of the fact of the Senate having passed a bill which, if it should become a law, would require a larger appropriation for that purpose. On the assurance that the bill could not pass the House of Representatives the Senate conferees yielded that point.

Another item of difference was an appropriation of about $40,000 to continue the special mail facility service from Jacksonville to a point on the Gulf of Mexico in order to make quicker communication with Havana. On that point the House conferees yield.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How does that leave it?

Mr. PLUMB. That leaves it with provision adequate for fast-mail service by rail from New York city either to Cedar Keys or Tampa or Charlotte Harbor, in the discretion of the Postmaster-General.

The third item of difference was in regard to a legislative paragraph similar to the one inserted in the bill last year and which the committee last year put into a shape which they intended to make permanent, authorizing the Postmaster-General in letting contracts for water service, where a part of the service was in the inland waters of the United States and a part in foreign waters, where the distance was not more than 200 miles between the nearest domestic port and the nearest foreign port, to make one continuous contract for the service. The House conferees declined to yield that, but the Postmaster-General submitted the question on the law of last year to the Attorney-General, who decided that the existing statute was ample for that purpose; that is to say, that it was a continuing provision, exactly as we intended last year to make it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Just like section 3 of the legislative bill.

Mr. PLUMB. Not exactly that; but a doubt arose in regard to it. The House conferees insisted that the provision was a legislative one, not necessary to be repeated. The Senate conferees sent to the Postmaster-General, and he said at first that perhaps in order to make perfectly sure of it it might be well to re-enact it, but in the mean time, before this matter went into conference, he had obtained the opinion of the Attorney-General, and therefore it became unnecessary to re-enact the provisions of the old law.

The fourth point was the $800,000 for payment to American steamships engaged in the transportation of the foreign mails of the country. The Senate voted yesterday by a large majority, as it had before voted, to insist on that amendment; but it became apparent to everybody that the House would not yield, and it was not deemed advisable to further continue the contest now to the extent of taking another formal vote in the House, because of the near approach of the last day of June when the last year's appropriations will terminate, creating a necessity for a resolution extending the appropriations of last year or some of the other temporary devices with which we are familiar; and for the purpose, therefore, of getting this out of controversy and recognizing what we believed to be inevitable, after exhausting all proper efforts to get a concurrence on the part of the House, if not in all in part of that which the Senate deemed was necessary for the purpose of the proper extension of our mail facilities with foreign countries in American steamships, the Senate conferees agreed to yield.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So that is given up entirely.

The report was concurred in.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MAHONE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7481) "making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$10,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and strike out, in line 21, page 3 of the bill, the word "eleven" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten;" and strike out, in line 5, page 4 of the bill, the word "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$65,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$99,300;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment all after the word "pleuro-pneumonia" and insert in lieu of the words thus stricken out the following: "And for this purpose to employ as many persons as he may deem necessary, and to expend any part of this sum in the purchase and destruction of diseased animals whenever in his judgment it is essential to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia from one State into another;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. CALL. Before the vote is taken on concurrence in that report I wish to ask permission of the Senate to insert in the RECORD a statement that was sent by Mr. Gibbons on the subject of an amendment which the conference committee has agreed to. I will not ask to detain the Senate by reading it, but simply ask that it be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida asks that a certain statement be printed in the RECORD without reading. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The statement is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington, June 26, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: Mr. W. H. Wiley, chemist of the Department of Agriculture, has written a letter under date of June 17, to Hon. WILLIAM H. HATCH, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, reflecting severely upon Senators, Representatives, and others who have favored the Senate amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill in relation to sugar-making experimental machinery. He charges substantially that I wrote you a letter on the 27th of May containing erroneous and misleading statements, and that you read it in the Senate debate on the 10th instant. I beg leave, therefore, to call your attention to the following extracts from Mr. Wiley's letter and to my reply:

"In further consideration of the debate in the Senate on the adoption of the amendment, I desire to call your attention to the letter of Hon. J. FLOYD KING to Senator CALL, published on page 5509 of the RECORD. It would be interesting to know where Mr. KING obtained the 'facts' of which he speaks. Certainly not from the Department of Agriculture. He (Mr. KING) says: 'I am fully sustained in the position I take in this matter by the Louisiana Sugar-Planters' Association, as is shown by a unanimous vote of thanks tendered me at its regular monthly meeting on the 13th instant, indorsing the stand taken by me on the subject." On this point Mr. KING is entirely mistaken. The sugar-planters thanked him for his letter and the interest he took in diffusion, but not for favoring the restricting amendment."

I have no criticism to make of Mr. King for denouncing me as wholly incompetent in a recent letter to the Louisiana Sugar-Planters' Association, but I desire to correct the misstatement in the following paragraph of his letter to Senator CALL, page 5509 of the RECORD:

"Our sugar planters have had enough of it, but Professor Wiley, now and for years chief chemist of the Department of Agriculture and in sole charge of the Government sugar-making experiments, persists in recommending the importation of more foreign beet-root sugar machinery in spite of the fact that the only success thus far achieved was by the use of a set of American diffusion machinery, built expressly for cane-sugar manufacture, and tried a couple of days last year in Kansas, a full account of which is accurately given in the annexed article from one of the Washington papers."

Nothing could be less in harmony with my conduct than the above statement. Would it not be be better for Mr. King to get a full account of the experiments from the official reports of the department and not from newspapers? All these official reports have been placed in his hands.

Replying to the above, I have to say that the statements made in my letter, which you did me the honor to read in the debate of the 10th instant, in regard to the superiority of American diffusion machinery, and the approval of my course upon the subject manifested by our planters, are based wholly upon Mr. Wiley's reports and letters, and the official reports of the Louisiana Sugar Planters' Association.

Division of chemistry bulletin No. 8, containing eighty-five pages of printed matter and twenty-four illustrations, mainly of German and French beet-root sugar machinery, published at the Government Printing Office, is Mr. Wiley's official report of his tour through England, Germany, France, and Spain, at Government expense, last fall and winter. On page 31 he makes the following statement regarding the degree of extraction obtained from sorghum cane by an American-built diffusion machine at Ottawa, Kans., last October:

"With ten cells at Ottawa, Kans., working with grooved chips, a degree of exhaustion was obtained higher than any other experiments I have been permitted to study."

In another account of the American machine, given in his letter of June 17 to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, Mr. Wiley states that the work of the first day "fully demonstrated that the process of diffusion could and did extract all but a mere trace of the sugar in the sorghum cane."

In his letter of October 15, 1885, to Major Fuller, chief of the division of accounts of the Department of Agriculture, Mr. Wiley admits that the working capacity of the Ottawa battery (American) was 3½ tons of cane per hour at the first day's trial, or 84 tons in twenty-four hours.

In his letter dated Paris, France, December 7, 1885, published in Coleman's Rural World, Mr. Wiley states that the French battery of fourteen cells used at Almeria, Spain, worked at the rate of 75 tons of cane in twenty-four hours. His record of the American battery of only ten cells is 84 tons in twenty-four hours at the first trial. He states in the same letter in regard to the cutters used in Spain that "they were almost exactly like those used in Kansas," only not quite so good.

It will be observed that the French battery was nearly one-third larger than the American, and yet its working capacity was at the first trial, according to Mr. Wiley, 9 tons less than the American machine in twenty-four hours.

It should be borne in mind these gratifying results of last year's sorghum-cane experiments, achieved by a sugar engineer employed under Mr. Wiley, and which only fell short of absolute success because the machinery built under Mr. Wiley's direction was not large enough, and in other respects not exactly adapted to economical working, were obtained early in October, at least one month before it was necessary to commence experimenting upon the tougher and more obstinate tropical sugar-cane of the Southern States. Nevertheless Mr. Wiley abandoned the Southern sugar interest, and, without even visiting Louisiana, went to Europe, ostensibly in search of better machinery.

In his speech delivered at St. Louis, on the 5th of February, 1886, immediately after his return from Europe, Mr. Wiley gives the following interesting account of his attempt to instruct a European beet-root machine builder in the art of building cane sugar machinery after American plans:

"From Madgeburg I went to Halle, which is the center of the manufacturing interests of that part of Germany. The Halle Company has one of the largest machine-shops in Germany. Here I also had a long consultation with their engineer. We went over, step by step, every process which was necessary to the production of sugar from the cane. I explained to him also what my experience had lead me to believe would be necessary in the way of change from the beet-sugar apparatus to the cane-sugar apparatus, and he, very kindly following me in all this, constructed the draughts of a factory which would be necessary to carry out these modifications. These I have here for presentation to the Commissioner in my written report."

It appears by the above that he had to try and teach a European beet-root sugar-machine builder how to make cane-sugar American machinery. At all events, he did not find any cane-sugar diffusion machinery in Europe suited to the use of the department, for on page 76 of his last report, bulletin 8, he recommends the purchase of more beet-sugar machinery with such American improvements as he may suggest, in these words:

"The best forms of machinery for these several operations I believe will be found in the plans which have been given in this report, plans which have been prepared by the best sugar engineers in Europe, after I had laid before them what in my opinion should be the variations from the common forms of machinery used in the manufacture of beet sugar."

While Mr. Wiley may or may not be a competent chemist, about which I do not pretend to judge, he is certainly not an engineer, or competent to decide as to machinery. This has been fully shown in the debates of Congress—notably in the Senate debate on the 10th instant, and by his obstinate adherence to European beet-root sugar machinery that has everywhere failed when applied to sugar-cane. He has, however, manifested an aptitude for failure to make diffusion experiments upon our tropical sugar-cane in Louisiana, and an utter inability to overcome the most trifling mechanical obstacles.

This is a matter of the utmost importance to the South. The sugar products of Louisiana last year amounted to 134,000 tons. To make this sugar, some 200,000 tons had to be cultivated, harvested, and crushed. Sixty-six thousand tons were wasted by the roller process of extraction, and was used as fuel with the bagasse, while the remaining 134,000 tons found its way into the market.

This enormous waste, 66,000 tons, or 132,000,000 pounds of sugar at 4 cents per pound, amounts to $5,280,000 per year. At least $5,000,000 per year can be saved by the application of diffusion to sugar cane in Louisiana alone.

The possibilities of Florida as a cane-sugar producing State are not surpassed, in my opinion, even in Cuba, but the industry can not be developed without the aid of diffusion.

What is now needed is a couple of diffusion and clarifying machines—one for Western sorghum and one for the tropical sugar cane of the South, which is tougher and of a different texture—each capable of working some 200 tons of cane in twenty-four hours, in an economical manner, and extracting the largest percentage of sugar. It is proposed to have now built a couple of machines of this description. I am satisfied that there are several firms in this country who can build them.

The chief chemist, in sole charge of this business, controlling draughtsmen, engineers, machinists, and constructors, has not yet, with the $218,000 at his command, had such machines built.

There will be plenty of time for experimenting in Louisiana after the 15th of November. The sorghum experiments in Kansas must, however, on account of early frost, be commenced by the 15th of August, or about twelve weeks earlier than will be required for the tropical sugar cane of the South.

I hope, therefore, the Senate amendment, which was reported favorably by two Senate committees and adopted, after full debate, by nearly a two-thirds vote in the Senate, will be adhered to, with a modification, if it is shown to be necessary, providing for the purchase, for sorghum experiments, at a cost not exceeding a sum named, certain specified pieces of foreign clarifying machinery now in New York and in possession of the Department of Agriculture, which are only necessary because there is not time enough to make them before the sorghum season commences, some six weeks hence.

I must, however, earnestly protest against the proposition to allow the Department the sum of $10,000, or any amount whatever, to be expended at the discretion of the chief chemist for any purpose. The Forty-eighth Congress gave him unrestricted control of $113,000, and the sugar industry received two days' experiments on sorghum for the money.

Let the clarifying machine imported for sorghum and now stored in New York be sent to Kansas without delay. But not one dollar should be allowed for expenditures at the discretion of the department, as proposed, either at home or abroad. We have had too much of reckless, unrestricted expenditure already.

The opponents of your valuable amendment were defeated in open Senate. They now seek to defeat us by threats and cunningly devised "modifications."

Mr. Wiley has even resorted to threats, as you will see by the annexed letter of the 27th instant from Mr. Gibbons. I hope they will not be permitted, either by threats or cunning, to obtain in conference committee what they failed to secure on the floor of the Senate.

I understand that the imported sorghum-clarifying machine now in New York has already been paid for out of the $113,000 appropriated for the chemist's division and laboratory by the last Congress.

If such is the case, no modification whatever of your amendment should be allowed. The subject demands the closest scrutiny.

With great respect, I am, sir, sincerely your friend,

J. FLOYD KING.

Hon. WILKINSON CALL, United States Senator, Senate Chamber, Washington.

Replying to Mr. Wiley's statement that I am not sustained in my course in Louisiana, I submit my correspondence with the president and secretary of the Louisiana Sugar-Planters' Association, and the annexed editorial article from the New Orleans Picayune of the 14th instant, without comment.

To allay the apprehension created in the minds of some of our friends by Mr. Wiley that there is not time to make, or even commence, experiments in Louisiana this year, I submit the annexed letter from Mr. G. Gibbons, of Wilmington, Del., a steel and iron steamship and sugar-machine builder of thirty years' successful experience, and the Picayune editorial already referred to.

NEW ORLEANS, April 19, 1886.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of 16th of April, including your correspondence with Mr. Charles C. Johnsen, has been received. I have to thank you for your kind attention in sending it to me. I was not at all prepared for anything of the kind. Your reply is perfectly unanswerable, and if it meets your entire approval, I will have it read to the Sugar-Planters' Association at their next meeting. Several of our members are making constant efforts to find some one who will suit the purpose as an experienced chemist to assume the management of the diffusion apparatus, but so far without success.

Yours, truly,

D. F. KENNER.

Hon. J. FLOYD KING, Washington.

HOUSE REPRESENTATIVES, Washington, April 22, 1886.

To Hon. DUNCAN F. KENNER,
President Sugar-Planters' Association, New Orleans, La.:

You have my cordial consent. Use letter to Johnsen at your discretion. I only desire to promote sugar interests of Louisiana to best of my ability.

J. FLOYD KING.

The letter was read, as requested, and printed, as is shown by the following from the secretary of the association:

[Louisiana Scientific Agricultural Association, Professor W. C. Stubbs, director sugar-experiment station, Kenner, La.]

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, 6 CAMP STREET,
New Orleans, La., May 28, 1885.

DEAR SIR: At the regular monthly meeting of the Louisiana Sugar-Planters' Association the following resolution was unanimously passed:

"Resolved, That the very interesting letter of General KING, and his defense of the sugar industry of Louisiana in the matter of diffusion, be published for the benefit of the planters not present to-night."

Yours, respectfully,

J. Y. GILMORE, Secretary.

Hon. J. FLOYD KING,
Washington, D. C.

NEW ORLEANS, June 22, 1886.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of June 19 has been received and contents duly noted. The Sugar-Planters' Association never in the slightest degree intended to object to the use of American material and American mechanics in the construction of the diffusion apparatus. The only point that we took exception to was the limitation of time in confining the experiment to this season. However, it seems that this matter is so much better understood in Washington city than in Louisiana that the inference is we were mistaken.

Respectfully, yours, &c.,

D. F. KENNER.

Hon. J. FLOYD KING,
Washington, D. C.

WILMINGTON, DEL., June 19, 1886.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your inquiry, we have to say that there will be no trouble whatever about completing a diffusion plant for Louisiana, and have it set up ready for operation by November 1, including the vacuum evaporators, filter presses, and carbonation apparatus, provided the order can be given by the 1st of July. If the order is given later the delay and setting of the machinery will be proportionately delayed.

Yours, truly,

THE PUSEY AND JONES COMPANY,
By WILLIAM G. GIBBONS, President.

Hon. J. FLOYD KING,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

WILMINGTON, DEL., June 27, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: I write to thank you for your able, clear, and unanswerable argument made on the 25th instant before the Committee on Agriculture. I regret exceedingly that a most urgent matter called me to New York on that day. I might, had I been present, have submitted some minor points, but am sure could not have supplemented what you have done to any great degree.

When the chief chemist threatened that the apparatus for sulphuration and carbonation, which we did not make along with the other parts of the apparatus intended for Kansas because of an arrangement with him that the department would supply it, should not be sent to the Parkenson Sugar Company if the Senate amendment was adhered to, I felt that the success of the adventure in sorghum had received a savage stab from those who should have been the last to assault it. This will explain my anxiety as expressed to you, and my wish to do anything in honor to avoid so great a calamity.

As there seems to be a doubt among some of the friends of the sugar interest that proper apparatus can be had in this country to fully demonstrate the profitableness of the process of diffusion, I particularly desire that you and Mr. Gay should see the plant we have made for the Parkenson Sugar Company, of Kansas, and to that end I invite you to come here any time before Thursday evening next and inspect it. After that date we must ship it, that it may be ready by the beginning of the season for sorghum cane, say August 10 proximo. I shall also then have opportunity to convince both of you of the easy certainty of having the experiment tried in a large way in Louisiana this year, notwithstanding the positive assertion of the chief chemist that it is impossible.

Again thanking you for your able efforts in the interest of diffusion,

I am, very truly, yours,

WILLIAM G. GIBBONS.

Hon. J. FLOYD KING,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

[From the New Orleans Picayune, June 14, 1886.]

THE SENATORIAL AMENDMENT OF THE AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION A GREAT IMPROVEMENT.

The decision of the Senate that the experiments in the manufacture of sugar shall be made this year, and with machinery constructed in America, is eminently wise and patriotic. Even if we admitted that in the construction of certain machinery Europeans have the advantage of greater experience and opportunities over us, it would be entirely too late now to order the machinery required for these experiments from Europe, and if it were done, nevertheless the machinery would certainly come too late for this season. This would be a capital fault, for, as one of our Senators very justly observed, "the experiments contemplated in the manufacture of sugar must be made within a short time or would be of no use."

The main fault in former years has not been that these appropriations were made too late, but that after they had passed, in 1884 especially, not a single move was made for the judicious expenditure of the money; indeed, it looked very much as if the Department did not know exactly what to do with it.

Since then such a vast amount of information has been collected from all parts of the world that there can be little wanted to complete our knowledge on this subject. And there could, consequently, nothing more be learned worth knowing in regard to diffusion. With that information and a more perfect understanding of the problem as a basis, we are sure there must be more than one American constructor or engineer entirely competent to manufacture the machinery needed.

As to the supplementary machinery, such as a limekiln, carbonic-acid generators, pumps, and saturators, which heretofore have been but rarely used in the cane-sugar industry, though now intended to form a part of these experiments, its descriptions and drawings in detail can be found in all the standard works on sugar manufacture. This machinery is quite simple, and there can be nothing in it that American manufacturers could not understand. The modern cane-slicing machines are not a foreign invention, and we surely need not go to Europe for them.

Since the final passage of this appropriation, with its valuable amendments, seems to be a certainty, the wisest way of using it to the best practical advantage ought to be considered at once.

Pending the final decision upon the appropriation, the plans for Louisiana ought to be made now, so that at least by the 1st of July actual work can be commenced. While the machinery is being made, which we are assured can be done in about two months, the foundations for the apparatus can be laid and the masonry finished. When this part of the work is prepared the erection of the machinery can be accomplished within eight or nine weeks also.

There are still fully four months before us in which much can be done with concerted action. If everything should be ready on the 1st of November, or by the middle of that month at the latest, we would still have the best part of the next season at our disposal, and six or seven weeks of actual experimenting would certainly be sufficient to demonstrate all that it would be most desirable to show.

We understand that one of our most progressive planters, one who has always shown the greatest aptitude and inclination for improvements, has declared his willingness to meet the views of the department in every respect, and to provide his already very complete sugar-house with whatever might still be required to make these experiments an entire success. All that is needed is promptness of decision and an energetic execution.

The report was concurred in.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. Before any suggestion is made in reference to adjournment I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the importance of passing the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill at as early a day as practicable.

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall ask the Senate to-morrow to sit here until the bill is completed. I think if we work assiduously we can finish it to-morrow. So with that understanding I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator a question before that motion is made. I ask him to state whether if the bill is passed to-morrow, the last day of this fiscal year, it can then be signed by the President in time to obviate the necessity of the passage of one of these temporary appropriation bills?

Mr. ALLISON. I think not; and I will say respecting that necessity that in the nature of things to-morrow the two Houses will be obliged to pass a joint resolution extending the appropriations of the current year until this bill, the naval bill, the sundry civil bill, and the District of Columbia bill also, shall become laws. I say that on the assumption that the bills which have just been agreed to will become laws to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. When did the legislative bill reach the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. I think about ten days ago. I have the exact date——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to know.

Mr. ALLISON. This bill reached the Senate on the 17th day of June.

Mr. EDMUNDS. More than six months after Congress met.

Mr. ALLISON. This bill reached the Senate on the 17th day of June and the Committee on Appropriations took it up the moment the bill was printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And within thirteen days of the time when the annual appropriations bills run out.

Mr. ALLISON. And I will say that the most important of these appropriation bills were not sent to the Senate until the month of June. So that it seems to me whatever responsibility may rest upon the two Houses of Congress for the necessity of passing a joint resolution extending the appropriations of the current year can not in any sense rest upon the Senate. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 30, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 29, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SCHOONER OUNALASKA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith inclose a report from the Secretary of State, with its accompanying copies of papers, relative to the case of the American schooner Ounalaska, which was duly condemned by the Government of Salvador for having been employed in aid of an insurrection against that republic, and was subsequently presented to the United States. It seems that an act of Congress accepting the gift on the part of this Government is necessary to complete the transfer, and I recommend that legislation in this sense be adopted. It further appears that one Isidore Gutte, of San Francisco, has sought to obtain possession of the condemned vessel, and I therefore suggest that a second provision to the law accepting her be made giving authority to the Court of Claims to hear and determine the question of title.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, June 28, 1886.

CLAIM OF S. A. BELDEN & CO. AGAINST MEXICO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication, with accompanying paper, from the Secretary of State in relation to the distribution of the award of the late Mexican Claims Commission in the case of S. A. Belden & Co. against the Republic of Mexico.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, June 28, 1886.

TRUST FUNDS AND UNEXPENDED BALANCES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, in response to a resolution of the House calling for information concerning trust funds and unexpended balances in the custody of the several Departments; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. HANSON VS. UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the House, a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office concerning a decree of survey in the case of John H. Hanson vs. The United States in the United States circuit court, northern district of Florida, with an estimate of the cost of the survey; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TERMS OF COURT IN COLORADO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3014) to provide for the terms of court in Colorado, with Senate amendments; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following bills of the Senate; which were read twice, and referred as follows:

The bill (S. 2609) granting a pension to Emily J. Stannard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2721) to remove the political disabilities of John K. Mitchell—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 2759) to remove the political disabilities of William H. F. Lee—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina, for three days, to attend the funeral of Hon. David Davis.

To Mr. BOUND, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. WARD, of Illinois, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HIESTAND, for two days, on account of important business.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a report from the committee of conference on the pension appropriation bill. I ask the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate amendments to the bill of the House 5201, making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the House recede from its agreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

R. W. TOWNSHEND,
WM. L. WILSON,
JOHN D. LONG,
Managers on the part of the House.
JOHN A. LOGAN,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The following is the statement accompanying the report:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill making appropriations for the payment of pensions for the fiscal year 1887 submit the following written statement in explanation of the action recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The effect of the action recommended on the Senate amendments is as follows:

On amendment 1: The amount appropriated for fees of examining surgeons will be $821,000, being $321,000 more than was contained in the bill as it passed the House.

On amendment 2: The use of the penalty envelope will be extended to the pension agents for official business by the insertion of the following language: "And hereafter the provisions of section 3 of the act approved July 5, 1884, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes,' are hereby extended and made applicable to all official mail matter of agents for the payment of pensions."

The total amount appropriated by the bill will be $76,075,200.

R. W. TOWNSHEND,
WM. L. WILSON,
JOHN D. LONG,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman inform us how much the appropriation is increased?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It was increased in the Senate $320,000 for the payment of the fees of the pension examining surgeons for the next fiscal year.

Mr. BURROWS. You became satisfied that that increase ought to be made?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I became fully satisfied from an interview with the Commissioner of Pensions, and from other information that the estimate was too low and that this amount was needed.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar the bill H. R. 8330.

The SPEAKER. Is that a public bill?

Mr. LANHAM. It is the bill for the recoinage of the trade-dollar.

Mr. MORRISON. Regular order!

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department from the further consideration of the resolution introduced June 21, 1886 (Miscellaneous Document No. 350), and to put the same on its passage.

The SPEAKER. The motion to put the resolution on its passage can not be entertained. The gentleman has a right to move to discharge the committee.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the Speaker hear me on that point?

The SPEAKER. I will.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, by reference to page 434 of the Digest, I find that a motion to discharge a committee from the further consideration of a resolution of inquiry not reported within one week from the date of its reference is a privileged question—a privileged question, no doubt, as against the committee.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman included more than that in his motion. He moved to discharge the committee and to put the resolution on its passage. When the committee is discharged then the resolution is before the House, but the question of consideration can be raised against it by one member. The gentleman can move to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the resolution. That will bring the resolution before the House, and then, if the question is made, the House will determine whether it will consider it or not.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, if the motion to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the resolution of inquiry prevails then is not the resolution itself a privileged matter?

The SPEAKER. It is, and it is then before the House; but still the rule of the House allows any gentleman to raise the question of consideration against it. The authority read by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER] states the parliamentary law correctly. The gentleman may move to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the resolution, but that is the extent of his motion.

Mr. GLOVER. I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to discharge the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department from the further consideration of the resolution to which he refers.

Mr. LOWRY. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Missouri is not in a position to trouble the House with any such question.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAYNE. Is this proceeding by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged motion, to discharge the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department from the further consideration of a resolution of inquiry which, under the rule, should have been reported back to the House within one week.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, can we have the resolution read?

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not before the House; it is still in the committee.

Mr. DUNHAM. We can not well vote upon the resolution unless we know what it is.

Mr. LOWRY. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have the floor. I repeat, sir, that the gentleman from Missouri is not in a position to trouble the House with any such question as that which he has raised; neither is there any occasion for the motion which the gentleman has made. At the time he was about to introduce the resolution in question he consulted with me in reference to the matter and as to the course which he should pursue for the purpose of getting it before the House. At a subsequent time I had a further interview with the gentleman, in his seat here, in regard to the time when the resolution would be acted upon by the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and I then explained to him that as a member of the Committee on Elections I was engrossed with the examination and consideration of a pending case of a tedious and prolix character, and that it would not be convenient to call the committee together for the purpose of considering his resolution until we had disposed of that case, which was to be voted upon yesterday. This was fully understood between the gentleman from Missouri and myself. His response was, "All right;" and at a subsequent time, in reply to an inquiry by me as to whether or not it would be satisfactory, he responded in the affirmative. Since then I have had no conversation with the gentleman, the distinct understanding then being that he should be informed of the time when it would be convenient to call the committee together, which would be some day this week, for the purpose of considering his resolution. Now, sir, I submit that it would be highly improper, would be doing gross injustice to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department and permitting the gentleman from Missouri to act in bad faith toward that committee, to undertake to discharge it from the consideration of the resolution under these circumstances. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GLOVER. I ask that the resolution be read.

The SPEAKER. It can be read in the time of the gentleman as a part of his remarks.

Mr. GLOVER. Very well; I call for the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas heretofore the United States recovered a judgment for $25,000 against Richard D. Lancaster in the circuit court for the eastern district of Missouri; and

Whereas the said Lancaster a short time prior to said judgment conveyed all his property to his brother-in-law and his business partner and that partner's brother, and thereupon procured a settlement with the United States for the sum of $500, and thereupon received back his said property from the temporary holders thereof; and

Whereas the said transfers are fraudulent upon their face, and if merely colorable, the affidavit filed by the said Lancaster alleging his total insolvency was false, and the said settlement was procured by fraud, conspiracy, and perjury on the part of said Lancaster; and

Whereas in that case the said fraudalent settlement can and should be set aside, and the entire amount of said debt can and should be recovered to the use of the United States; and

Whereas the United States district attorney of the eastern district of Missouri has been lately investigating, under the order of the Secretary of the Treasury, the said frauds committed by said R. D. Lancaster upon the revenue of the United States; and

Whereas he discovered such evidence of fraud as justified him in demanding power to put the parties implicated under oath, and therefore applied to the Department for the detail of a clerk for that purpose under section 183 of the Revised Statutes, which reads as follows:

"Any officer or clerk of any of the Departments lawfully detailed to investigate frauds on, or attempts to defraud, the Government, or any irregularity or misconduct of any officer or agent of the United States, shall have authority to administer an oath to any witness attending to testify or depose in the course of such investigation."

And whereas, for reasons which can only be surmised, this demand was refused:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to furnish this House with a statement of what reasons, of a public nature, induced him to refuse, on the demand of the district attorney, the usual and necessary means provided by statute for the investigation of frauds upon the revenue laws, including the detail of a clerk requested by him; and also that the Secretary of the Treasury transmit to the House copies of all papers relating to the investigation in question and the correspondence of the Department with the district attorney at Saint Louis; and

Be it further resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to advise this House what reasons, of a public nature, at present exist why the Treasury Department should not make a thorough examination, under oath, of the parties implicated in, and having knowledge of, the subject-matter of said investigation.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, I deem it due to myself as well as to the gentleman from Indiana to state that upon the facts as he gives them no doubt it would not be in order and possibly not in good faith for me to call up this resolution at this time. But, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is entirely in error as to the facts.

I failed upon an interview with the gentleman who is chairman of the committee to which the resolution was referred to interest him in it in the slightest degree. After that I learned from the gentleman, the chairman here, that engagements of an important kind prevented present consideration by the committee of the resolution; and the gentleman told me, as he states, that an election case of gravity and importance engrossed his time, and that this resolution could not be brought up before the committee until after Monday. I took the statement of the gentleman, not being called upon either to assent or dissent, and had in mind the fact that within one week the resolution could be up before the House. Now, I do not undertake to charge bad faith; I do not think it is polite or parliamentary or kind. I concede he may have been mistaken. Indeed I am willing to concede that he was mistaken as to what occurred. But I say to this House, as between him and me, that I have stated all that did occur.

Now, sir, that resolution states the subject-matter, and I have before me here the affidavit of the judgment debtor, which I will not read before the House. It is sufficient to say (and I will incorporate it in full in my remarks) that it bears out the resolution that upon distinct statements, fortified by affidavits, the Government authorities were given to understand that this party did not own a dollar in the world, and on that basis, and that basis only, a compromise was made.

The United States Government recovered judgment against him for $25,000. When it became evident that he was to be sued by the Government his property began to undergo strange and bewildering transformations; and I desire to send to the Clerk's desk to be read a memorandum of these conveyances, which will speak for themselves. The complete abstract which I have here I will incorporate in my remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMPTON AVENUE RESIDENCE.

When the bond was signed this property was unencumbered. While suit was pending by the Government, and just thirteen days before judgment, the property, which cost the judgment debtor $10,000, was encumbered by a deed of trust for $3,150. At the marshal's sale, by satisfying the Government debt, this property was bought by Pierce D. Keating for $63. (Keating was a brother-in-law of Lancaster.) He conveys the property back to the judgment debtor after the compromise with the Government, and the judgment debtor's obliging partner turns up in possession of the mortgage under a deed of trust, and obligingly releases it. During all this time the judgment debtor lives in the house and is undisturbed in his possession, and lives there now.

PROPERTY IN DEAN'S ADDITION.

At the signing of the bond this property was encumbered by a mortgage. This mortgage was satisfied, but to prevent accidents another substituted for $15,000, at three years' due, therefore in 1879——

Mr. HAMMOND (interrupting the reading). I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. I submit that this is not in order under the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The SPEAKER. It is not. There is nothing before the House except the simple motion to discharge the committee. The merits of the resolution pending before the committee are not before the House for discussion. The gentleman states that the resolution was introduced more than a week ago and has not been reported back by the committee. That makes the motion to discharge the committee a matter of privilege; but there is no other question before the House.

Mr. GLOVER. Am I not entitled to discuss the motion?

The SPEAKER. Not on the merits of the resolution.

Mr. BLAND. I understand that the chairman of the committee had an understanding with my colleague to give him a day or a hearing before the committee. Now, I am somewhat astonished that the gentleman has seen proper to come in this morning and submit his motion. I understand this is a matter of investigation by the committee and that the committee was to be called together to determine it.

Mr. GLOVER. That matter has been discussed in the absence of my colleague from Missouri. I now desire to submit to the Chair whether or not I am entitled to the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is in order to discuss the motion to discharge the committee, but not to discuss the merits of the proposition pending before the committee. That question will come before the House when the committee is discharged and the resolution is taken up for consideration.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. In the discussion of the motion of the gentleman to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the resolution, is not the discussion to show the importance of considering that resolution germane to the motion?

Mr. BLAND. Certainly not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to show it is important, but not to show that the allegations are true or false, but that this is a proper subject to be investigated. It is competent to show that the committee has not reported back the resolution within the time required by the rule. But the resolution itself is not yet before the House either for discussion or to be voted upon.

Mr. BLAND. It would be very unfair indeed to take up in this one-sided way a subject-matter of this sort that can be answered so as to show there is nothing in it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that neither side of the question as to the merits of the resolution can be discussed now when a point of order is made.

Mr. HAMMOND. That is the point I made. This is not a question now between those who think the resolution ought to be adopted and those who think it ought not to be adopted. The simple question is, shall the committee be discharged under the rules of the House?

Mr. GLOVER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. How long have I to discuss the proposition which the Chair has stated?

The SPEAKER. One hour.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment a detail of the facts connected with this case which involve an inquiry into a gross fraud on the revenue of the United States is of importance and has a bearing as a matter of argument upon the question whether the committee shall be discharged and the House proceed to consider the resolution; and if that be an error of judgment, I have never seen a ruling which made any other person than the gentleman upon the floor the judge as to whether his arguments were pertinent or not. That, it seems to me, must be left to the soundness or the infirmity of his understanding.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is of the utmost importance—and I will not at this moment ask the Clerk to continue the reading of the memoranda which I gave him—it is of the utmost importance that these things should be considered by this House at this time if any good is to come to the Treasury of the United States by this investigation. Therefore I say that these memoranda in regard to three of these transfers show that a very few days before judgment in favor of the United States was recovered the judgment debtor conveyed to members of his family enough property——

Mr. BEACH. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is now discussing the merits of the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state again that in the judgment of the Chair it was entirely competent for the gentleman from Missouri to have the resolution read in his time as part of his remarks to show what it was and to what subject it related. But the Chair can not see how the gentleman can proceed under the rules of the House to discuss the merits of a proposition which is not before the House. While it was proper that the resolution should be read to show its subject and to enable the House to determine whether or not it would discharge the committee from the further consideration of that subject, that does not give any gentleman a right to make an argument at this time upon the resolution itself either in favor of or against its adoption, because it is not now before the House.

Mr. GLOVER. Well, Mr. Speaker, I shall address myself, so far as I understand the ruling of the Chair, to discussing the importance of taking this resolution out of the hands of the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department and putting it before this House. I will state that it involves a charge of fraud upon the United States revenue. It involves a claim against the party implicated for a quarter of a hundred thousand dollars. All delay such as would occur in the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and all delay such as may occur and such as in the usual course of events does occur not only before that committee but before any committee of this House pressed with business, would tend to endanger final recovery and require that immediate action be taken lest the judgment debtor who now possesses the property he once conveyed for the purpose of defrauding the United States should convey it again, and the United States Government be thereby deprived of its revenue.

Mr. Speaker, before submitting to this House that inquiry, and before yielding to the suggestion that no arguments are now admissible going to show that this alleged fraud is a fact, I desire to have one letter read which I think will be persuasive to members of the House to call up this matter now and pass upon it.

Mr. BLAND. Now, I insist that is a proper matter of investigation for the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what the letter is.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Does this man now occupy a public office?

Mr. GLOVER. I regret to say he does.

Mr. REED, of Maine. When was he appointed?

Mr. GLOVER. Very recently.

A MEMBER. What is the office?

Mr. GLOVER. It is the most important office in the Mississippi Valley—surveyor of the port.

The Clerk read as follows:

SAINT LOUIS, April 19, 1886.

DEAR SIR; Your letter of the 17th just received, and from its purport I judge that you were not in the best of humor when you dictated it to your secretary, as I failed to find one friendly word in it.

You very tersely ask me to explain why I did not send you a copy of the letter which was mislaid, and also complain that I made no reference to said letter (or copy) in my letter of the 14th. In my letter to you, dated either the 30th or 31st of March, I fully explained to you the reason of my not being able to write you sooner; and I, supposing you received that letter, was satisfied that I had done all that was possible in the matter up to that time, and your failure to answer my letter of the above date was the reason I wrote on the 14th; also in not referring to the copy of the mislaid letter. As I explained to you in my letter of the above date, that is March 30 or 31, I tried hard to procure you more substantial evidence than mere hearsay to present the committee with in the shape of a letter from the son of John Busby, showing conclusively that Lancaster was interested with his father and a man named Curran in the illicit distillery seized by the Government of the United States in the fall of 1876.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. That letter is a part of the discussion of the merits of the proposition. I have waited until the letter disclosed that fact.

Mr. TAULBEE. On that question of order I desire to state that I have no personal knowledge of the facts of this investigation. If this matter is to be tried before the House for its action on the motion to discharge the committee, I certainly shall be governed in my action by such information as that to be derived from this letter. I consider it germane to the motion.

Mr. BLAND. If he is allowed to proceed the House will necessarily be governed in its action by entirely ex parte statements.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know whether the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER] intends to discuss the merits of the charge against this gentleman or not. But it must be evident to every one that the merits are not yet before the House for discussion. If the House shall discharge the committee the resolution will come before the House and be considered, unless the House by vote refuses to consider it. If the resolution shall come before the House, then all these matters will be in order.

Mr. TAULBEE. If I understand the status of this motion it is to discharge the committee from further consideration of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. That is the motion.

Mr. TAULBEE. The effect of that will be to take the resolution to the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. It will bring it before the House.

Mr. TAULBEE. It appears to me any question touching the importance of this matter is in order in the discussion of this motion.

The SPEAKER. For what reason? The Chair will again state the position of the matter. The resolution was offered in the House more than a week ago, and was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department. That resolution has not yet been reported, and this fact constitutes the entire foundation of this motion.

Mr. TAULBEE. I understand the Chair to call on me for a reason for my statement. One of my reasons is that if we are called to take action on a question in which is involved no interest of the Government, nothing which affects the public interest, certainly we would refuse to consider it. But if the nature of the charge and the investigation is shown by these arguments and documents to be such as to make it important in the public interest that we take action, then certainly I would be governed in my vote by that consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is wholly unable to see why the committee should not comply with the rule of the House and report back the resolution within a week, no matter what the merits may be. The rules of the House require the committee to report back the resolution within a week either favorably or unfavorably, without regard to its merits.

Mr. LOWRY. I desire to suggest in connection with what the Chair has just stated that the committee surely will not be discharged if there should exist some sufficient reason why it should not be; as, for example, an understanding or agreement with the mover of the resolution that he should have a day to suit his own convenience on which the question should be considered by the committee.

Mr. GLOVER Which agreement never existed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair expresses no opinion on that question. The Chair has simply referred to the duty of the committee under the rule of the House to report back the resolution within one week.

Mr. REED, of Maine. And that is a rule of the House which can not be suspended by an agreement between any two gentlemen. It can only be suspended by the whole House. What the House is interested in is the purity of the official.

Mr. LOWRY. If entitled to the floor——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GLOVER. I decline to yield further, and ask the Clerk to proceed with the reading of the letter. That is a letter from the brother-in-law of the party implicated, and shows him not only to have been concerned in this fraud but to have been implicated in the whisky ring itself. This is a question of a fraud on the revenue of the United States; and I do not understand what is the cause of the newly awakened interest of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LOWRY], nor why he should object to the examination of a fraud upon the revenue of the United States.

Mr. HAMMOND. I insist on the point of order. The reading of that letter, so far as it has proceeded, has disclosed that it is simply excusing somebody for not having furnished evidence on the merits of the transaction. I know nothing in the world about the facts in this case and do not care anything about them. The committee has failed to report under the rules. Therefore it was a privileged question to call up in order to ascertain whether the committee should have longer time to consider the resolution or whether it should be discharged from its further consideration. I know nothing about the controversy, or as to which of these gentlemen is in the right. There is a certainly a misunderstanding between the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER] and the gentleman from Indiana, the chairman of this committee. Which is right I do not know nor do I care.

The whole fact is this, that a committee through some misunderstanding, because, as they allege, a more important matter referred to them by the House prevented consideration of this resolution within the week, has failed to consider and report it under the rule. Having failed to report within the week, they would certainly be compelled by propriety now to report as early as possible. Therefore there should be no argument on the merits of this question. When the resolution is reported it will be then time to discuss the merits.

Mr. GLOVER. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. HAMMOND. I am discussing the question of order.

Mr. GLOVER. I will not yield to the gentleman unless on the understanding that this is not to be taken out of my time.

The SPEAKER. It will not be taken out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. HAMMOND. The whole idea I desire to present is that in the teeth of three rulings of the Speaker on the question of order the gentleman from Missouri persists in forcing the merits of the question before the House. That is certainly out of order.

The SPEAKER. The reading of the letter has been nearly concluded, and it is somewhat difficult to determine whether it really relates to the merits of the resolution or not. The writer simply states that he has certain information. The Clerk will conclude the reading of the letter, but the Chair adheres to the ruling that the merits of the resolution are not before the House.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading, as follows:

The following are the principal points contained in the mislaid letter to you. I was told by P. D. Keating that R. D. Lancaster transferred all his property and, in fact, all valuables possessed by Lancaster, in the fall of 1876 and spring of 1877, to him (Keating) for $1, to be quitclaimed back again to him (Lancaster) such time as the Government ceased to prosecute the members of the whisky ring; I being given to understand that the said transfer was made by Lancaster through fear of his being prosecuted, and his property would be seized by the Government officers for his complicity with the firm of Busby, Curran & Co., whose distillery, on Ninth and Mound street, in this city, was under seizure at that time.

Hoping that my letter of the 14th contained nothing that offended you, and if it is not satisfactory let me know immediately.

Your friend,

MARTIN P. KILLIAN,

Hon. JOHN M. GLOVER,
House of Representatives.

Mr. GLOVER. Now, Mr. Speaker, that statement is injected for the purpose of responding to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], who undertakes to tell this House that there is nothing in this matter, when he has not examined it, when no evidence has been laid before him, when the brother-in-law of the party implicated writes a letter to this House charging him, on the authority of another brother-in-law, P. D. Keating, with more than I have charged him with in this resolution; and when a member of that committee rises on this floor to say there is nothing in that charge it clearly shows a bias, from whatever source derived I do not know; it accounts for the simultaneous interest of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LOWRY] in a question which I could not get the latter to listen to heretofore, and it affords the best possible reason why this matter should be laid before the House at this time. I wish now to make this parliamentary inquiry: If the motion to discharge the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department is adopted will I then have the privilege of making a motion for the consideration of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. The resolution will come before the House for immediate consideration, unless the question of consideration is raised against it and the House determines not to consider it.

Mr. GLOVER. But it will not require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. GLOVER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks for the present, reserving the balance of my time.

Mr. LOWRY. Mr. Speaker, I certainly have no desire for an altercation with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER]. There is no reason why I should court any controversy whatever with him. The only intercourse I have had with the gentleman upon this floor has arisen altogether out of this question. The gentleman came to me prior to the introduction of this resolution and informed me of his having such resolution, which he desired to bring before the House, remarking that he understood that I was the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and that the resolution would properly be sent to that committee. On consultation with him the conclusion was arrived at that the proper course for him to pursue would be to introduce the resolution in the House and ask to have it referred to the committee, and I assured him that it should have full and complete consideration there. At the same time I explained to him how I personally was situated with reference to the business of the Committee on Elections.

The case of Kidd vs. Steele had been pending before that committee for some time, a case which involves the consideration of a large number of individual votes, a most tedious, prolix inquiry, and I confided that information to the gentleman from Missouri as a reason why I could not undertake to call a meeting of the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department immediately to consider his resolution, but it was concluded at that time that the committee could be called together in season to suit his purposes. The gentleman proceeded to tell me that the matter related to an officer in Saint Louis whose name I was unable to recall until I inquired of the gentleman on my right [Mr. BURNES]. This officer the gentleman [Mr. GLOVER] said was accused by him of having been a defaulter to the Government of the United States. He said this man had been an applicant for an appointment to office under this administration, that he had raised that objection to him, but that the man had been appointed by the President notwithstanding the objection, and that since the appointment he (the gentleman from Missouri) had asked of the Treasury Department an investigation in regard to the defalcation charged, but that the Department had declined to make an investigation of the matter. The facts as stated by the gentleman challenged my attention; I thought it a most singular condition of affairs, and I gave him the assurance in the utmost good faith that I would call the committee together for the purpose of considering his resolution and giving him an opportunity to make any showing he might desire to make before the committee. Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman seems to manifest a disposition to insinuate that there is some feeling of interest on my part in reference to this matter.

I have no knowledge whatever of any fact or circumstance connected with the case other than what I have derived in this general way from the gentleman himself; and why, sir, under these circumstances should I hesitate? What are my methods? Are they not known to this House? Have I not had occasion to act here in cases of the most critical character, cases even in which party feeling might have been expected to influence the actions of a member of this House, and has it not been shown in those cases whether or not I am disposed to act upon the principles of rectitude? Is it necessary that I should defend myself upon this occasion from any insinuation made by the gentleman from the State of Missouri, a gentleman who celebrated his début in this House by alluding to his colleague, the generous and gentlemanly member from the city of Saint Louis [Mr. O'NEILL], the chairman of the Committee on Labor, as "a lawyer in the base-ball park, and a base ball player in the law office?" [Laughter.]

Why should I court any controversy with such a gentleman as that? [Laughter.] Now, sir, the simple facts are that not only have I lived up to the letter and spirit of the agreement with this gentleman, but only a few moments before he addressed the Chair for the purpose of calling up this resolution I went to him here in his seat and informed him that I was now ready to call the committee together, when to my astonishment he informed me that he intended to move to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the resolution.

I will say to my friend—and I may be permitted to call him my friend, because I think I sustain that relation to every member of this House, although I have not the honor of his intimate personal acquaintance—I wish to say to my friend from Maine that there is no possible partisan advantage to be gained by allowing the gentleman from Missouri to go upon the line which he proposes on this occasion in regard to the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman. If there is any partisan advantage to be gained from a full, complete, and exhaustive investigation in reference to the career of this officer, his character or attitude to the Government, there will be the most full and ample opportunity of spreading the facts in reference to it before the country through the instrumentality of the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman; and I stand prepared at this moment to call that committee together at any time which the gentleman from Missouri shall suggest in order to afford him the fullest and freest opportunity of making his investigation.

I do not know anything about the attitude which his colleague [Mr. BLAND] occupies in regard to this matter. I know that he is a member of the committee, and on last evening or the evening before that, at Willard's Hotel, in this city, I had occasion to say to the gentleman that I had this understanding with his colleague in regard to this matter and that the committee would be called together some time this week.

Now, it is evident that there is a question of veracity between the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER] and myself. I shall not undertake to exculpate myself from any charge or insinuation on the part of that gentleman, but will take occasion to say that if in future I should have occasion again for any intercourse with him either of an official or personal character——

Mr. GLOVER. I will have a witness.

Mr. LOWRY. I shall take care to have some third person present.

Mr. GLOVER. If there had been a third person present on this occasion the gentleman from Indiana would never have made these statements to the House.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, being a member of this committee——

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LOWRY] a question: How often has the committee of which he is chairman met during this session of Congress?

Mr. LOWRY. I shall follow the example of those occupying the region of country from which the gentleman comes and answer his question by asking another, as to his purpose in propounding that inquiry, and what business it is of his, as he is not a member of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. DUNHAM. I will state that the object I had was, first, because I wanted to know myself, and secondly, I desired the House might know also.

Mr. LOWRY. I desire to respond to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] has the floor. [Cries of "Regular order!"] The regular order is insisted upon, and the gentleman from Missouri has been recognized.

Mr. LOWRY. I simply wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has the floor and the regular order is demanded.

Mr. LOWRY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the residue of my time.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I know that so far as I am concerned—and I think I can speak for every member of the committee—there has been no disposition to shirk the responsibility of an investigation of this matter. I know that the chairman of the committee will bear me out when I say that early last week and for several days I asked him to call his committee together for the purpose of this investigation, and I understood from the gentleman from Indiana that he had an understanding with my colleague not only that the committee would be called together, but should be called to suit the convenience of my colleague in order to give him an opportunity to present to the committee all the facts he might be able to submit. There are several members of the committee on the other side of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUNNELL], the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON]; and I have never heard of any member of the committee, either Democrat or Republican, making any effort to interfere with or oppose an investigation of this matter, or who has not urged it, subject only to the convenience of the chairman, whose other engagements in election cases, as I understand, have prevented him heretofore from calling the committee together to give this matter a thorough investigation.

Now, I do not think the House in the present position of this case will take the matter from the hands of the committee when that committee is now ready and willing to investigate it.

Mr. GLOVER. May I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. BLAND. Certainly.

Mr. GLOVER. Have you investigated this matter?

Mr. BLAND. I am not going into the merits of it now.

Mr. GLOVER. If not, how did you know when you said there was "nothing in it?"

Mr. BLAND. So far as my opinion is concerned I thought there was nothing in it. I am unwilling without any investigation whatever to bring it before the House. I know nothing about it personally. I wish to investigate before I speak on its merits on the floor.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER] to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the resolution.

Mr. GLOVER. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 71.

So the motion to discharge the committee was disagreed to.

Mr. GLOVER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GLOVER. Under the present status of affairs when will this committee be required to report?

The SPEAKER. Under the rules the committee is required to report within one week. A motion to discharge it is in order at any time.

Mr. GLOVER. Within five days from what time is the committee to report under the rules?

The SPEAKER. Within one week from the time of its reference to the committee.

Mr. GLOVER. Why that has already passed. I move, then, Mr. Speaker, that the committee be directed to report the resolution on or before Saturday next.

The SPEAKER. That is not a privileged motion. The privileged motion is to discharge the committee. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BURNES. I rise to report the general deficiency bill from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The rules of the House require a committee to report back a resolution of inquiry within five days?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The attention of the Chair and the House has been called to the fact both by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER] and by the chairman of the committee that this resolution under the rule has been before the committee for the time specified and has not been reported back by the committee.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. My point of order is that the rules require the committee should report back this resolution before the House within five days and that period has passed, and therefore the resolution is now, under the rules, before the House upon the adoption or rejection of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not before the House.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. My point of order is that, under the rules, the resolution not having been reported back from the committee within five days is necessarily before the House without any motion whatever.

The SPEAKER. The effect of the rules is to make it a privileged motion at any time to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the resolution, and that is the motion upon which the House has just decided, refusing to discharge the committee.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. But that motion is in order at any time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not bring the resolution before the House. The House has refused to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the resolution.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. But the resolution has been before the committee for longer than five days.

The SPEAKER. The rule does not discharge the committee, but only makes the motion to discharge a privileged question.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Precisely. [Cries of "Order!"]

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. BURNES, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 9726) to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for prior years, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROGERS. I reserve all points of order on that bill.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. BURNES, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back certain bills and documents; which were laid on the table.

UNITED STATES BARRACKS, BATON ROUGE, LA.

Mr. WHEELER. I rise to submit a privileged report from a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 985) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer the United States barracks at Baton Rouge, La., to the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College, at that place, for educational purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the same.

JOSEPH WHEELER,
G. W. DARGAN,
GEO. W. STEELE,
Managers on the part of the House.
E. C. WALTHALL,
O. D. CONGER,
H. M. TELLER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement accompanying the report is as follows:

The conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill 985 make the following statement of the action of the conference:

It leaves the bill as passed by the House of Representatives, with the exception of formal amendments to perfect the bill.

And adding a section granting to the city of Marquette, Mich., the use of a light-house reservation for a public park, as provided by H. R. 6094, reports favorably from Committee on the Public Lands.

JOS. WHEELER,
G. W. DARGAN,
GEO. W. STEELE,
Conferees on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HIRAM JOHNSTON AND OTHERS.

Mr. RICHARDSON, by unanimous consent, submitted the views of the minority of the Committee on War Claims on the bill (H. R. 2306) for the relief of Hiram Johnston and others; which were ordered to be printed to accompany the report of the committee.

STEAM VESSELS.

On motion of Mr. DINGLEY, by unanimous consent the Committee on Commerce was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2719) amending the laws relating to steam vessels; and the same was referred to the Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. EDEN, for the remainder of this week.

To Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, for to-morrow.

To Mr. BUNNELL, for three days, on account of private business.

To Mr. OSBORNE, for three days, on account of private business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

The motion was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. REAGAN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 965 strike out "ninety thousand" and insert "one hundred and fifty thousand."

Mr. REED, of Maine. The question when the committee rose last night was with reference to the paragraph to which I had called attention on the part of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. I only desire to say in reply that I visited the Navy Department this morning, but was unable to see the Secretary of the Navy, and left inquiries there which will develop the whole matter, I suppose, and later in the day I am quite content to resume consideration of it. I do not object now with any view to evade or avoid its consideration.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That is satisfactory.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN "one hundred and fifty" and insert "two hundred."

Mr. SPRINGER. The estimates of the Department under this item were $300,000, I believe. I understand that the objection to appropriating the amount estimated is that during the first six months of the current year but a small amount has been expended for this purpose. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania state the amount that has been expended under this clause for protecting the public lands?

Mr. RANDALL. In 1885 the appropriation was $75,000. The expenditure during that year was the same amount.

Mr. LONG. Ninety-one thousand dollars.

Mr. RANDALL. The original appropriation of 1885 was $75,000; but in a statement of the Land Commissioner I find that he puts down the appropriation for that year at $100,000, which of course indicates a subsequent appropriation of $25,000 in the deficiency bill. Of that amount $91,000 have been expended. For 1886 $90,000 was appropriated; and for the first six months of the current year there has been expended about $31,000. This shows that there are about $59,000 unexpended for the last six months. I learn, unofficially however, that the expenditure is likely to be up to the appropriation, including the month of June, completing the full year. But I have not any official information on that subject, though I telegraphed early this morning to secure it. I have as yet received no response, excepting, as I have said, unofficially. I always like to have these matters in black and white, and then I can understandingly proceed with the consideration of the items.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the estimates in the Book of Estimates. In this book, on page 229, I find the following:

For the protection of public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, and to authorize the employment of one hundred agents, to be appointed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, $300,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, I know; that is the milk in the cocoanut. There are proposed to be one hundred appointments.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then follows this note:

NOTE.—With the present limited appropriation it is impossible to employ a sufficient number of agents to investigate charges of fraud already made, much less expose and prevent many other fraudulent entries from being made. The appropriation of $75,000, with the deficiency of $25,000, making a total of $100,000, only allowed the employment of an average of twenty-eight agents for a period of nine months and sixteen days, or twenty-two agents for the entire fiscal year. In order to prevent fraud there should be a force of at least one hundred agents constantly in the field, which would require an appropriation of the amount estimated for under this head.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not propose to make any assault upon the Land Office, but I propose to claim for this side of the House that the present administration has simply followed the way in this matter which was pointed out by the Forty-seventh Congress. The bill that passed here a few days since repealing the pre-emption laws has practically the same provisions that were incorporated in an appropriation bill—the sundry civil bill—of the Forty-seventh Congress. Then, for the first time, this legislation originated here, and it originated with Republicans; and I do not propose for one to turn my back upon that policy, having done much to initiate it.

Mr. Chairman, it was well said by the gentleman from Illinois that every single fraud that has been pointed out was discovered by a Republican official. This service that is engaged in the investigation of these frauds was also for the first time provided for by a Republican House. The item was for the first time reported upon the sundry civil bill. We appropriated sufficient money for this service and these men were appointed by a Republican Secretary of the Interior. And, sir, I believe for one the service should be continued; and for one I do not propose to strike it down.

Nor do I understand the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] to object to the policy of the Commissioner of the General Land Office except so far as it applies to agricultural lands. The Western members object to a policy which punishes the innocent with the guilty, and therein the gentleman from Nebraska has my fullest support. The objection of the gentleman from Nebraska is not to the detection and punishment of fraud by Mr. Sparks; it is to the punishment of innocence. Under the Republican administration the Land Commissioner (McFarland) did exactly what, as I understand it, the Western men are willing should be done to-day—that is, let the law take its course. The Republican Land Commissioner did not find it necessary to suspend the issuance of patents in Kansas and Nebraska, thereby striking a blow at the development of those States. The gentleman from Nebraska has shown us that in the region of agricultural land in his State, where lands are in demand and there are many more claimants than claims, and where every one has the right to contest the legality of any claim, that successful fraud is practically impossible, and his statement is confirmed to a remarkable extent by the fact that while there were, as shown by Commissioner Sparks's report for 1885, 37,680 entries of all kinds in Nebraska for that year, there were only 60 cases referred to and investigated by special agents. In view of these facts it is not to be wondered that Western members complain of the wholesale impeachment of the titles and the honor of their constituents. And were it possible to reach the case made out by the gentlemen from Kansas and Nebraska, I should most heartily support them in the effort to relieve the settlers of the West from the hardships of a policy which punishes guilty and innocent alike, and which policy is a departure from the more vigorous and also more sensible and just policy of Mr. Commissioner McFarland.

But I do propose, when this service is taken hold of by gentlemen on the other side for the purpose of creating patronage, nothing more nor less—I propose to resist it. When has there ever been any complaint that there were not enough of these men in the service until it is found that here is a service that does not come within the civil-service rules? And therefore they say, "We will swell it to $250,000 or $300,000 simply for the purpose of obtaining patronage for the Democratic party."

I do not object to gentlemen on the other side pursuing a policy which we inaugurated. That is all right. The policy was all right. There was a little piece of legislation which we put upon a sundry civil bill which has been of immense benefit to the United States; that which prevented the certificates of deposits of money for surveying being received in payment of land except in those districts in which the land was surveyed.

Mr. NELSON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. NELSON. I should be glad to have the gentleman's opinion about the orders of General Sparks.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am not going to discuss the orders of General Sparks. I am not here for that purpose, and that is not my object now. I am up now simply for the purpose of claiming that which is true, that this service, for which our friends on the other side are taking to themselves so much credit, was initiated, was commenced, was first provided for by a Republican Congress. And having said that much, having claimed and established that much, I then go a little further and say that our Democratic friends have jumped on to it not for the purpose of protecting the public lands—oh, no, that is not their purpose, but solely——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BAYNE was recognized and yielded his time to Mr. HISCOCK.

Mr. HISCOCK. They jump on to it with no other object in the world than to grasp patronage; and all this patriotism of my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], much as I respect him, I am compelled to attribute in some degree to his desire to give to the Commissioner of the Land Office the power to appoint citizens of Illinois, Democrats in his district and the districts of other gentlemen, to these offices.

I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to say, "Oh, yes; this pays for so many additional employés; that is the milk in the cocoanut so far as this amendment is concerned." There never has been any claim that there were not enough of these officials in the service until to-day. There never has been any claim but an adequate appropriation has been made for this service; and there is no reason, no propriety in swelling this appropriation to the immense amount which is asked for by gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation and this policy is ours; it belongs to the Republican party, and we have the right to protest against the gentlemen on the other side attempting to seize upon it and to monopolize it for the purpose of obtaining patronage for their personal benefit; and I trust that this side of the House and gentlemen upon the other side of the House that are willing to rise above considerations of patronage will join in voting down all amendments of this kind.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is a little inconsistent with himself. He begins by saying that the Republican party is entitled to the credit of inaugurating this system. Now, if there be any credit whatever attached to it it must be because it subserves some useful purpose. I agree with the gentleman that this system if properly carried out will be useful in detecting and preventing frauds upon the public lands. Not only that, it will be useful in preventing innocent men from being dragged to the courts by marshals and deputy marshals in league with commissioners. I hope that practice in the future will not be as common as it has been in the past. I have had occasion, Mr. Chairman, in the past to examine into this question very carefully. Perhaps no gentleman on this floor has watched the operation of this law with more solicitude than I, because in the district I represent here there have been great wrongs done to citizens by dragging them to courts upon groundless charges connected with depredations upon the public lands. In the State of Alabama in one year, according to my recollection, more than $50,000 were paid out to marshals, mostly for services in connection with these alleged depredations upon the public lands; and I think it will be found, in fact I know it to be true, that in a very large majority of the cases which were brought into court the parties were turned loose without any trial whatever, because the court upon investigating them came to the conclusion that they ought never to have been brought before it. Nevertheless the costs had accumulated all the same, and the Government had the bills to pay. Now the appointment of agents who may go and make an examination of the charges upon the spot before any prosecution is begun has been found to work well, and I believe this amendment ought to be adopted so as to increase the appropriation for the pay of these agents, not only in the interest of economy, but in the interest of justice.

That, Mr. Chairman, is all I have to say upon this subject. As for the charge that this appropriation is proposed for the sake of patronage, that is unworthy to be answered if the facts which I have stated be true, and as to them I challenge contradiction.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] tell me how much money has been expended for this service during the current year?

Mr. RANDALL. There has been appropriated in the deficiency bill and in the sundry civil bill $100,000.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not want this to come out of my time. It is true, as has been said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], that this system of detecting frauds upon the public lands was inaugurated in the Forty-seventh Congress. From that time to this the system has been maintained. Year by year large appropriations have been made for it, and it is a debatable question whether the public interest has not been more seriously damaged by it than benefited. But, however that may be, this force having been maintained for years, there is scarcely an entry of the public lands subject to the least suspicion that has not been gone over by this detective force during these years, so that to-day, so far as public land entries are concerned, they have been raked over, as is suggested by a gentleman on my right, as with a fine-tooth comb. The Department has all the information that can possibly be desired with regard to the entries that have been already made. These agents have been traveling all over the country for several years for the special purpose of detecting frauds or attempted frauds upon the public lands; and now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. COBB. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. RYAN. I can not yield now. I do not wish to be interrupted. As I have said, Mr. Chairman, the Department is now in possession of all the information it can possibly desire in regard to entries already made; yet now, at a time when we have practically repealed every law under which fraud has ever been perpetrated, at a time when the House has passed a bill repealing all those laws except the homestead law, and so amending it that no frauds can be committed under it—for the bill has already passed the Senate, and coming back here only with a slight amendment, it must inevitably become a law before this Congress adjourns—at such a time we are asked to make an additional appropriation for this special detective service. Sir, it is absurd. As was suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], the milk in the cocoanut is apparent.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment, and move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] by making the amount $175,000. I do this for the purpose of making some remarks.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] stated that the object of making this proposed increase was to obtain additional patronage for the Democratic administration.

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes; that is what I said. I do not want any misunderstanding about it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I always quote the gentleman correctly. I never misrepresent. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] has just stated that there is no necessity for this increased appropriation because we have practically repealed all the laws under which frauds could be committed.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is a good reason why the appropriation should not be increased.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I have quoted both the gentlemen correctly, so that there is no need for these interruptions, and I hope the gentleman from New York will keep quiet.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as to the first proposition in reference to patronage, so far as I am concerned I never thought of any increased number of agents that this might require. If the matter of patronage were the question, there are several hundred Republicans now in the employ of the Interior Department who might be turned out at any moment and Democrats put in their places.

Mr. REED, of Maine. And who are being turned out right along.

Mr. SPRINGER. And there ought to be a great many more. I hope the gentleman is better informed than I am——

Mr. REED, of Maine. Of course I am.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman is always better informed than I am; I never assume to know anything in his august presence; I am always ready to bow with the utmost deference to him, because in his judgment he knows all things.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir; I can not yield, because I can not now afford the time.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will yield time to you.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will let you speak when you get the floor. If the purpose were to get patronage we could get it to-day if the Department wanted to act, because there are enough places to satisfy all the Democrats I know of who want places. That is not the purpose.

Nor is the other reason which the gentleman from Kansas urges a good one, because the Land Office is now behind two or three years in the investigation of these titles, and this force will be occupied entirely upon matters connected with frauds which have already transpired. All these investigations relate, and must necessarily relate, to the past, for from the time it was announced that the Democratic party had elected a President there was practically a cessation of frauds upon the public domain; so that now we have to do with those which have already been committed and prevent them from being consummated.

The gentleman from New York claimed for his party the credit of having inaugurated the system, and stated that all these frauds reported had been reported by Republicans. Now, to the extent of those stated in the report of Commissioner Sparks I concede that what the gentleman said was true; and I am only sorry the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] and other gentlemen upon the Republican side have not thus far conceded the existence of these frauds, which were unearthed by their own political friends. I presume that if one rose from the dead to testify to these frauds and warn my friend from Kansas about them he would not believe him. I do not hope therefore to reach his judgment.

But there have been frauds committed; and they have been proven by the highest of Republican testimony; that proof is in the record. In addition to that, the appointees of the present administration are also unearthing great numbers of these frauds; and if my time would permit I could produce quite as much evidence obtained since this administration came in to show the truth of the statements made by the agents of the previous administration.

Now, what I desire to do is to uphold the hands of the Land Department of the Government, to second the efforts of Commissioner Sparks and Secretary Lamar in investigating and exposing the frauds which have been perpetrated upon the public domain and in reclaiming thousands and millions of acres from the fraudulent grasp of syndicates. I want this land to be held for actual settlers. Give us therefore the agents through whom these investigations can be made, in order that we may save as much as possible of this domain which has already been squandered so largely.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I stood here when the appropriations of 1885 were being considered. We found an estimate for $100,000, and I insisted the appropriation should be limited to $75,000, because I believed that amount to be adequate. I remember it was not sufficient. A deficiency appropriation of $25,000 was voted; and $91,000 in all was expended. I am here to-day in the same attitude and with the same purpose in view; that is, not to appropriate unnecessary amounts. No one, I am sure, would be more zealous than myself for a larger appropriation if I believed it necessary for the recovery of some of the public domain. But as we learn from the official figures that but $31,000 was expended for this service during the first six months of the present year, and I am informed no deficiency has been created, I do not see the necessity of appropriating for the coming year any increase beyond the appropriations for the current and prior year. This, so far as I understand, is also the position of the majority of the committee. I hope we shall now have a vote.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the amendment I have offered, and support the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COBB. I desire to occupy a moment in order to correct a statement or two made by gentlemen on the other side who have asserted, especially the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], that all these frauds were found out during the Republican administration.

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, I did not say that; I said they had all been found out by Republican officers—by officers appointed by Secretary Teller.

Mr. COBB. Very well, sir; the gentleman is mistaken in that. These frauds are being ferreted out every day. I will read from the letter of the Commissioner to show that the gentleman from New York and others on his side of the House are greatly mistaken when they say that the frauds have all been found out heretofore.

In many cases the agent furnishes the affidavits of the claimants themselves, in which they swear to their own and their associates' illegal and fraudulent acts. One agent alone within the last four or five months has transmitted to this office the affidavits of entrymen in eighty-three cases in which they admit that they never saw the lands and that they were hired by the agents of the speculators to make the entries.

Mr. HISCOCK. When was the agent who discovered that appointed?

Mr. COBB. He was appointed about a year ago, as I am informed.

Mr. HISCOCK. By whom?

Mr. COBB. By the present administration.

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, no.

Mr. COBB. Well, the gentleman is not so well informed as he thinks he is.

That fraud is going on is shown by the fact there are eighty-three entrymen who make affidavit before this agent they never saw the lands they entered.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not claim that possibly you could not appoint men who would expose fraud. It is barely possible you could.

Mr. COBB. I did not so understand the gentleman. I do not think ordinarily he would make such a statement, although he is in the habit of making far-stretched statements on this floor when you come to compare them with the record. That is all I have to say.

Mr. RANDALL. I dare say there will be frauds discovered. I hope there will be if they exist, but that does not warrant increase of appropriation to the extent of the amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to strike out the last word. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no apology to offer for my opposition to some of the sections and provisions of the bill; nor have I any apology to make for my opposition to the tyranny practiced and the despotism organized in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Nor have I any apology or explanation to make to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] of my business interests or connections, or for what I had deemed it proper to say here or elsewhere. If the gentleman from Iowa were as well or better informed concerning business propositions than he is concerning questions of finance he would understand the facts I am about to suggest to him. It would be perfectly obvious to him that loan and investment companies do not make loans of money to fraudulent occupants of the public lands. He would understand that their entire security for money advanced or loaned would depend upon the good faith and honesty of the entries and occupancy and settlement of the public lands by those to whom their money is loaned. Hence loan companies are not engaged in encouraging unlawful occupancy of the public domain.

I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that the Territory of which the gentleman from Iowa made mention yesterday was settled at a time when there was some respect in the executive offices of the nation for the men who settle upon the prairies of the West and there build up homes for themselves and families, and thereby contribute to the thrift and prosperity of the country. That country was settled, sir, at a time when the settlers upon the frontier were regarded as men of some respectability and worth. It was a time when frontiersmen were not only regarded with respect and confidence but with favor and encouragement. It was in that better time when settlements were promoted and not retarded, and when suspicion and disfavor were not shown to the men who were contributing to the growth and prosperity of these Western communities and laboring to reclaim for the general good the waste places of the far West.

So far as the gentleman's information or experience goes it must have been that which he obtained when he went upon his peripatetic pilgrimage in favor of the repudiation of the sacred obligations of this Government, or when he visited the southern boundary of our State for the purpose of organizing a body of deluded men to take lawless and forcible possession of the Indian Territory. With such information gathered under such circumstances the gentleman from Iowa comes here to traduce and defame the honest settlers upon the prairies of Kansas and Nebraska.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the House briefly to an extract of a speech made by Senator INGALLS in the Senate recently, and what is true as to this man's experience is true as to the experience of hundreds of those who have settled on the public lands of Kansas and Nebraska and other places throughout the West.

I read from Senator INGALLS's speech:

Mr. President, my mails come to me burdened with complaints and lamentations of an afflicted people. I had this morning two letters from homestead settlers in one of the northwestern counties in my own State. One of them, a stranger, said to me that he had taken a homestead upon the public lands in the Oberlin land district; that he had made permanent, lasting, and valuable improvements thereon; that his family were living there; that he had broken the sod for planting corn and grain; and being without money to support his family while his crop was growing he went away from the homestead every Monday morning to an adjoining town, and there he worked as an artisan at day wages until Saturday night, when he returned to his family upon his homestead; and that claim has been reported for cancellation for a violation of the public-land laws of the United States upon the report made by these hired agents of the Interior Department sent out to verify the suspicions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office that this settler is attempting to perpetrate a fraud upon the homestead system of the United States because he has not continuously resided thereon for the period required by law.

As I suggested, Mr. Chairman, that is the experience of hundreds, and I do not believe there is a court of respectability, intelligence, or honesty in this country that will sustain the arbitrary and tyrannical orders issued from the General Land Office for the cancellation of the entries and settlements of these pioneers. I have heard the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CABELL] and others eloquently appeal for the moonshiner and denounce the espionage of the internal-revenue systen but I have not heard a word from them in favor of the protection of the settlers of the Far West. Their whole energy seemed to be devoted to the protection merely of those who suffer from spies and informers of the internal-revenue system, but with them there is to be no protection for the honest pioneer from the litigation, vexation, injury, and wrong precipitated upon them by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and his instructed informers and paid retainers.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate, unless we can get unanimous consent to close it now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want at least five minutes on this proposition.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I should like a minute or two myself to respond to remarks which have just been made.

Mr. RYAN. I think we can arrange by consent to close the debate.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. REAGAN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to further consider general appropriation bills, and pending that that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in fifteen seconds.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish a few moments on this question—a very few minutes—and I suggest the time be extended to five or ten minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. There is not a gentleman who has not spoken two or three times already upon this point. The debate has been very protracted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not occupied any time. I move to amend by making the time ten minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 14, noes 60.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. RANDALL were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 30, noes 134.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the pending amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is in the committee.

The motion to limit debate to fifteen seconds was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate further insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5887) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, further insisted on its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the fifth amendment of the Senate to the said bill, asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. MAHONE, and Mr. BECK as conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to bills of the House of the following titles disagreed to by the House of Representatives, agreed to the conferences asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed in each case as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. BLAIR, Mr. SAWYER, and Mr. WHITTHORNE:

A bill (H. R. 1462) granting a pension to Addie L. Macomber;

A bill (H. R. 3463) granting a pension to Mrs. Hannah Babb Hutchins;

A bill (H. R. 4544) granting a pension to Ann E. Coon; and

A bill (H. R. 7165) to increase the pension of Manhattan Pickett.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. Res. 177) appointing managers for the National Homes for Disabled Soldiers to fill vacancies in the board which occurred by expiration of terms on the 21st day of April, 1886.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to submit a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5887) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

JAS. H. BLOUNT,
J. M. RIGGS,
H. H. BINGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. B. PLUMB,
WM. MAHONE,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the report will be accepted.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOUNT. That report has been already adopted by the Senate, and a request for a further conference has just come in, and I ask that it be agreed to.

The request for a further conference was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. J. M. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, and Mr. BINGHAM as managers on the part of the House.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole was then agreed to.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate is limited to fifteen seconds. The Clerk will read the pending amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the amendment I offered.

Mr. PERKINS. There is an amendment pending which was offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD].

Mr. RANDALL. But the debate is closed.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, but that is a pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph embraced in lines 963, 964, and 965.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Expenses of hearings in land entries: For expenses of hearings held by registers and receivers, under instructions from the General Land Office, to determine whether alleged fraudulent entries are of that character or have been made in compliance with law, $10,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last word. The appropriation of $10,000 for this purpose is not at all important. Indeed, it seems to me that that paragraph might as well be stricken from the bill—for expenses of hearings held by registers and receivers. That whole subject is covered by the preceding paragraph of the bill, and either this ought to be stricken out, or else that sum ought to be added to the preceding amount.

But, sir, I am quite indifferent as to what disposition shall be made of this item. I had moved, contrary to my usual practice in regard to appropriation bills, to increase the amount of a preceding appropriation from $90,000 to $150,000; and I wish to mention a fact of which the committee seem to be entirely unconscious, and that is, that you have never appropriated one-half or any fair approach to one-half of the amount of money that the Commissioner of the Land Office believed to be necessary for the purpose of protecting your land system from fraud. Mr. McFarland, the last Commissioner of the General Land Office, and a very upright and honest man, recommended that the appropriation for the present year should be $400,000 for this purpose.

By the last Republican Commissioner of the Public Lands this recommendation came to us, but Congress appropriated only $90,000, and then the fact came to the knowledge of the House that these frauds which ought to have been arrested years ago were still going on, and that the heritage of the people of this country was passing rapidly into the hands of speculators instead of being retained for the benefit of the people.

I am not surprised that men in your great cities remote from your public-land system, who have not studied the means of retaining the public lands for the benefit of actual settlers, should be indifferent to this subject; but that men from the Western States, those who are interested in seeing to it that the lands are not monopolized in large bodies by speculators, should consent that year after year the responsible officer of the Land Office should call for a fair appropriation to be made which would be adequate for the protection of this property and call in vain, is something I can not comprehend.

And I am especially mortified that an attempt to save the public lands and to sustain the gallant officer at the head of the Land Office should receive so little encouragement on this side of the House; that there seems to be a perfect indifference to the interests of the people in the land question, the greatest by all odds that this House in time of peace has ever encountered.

The last Commissioner asked for $400,000; the present Commissioner asks for $300,000. The frauds have gone on, and during the last year alone a territory equal to the State of Ohio, embracing 26,000,000 acres of land, was absorbed in the countless forms by which the land leaves forever the reach of the American people and goes to jobbers and monopolists. And yet the appeal of the Land Office, sanctioned by the Secretary of the Interior, for a sufficient appropriation for the protection of the public lands against fraud is voted down in a Democratic House of Representatives.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not stand here as the representative of any city or State. I am the representative here of the Committee on Appropriations, and I advocate their voice and their determination. That committee is composed of a membership scattered over the entire Union. They have expressed their views and I obey their order.

I do not arrogate to myself any peculiar knowledge touching the Western lands; but I think I have read a good deal upon that subject and I have listened to as much as I had the opportunity to hear; and that is the reason why I have stood steadily here in behalf of the Committee on Appropriations and against any undue increase of these appropriations.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I think this is a very proper appropriation, as it tends to enable the Department to determine whether the entries have been made in accordance with law or in violation of law.

While I am on my feet I take occasion to say that I have never asked the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] to apologize for his attitude here nor for the business in which he is engaged. I believe it is a legitimate business, but I want to say also in connection with this that I did once visit the city of Wichita, at the invitation of her citizens, to deliver a lecture. Part of my address was devoted to the frauds upon the public domain. After that address was over a large number of the prominent citizens of that city visited me at my room and informed me of the extent to which the frauds on the public domain had gone in that locality. I was very glad to get the information. It confirmed me in the position which I had just taken before the audience in that locality. That was the only time I was ever in the place.

The gentleman charges me also with advising and assisting in organizing an illegal raid upon Oklahoma. I wish to say to him there is not one word of truth in that. But I will inform him that I am the friend of the Oklahoma boomer, as he is called. I am his friend, because I believe him to be a poor man honestly seeking a home upon the public domain. And does the gentleman wish to be understood here before this House as trying to cast, as he has done, reflections upon those honest men? Have not these honest home-seekers obeyed the President's proclamation? Very different from the action of the cattle syndicates who have taken possession in violation of law. We do not find the gentleman raising his voice against the syndicates and corporations that have possession of the public domain.

Mr. RYAN. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I have not time; I have only five minutes.

Mr. RYAN. Why does not the administration remove those cattle syndicates?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Well, you stand near the border, and so does your colleague [Mr. PERKINS], and why are you not here defending the people against the cattle syndicates? But, Mr. Chairman, we never hear a word out of the mouth of this gentleman [Mr. PERKINS] in defense of the people or in condemnation of the cattle syndicates.

Mr. RYAN. Have I not always been the friend of the Oklahoma bill?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Yes, sir; you always have as I believe——

Mr. RYAN. I have repeatedly called attention to the fact that those cattle syndicates were there in violation of law and have repeatedly suggested the duty of the administration to remove them.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. No, sir; I do not yield to you. You rose upon this floor and cast a gross reflection upon those poor people, the Oklahoma boomers, and I hold you to responsibility to your constituents for the assault you have made upon those honest men who are seeking to make homes there.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] if he is not the paid attorney of the Oklahoma boomers, who are organized for the purpose of taking unlawful possession of the Indian Territory?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I will answer the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question before the House.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I move to strike out the last two words. The gentleman wants to know if I am not the paid attorney of the Oklahoma boomers.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate close in one minute.

Mr. PERKINS. I hope the gentleman will allow the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] time to answer.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Yes; I want to answer the question.

I will answer the gentleman. He wants to know if I am not the paid attorney of the Oklahoma boomers here. I answer him, no, sir. On the contrary, without hope, expectation, or desire of any reward whatever, I have contributed, and I will again contribute if necessary, money out of my own pocket to pay the expenses of those defenseless men who were there on that border seeking to obtain homes.

Mr. PERKINS. How long is it since you have been drawing pay as their attorney, representing them in the Departments here in Washington?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I never did, sir, any time in my life, and I would scorn to do such a thing. And now I ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] if he is not the paid attorney of the cattle syndicates, acting for them here to prevent the passage of the Oklahoma bill?

Mr. PERKINS. Instead of being their paid attorney, I have no official, I have no professional, I have no personal connection with any man, and never had, who is interested in a cattle organization. Unlike the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER], I am in favor of the lawful occupation of the Oklahoma country, but I have never deluded those poor settlers upon that subject, and I never taxed them for my support while I was loafing about the Departments at Washington making them believe that I was accomplishing something for them. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Nor have I to the extent of one cent. I will tell the gentleman what he is: His voice is the voice of Jacob, but his hand is the hand of Esau. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] He is the only man who has risen here to cast reflections upon the Oklahoma boomers.

Mr. PERKINS. I have never cast reflections upon the Oklahoma boomers, but I am trying to expose the hypocrisy of one who has deceived and deluded them.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish the gentlemen would find some other place to adjust their differences than on this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries and expenses of agents employed in adjusting claims for swamp lands and for indemnity for swam plands, $15,000: Provided, That agents and others employed under this and the appropriations for "depredations on public timber" and "protecting public lands," while traveling on duty, shall be allowed per diem, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $2.50 per day, and for actual necessary expenses for transportation.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that paragraph that after the word "provided," in line 975, it is new legislation, changing existing law.

Mr. RANDALL. I have only to state that this provides for a reduction of expenditures, reducing the traveling expenses of these agents from $3 per day to $2.50 per day. It is a mere limitation upon the expenditure of the appropriation, and it is inserted at the suggestion of the Commissioner of the Land Office.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I submit that if it is simply a reduction in the price that is provided for then the balance of the proviso is unnecessary.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is recommended by the Commissioner. Heretofore the rate of the allowance has been $3 a day.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not care whom it is recommended by. I am making the point that it is new legislation.

Mr. HOLMAN. It limits the expenditure and reduces the allowance from $3 to $2.50 a day.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am not talking about the $2.50. I am talking about the provision that these men shall be allowed this money in lieu of subsistence and for actual necessary expenses. If that is the law already it was not necessary to insert this provision. If it is not the law then this changes the existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. It has always been regulated in the appropriation bills.

The CHAIRMAN. If this were an original question with the Chair the point of order would be overruled, but precisely a parallel question was raised on the legislative appropriation bill, and it was decided in favor of the point of order, and the decision was acquiesced in by the House. The Chair therefore feels bound by that action and sustains the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, I ask unanimous consent to insert the provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the clause just stricken out on the point of order be inserted. Is there objection?

Mr. CAREY. I desire to offer an amendment in lieu of the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to insert the clause just ruled out. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CAREY. I move to amend by striking out the proviso commencing at line 975 and inserting that which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That agents under this and the appropriation for depredations on public timber and protecting public lands shall be nominated by the President, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appointed for the term of four years; that the number of such agents shall be limited to one to each State and Territory in which public lands are situated. Such agents shall be paid an annual salary of $2,500, payable quarterly, which salary shall be in lieu of all compensation and allowances now made to such agents.

Mr. RANDALL. I make a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. CAREY. I desire to be heard on the point of order. I believe that if the proviso now in the section is in accordance with the rules of the House the proviso which I now offer is also in order. I will state to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations my reasons for offering the proviso, and I hope he will not insist on his objection.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no law regulating this matter except the appropriation bills. The Commissioner of the General Land Office expends this money in the appointment and payment of these officers. Now, the gentleman's amendment proposes to require that these officers shall be nominated by the President, subject to the approval of the Senate, which is certainly new law. Therefore I make the point of order.

Mr. CAREY. Will the gentleman listen to me one minute?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. Chairman, the great objection in my part of the country to the method in which land frauds have been investigated is that the men who are sent there are not large enough. When you send to a country where a good mechanic gets for his labor from $4 to $5 a day, or 50 cents an hour, an officer of the Government who is paid but $2.50 a day, must, unless he is independent of his compensation, either steal or starve.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want him to do either. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CAREY addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent the pro forma amendments will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveying the public lands, $50,000, at rates not exceeding $9 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $7 for township, and $5 for section lines; and of the sum hereby appropriated not exceeding $25,000 thereof may be expended for the examination of surveys in the field to test the accuracy of the work and to prevent payment for fraudulent and imperfect surveys returned by deputy surveyors, and inspecting mineral deposits, coal fields, swamp lands, and timber districts, and for making such other surveys or examinations as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States.

Mr. PETERS. I move to amend by inserting the following additional paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For such resurveys of the public lands as in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior may be considered necessary, $15,000.

Mr. RYAN. That does not relate to this section.

Mr. PETERS. I want to offer it as an additional paragraph, and it comes in right here.

Mr. RYAN. Some of us do not want to depart from that section.

Mr. PETERS. Very well; then I will withhold it for the present.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that he insert his provision as an amendment to what has been read by the Clerk.

Mr. RYAN. I wish to call attention to the fact the bill only carries $50,000 for surveys of the public lands, and $35,000 is devoted to examination of these surveys to see whether they have been correctly made. I submit whether the gentleman from Indiana thinks the amount carried in the bill is a sufficient sum for the service of surveying the public lands.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question before the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out, in line 992, the words "not exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars thereof" and insert what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "not exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars thereof," in line 992, and insert "as far as may be necessary."

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman from Kansas to incorporate into this provision after the word "surveyors," in line 995, the words "and for resurveys." This, with the increased amount appropriated, $50,000, will accomplish the purpose he has in view.

The main object, it seems to me, of this proposition is to procure resurveys and the examination of surveys already made. The great body of the public lands have been already surveyed. It is not likely that any surveys of much importance will be made the coming year, the great body having been already surveyed. It is not desirable, I think, to open up these lands at least for settlement until an entire change occurs, and we do not know it will happen this year in our public-land system. The whole system needs reorganization.

Mr. RYAN. Let me ask the gentleman if it would not be well to dispense with all the expensive machinery, which costs $130,000 a year for surveying the lands—fourteen surveyors-general and all their clerks, rent of offices, and contingent expenses?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly, I agree with the gentleman that it ought to be done; and in the cases of Nevada, Nebraska, and Minnesota, why of course the machinery should be dispensed with. I admit we are not justifiable in keeping up these offices. They are now little more than custodians of the records.

Mr. RYAN. But they are already provided for in the legislative bill of which my friend from Indiana had charge.

Mr. HOLMAN. But my friend will observe that in the case of Nevada instead of $3,000, as fixed by law, for the compensation of the surveyor-general, his salary is reduced to $1,200, putting him upon the footing of a mere clerk. In Nebraska, that State is attached to the Territory of Dakota.

Mr. RYAN. But these are mere bagatelles in comparison with the total expenditures for this service.

Mr. HOLMAN. I agree with my friend from Kansas that the whole subject needs to be reorganized.

Mr. RYAN. The gentleman from Indiana is so familiar with the subject that I take occasion to ask whether in his opinion this service can not be as well performed directly by the Land Office here as through the interposition of these surveyors?

Mr. HOLMAN. Without a shadow of doubt. I am satisfied that within the next year the entire force of surveyors ought to be, and probably will be, abolished.

Mr. RYAN. How does it happen, then, that my friend did not undertake to abolish the system in the appropriation bill of which he had charge?

Mr. HOLMAN. We had different interviews in regard to that question with the Commissioner of the Land Office; and I think, with the better understanding we have now reached, that during the coming year this appropriation can be cut off entirely, and thereby dispense with this whole service, getting rid of the whole body of surveyors-general and this expensive machinery. The only trouble at present is about the records and what is to be done with them.

Mr. RANDALL. The language of this paragraph is in exact accord, as I understand, with what the Commissioner of the General Land Office desired; still, I may be wrong about it, and if the gentleman has any other information——

Mr. HOLMAN. The Commissioner of the Land Office wishes it in the form I have suggested, or he wishes the amount to be increased $25,000. That is the amount necessary to accomplish the purpose for which the $25,000 is here provided.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no special objection to it if it is in harmony with the wishes of the Commissioner.

As to the amount given, I could only say what is well known to most if not all of the members here that the surveys of the public land far exceed the number of acres for which there is any application at present. The amount expended in 1885 was $222,000 out of an appropriation of $300,000. The amount given for 1886 was $300,000; but during the first six months of the current year there have been but $9,000 out of that total amount expended.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield to me a moment. The statement made by my friend from Pennsylvania would hardly be fair to the Land Office. Although it is true that only $9,000 of the $300,000 was expended by the office in the first six months of the present year, yet the Land Office during the entire year up to this time has expended about $150,000 of the entire sum.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman get that fact from the office?

Mr. RYAN. Yes, sir; I have dispatches here from Mr. Sparks, the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, then, will the gentleman explain why the Commissioner of the Land Office should expend only $9,000 during the first six months of the year and $140,000 and over during the last six months?

Mr. RYAN. That is one of the eccentricities of the present administration which I do not understand myself.

Mr. RANDALL. Those eccentricities do not run into the Appropriations Committee room.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. Instead of inserting the words suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] I propose to insert $10,000 where $25,000 is found in line 992.

I desire to say that as this bill is framed and reported we find $25,000 appropriated for making surveys, and then we find $25,000 more appropriated for the purpose of investigating them when made, and then we find $130,000 appropriated to surveyors-general and their clerks to hire this $25,000 worth of surveys to be made. That is the peculiarity of this bill.

Now, instead of appropriating $25,000 for making surveys and $25,000 for the investigation of those surveys when made, I limit the amount for investigation to $10,000, leaving $40,000 of the amount appropriated here to be used for making the surveys of the public lands. And I would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that my information is substantially the same as his, that only $9,000 of the $50,000 appropriated last year has been used in the investigation of these surveys. Until last December, or near that time, no officer was appointed to investigate these surveys by the present Commissioner of the Land Office. He then appointed a brother-in-law, of the name of Pickett, to go down into Arizona and into the mountains of California in the winter season, when there was so much snow that no investigation could be made. Since that time some $9,000 of the $50,000 appropriated have been used, and that is all. I would therefore limit this appropriation to $10,000 to be used for that purpose.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out the last word. I want to see whether or not I understand the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] aright. Here is a force of surveyors-general and their clerks appropriated for in a bill which has passed the House to an amount aggregating $150,000 in round numbers; and the money recommended for them to expend on surveys here is $50,000, with a statement, if I understood the gentleman from Indiana aright, that the only survey to be made or necessary to be made is some resurveys.

Therefore we have this Democratic administration under the lead of the gentleman from Indiana recommending appropriations for and appropriating for a small army of office-holders that he says ought to be abolished; and I think he is sincere in that statement as well as the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to judge from the amount of money that is here recommended for them to expend.

I am not here to controvert those statements, but I am here to say that in view of this admission, coupled with the appropriations, the continuation of this force is most extraordinary. And I think I am justified in making the statement that, in view of the well-known notions of economy manifested through long years by both of those gentlemen, these offices would have been abolished at this session of Congress were it not that they are held there merely for the disbursement of money to people who hold the positions.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. It was not possible to get any change of law on the legislative bill, you will remember, under the rule of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Ah! that is true; but there are various other ways to arrive at it; and I want to say to the gentleman, while the rules of the House prohibit legislation, yet in the interest of economy there are many clauses of legislation on this sundry civil bill——

Mr. RANDALL. Only limitations.

Mr. CANNON. Well, limitations and legislation—in the teeth of the rule, frequently by unanimous consent, and I believe upon this side of the House there would be unanimous consent—for one I would consent—if the gentleman will arise in his place and propose now to do one of two things, either appropriate money to survey the public domain, which they decline to do, or if he will arise in his place and propose by legislation here and now to abolish all these offices of surveyors-general and muster them and their clerks out of office and bring the records here to the Land Office where they ought to be; if he shall do that, I think there will be no opposition on this side of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that as to Nebraska we adopted the policy of consolidating it with Dakota. There are some surveys to be made in Washington and elsewhere. The Senate has stricken out the provision consolidating those two surveyors-general districts. I agree with the gentleman that the surveyors-general can be abolished and ought to be.

Mr. RYAN. I want to state more clearly than perhaps I have done that the law for the current year provides $300,000 for surveying the public lands and devotes $50,000 of that sum to the examination of surveys. In order to ascertain how much of that money had been expended during the current year, a few days ago I addressed a communication to the Commissioner of the General Land Office asking how much had been expended for surveys and how much had been expended for examining surveys. Here is his reply to the question how much has been expended for surveying the public lands in this communication addressed to me dated 21st of June:

Total liability of contracts approved and pending to date $84,000, which amount may be considerably increased by additional awards of surveyors-general prior to the 30th instant, appropriation being available to that date.

So that it may largely exceed $100,000.

In reply to the other question, as to how much of the sum of $50,000 appropriated for the examination of the surveys has been expended, he addressed me the following:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, June 26, 1886.

Hon. THOMAS RYAN:

The amount expended for examination of surveys during the current fiscal year is $35,208. All accounts for June and some other liabilities outstanding will about or very nearly exhaust the appropriation of $50,000 which was allowed to be used.

Both these communications are signed "W. A. J. Sparks, Commissioner."

Mr. HOLMAN. In view of the statement made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] it is quite manifest that the limitation now imposed upon the expenditure of money for the re-examination would not be proper, because the larger portion of this money will of course be expended in the re-examination of these surveys.

Mr. RYAN. I withdraw the formal amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to hear it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed, in lieu of the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN striking out the words "not exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars thereof" and inserting "as far as may be necessary," to strike out "twenty-five thousand dollars" and insert "ten thousand dollars."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] striking out in line 992 the words "not exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars thereof" and inserting "as far as may be necessary."

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 28, noes 6.

Mr. PERKINS. I think I must ask tellers on this amendment. It seems to me that the effect of this amendment is to absorb every dollar appropriated for surveying.

Mr. HOLMAN. If necessary. It leaves it in the discretion of the Commissioner.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. PERKINS were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 52.

So the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally; and Mr. MILLS took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 6395) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 5874) to alter and amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RYAN. I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following proviso: "Provided, That no money appropriated herein, nor any money appropriated elsewhere for the next fiscal year, shall be used to pay the salaries of surveyors-general nor clerks for the same, nor for rents of offices for said surveyors-general, nor for any contingent expenses for them."

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in good faith.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. RYAN. No point of order can lie against it, in my opinion, because it is simply a refusal to devote any portion of the money appropriated here or elsewhere to this particular purpose. It having been determined by the Committee of the Whole House to abandon the policy of further surveying the public lands, it seems to me to be highly proper that we refuse further appropriations to pay surveyors-general, their clerks, their offices, or their contingent expenses, inasmuch as they exist for the sole purpose of surveying the public domain. I submit that we would be subjecting ourselves to very severe criticism if we should take from the Treasury of the United States $130,000 to be paid to officials from whom we can receive no service whatever, because we deny the appropriations that would permit or enable them to perform the service which they are authorized by law to perform. I therefore submit to my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] who always takes a lively interest in economy, and also to my friend the honorable chairman of our committee [Mr. RANDALL], that it is better for us to withhold the appropriation for this vast machinery which we can not utilize for any purpose under heaven.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported. I do not think it was distinctly understood.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. That amendment is subject to a point of order on the ground that it undertakes to go beyond the appropriations made in this bill. I concede that so far as it applies to this bill it would be proper as a limitation. But it affects appropriations made by other bills; for instance, the appropriations made in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, inasmuch as there are appropriations in that bill for the surveyors-general and the clerks under them. I do not think that we can meet the case in this way. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. RYAN. I agree that this amendment operates as a limitation upon the appropriations for this service contained in the legislative appropriation bill; but still it does not operate in any way to change existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it applies to other bills, and is not germane.

Mr. CANNON. As the gentleman from Indiana admits that there is no use for these office-holders, and also admits that this limitation would be in order as applicable to the $50,000 appropriated in this bill, I want to appeal to him not to press the point of order against this amendment, which is directed against the salaries of these suryeyors-general, for whom there is no use. Although those salaries are carried in the legislative bill, I submit that it should make no difference to the gentleman.

Mr. HOLMAN. In order to avoid misapprehension I will say that the gentleman does not state the case quite correctly. There must be legislation in some form or other before you can dispense with these surveyors-general. Although it is the fact that all the lands which ought to be surveyed have been surveyed, so that we have reduced the surveyors-general to the grade of mere clerks, with salaries of $1,200, these officers are still custodians of a body of records. The question is what we should do with those records. I think we should provide by law that they be turned over to the States or Territories in which the surveys have been made; that this great mass of records ought not to be brought here.

Mr. RYAN. That matter, I will say to my friend, is provided for by general law; and the money appropriated here is only for examination of surveys and resurveys, a work which has never been done by the surveyors-general, but always under the immediate supervision of the General Land Office, and very properly, because the object is to correct any abuse or corruption that may have affected the surveys.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that with a better understanding of this matter we can abolish the whole system the coming year.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I believe my amendment now comes up for consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph the following:

"For such resurveys of the public lands as in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior may be considered necessary, $15,000."

Mr. PETERS. A provision similar in terms to this was inserted in the law of 1885 and also in the law for the current year.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] waive the point of order on this?

Mr. PETERS. No point of order can lie against it. As I stated, a similar provision has been inserted in the law for two successive years.

Mr. RANDALL. If I recollect aright the Commissioner told us he did not want this money.

Mr. PETERS. I do not believe in leaving all these things to the Commissioner; and I wish to show the reason why the action of the Commissioner in relation to this matter should not be approved by Congress.

As is well known to all persons who have any experience in relation to the public domain, the surveys made in the early history of certain portions of our country were very defective, and even where they were properly made the monuments marking the various sections and quarter-sections have (by reason of lack of occupation, except for stock purposes and by cowboys) been obliterated or removed. So when this portion of the country came to be taken up under the homestead and pre-emption laws, it was found that in many cases these monuments could not be discovered; they had been removed; there was no evidence at all to indicate the corners of the sections and quarter-sections. Now the object of this provision in the law of 1885 was to place a certain sum under the control of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, so that, upon petition by a number of citizens of a township and upon evidence presented to him showing that these monuments had been removed, a resurvey could be made, thereby enabling the parties interested to determine just where the lines of the quarter-sections upon which they had located were, thus preventing litigation between neighbors.

The present Commissioner at the time he took possession of his office had several of these very questions pending before him. One of them came from my district, having been presented to Commissioner McFarland as late as December, 1884; but because of the rush of business in the Land Office, and of the change of administration soon to be brought about, he did not feel authorized, or did not have time, to go on and approve a certain survey which had been ordered by that administration. When the present Commissioner of the General Land Office came in his attention was called to the matter, and he was asked to approve or disapprove of a survey which had been ordered by the Government. Now mark you what he says in relation to this matter in his letter to me:

Under my predecessor resurveys to a considerable extent were executed and approved without engendering any bad feeling among settlers. Such result may have been due to the fact that the surveyors practically resurveyed the land; that is, re-marked old and obliterated lines, and re-established old and missing corners.

Then he goes on to say that in view of certain facts which he alleges he is—

Of opinion that the General Government should not intervene in questions as to metes and bounds of lands which were originally surveyed under proper authority and titles to which have long passed into the custody of private parties.

He gives that as a reason for not ordering a new survey in the case of an application which I made to him and as a reason also for not approving a survey before made during the administration of his predecessor.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PETERS. I would like just a minute more.

Mr. RANDALL. I will yield the gentleman a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The question of order is pending.

Mr. PETERS. If that is pending, I want to address myself to it.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw the question of order.

Mr. PETERS. Now I wish to finish my statement. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir; I want to give the gentleman another minute; that is all.

Mr. PETERS. In the newly settled portion of my district the monuments of the survey made in 1871 are obliterated. None of these corner-stones can be found. The settlers can not find their lines. They expect the Government to designate the corner-stones so that the metes and bounds of the quarter-sections may be known. And that is all my amendment provides for, that the Government shall make this resurvey so the settlers may know where their lines are.

Unless this appropriation is made the Commissioner of the General Land Office can not and will not do it. I therefore would like to have this provision put in so that when an appeal is made to the Commissioner of the General Land Office in behalf of the settlers on the public lands who have recently gone upon the public lands where the monuments have been removed shall have them restored by a resurvey.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. We appropriated in 1885 $10,000, and of that amount $6,700 was expended. We appropriated for this year $15,000, and none of that money has been expended in the first six months. The Commissioner of the General Land Office has informed the committee that he did not want this money.

The statement of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] goes to show that the expenditure of this money is for the purpose of settling controversies between private individuals.

Mr. PETERS. I concede the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office was made on a case in which there were controversies between individuals.

I wish to say, however, there are cases in which there are no disputes between individuals. This whole township asks for a resurvey because there are no monuments left by which the metes and bounds of their lands can be determined. They agree to abide by whatever the resurvey may determine.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no estimate, and the Commissioner tells us he does not want the money. I think, therefore, it is safe not to appropriate it.

Mr. PETERS. I demand a division on the amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 54.

Mr. PETERS. I demand tellers.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that demand.

Mr. PETERS. I will withdraw the demand.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For survey of confirmed private land claims in New Mexico, at rates prescribed by law, $3,000.

For survey of confirmed private land claims in California, at the rates prescribed by law, including office expenses, $2,000.

For survey of confirmed private land claims in Louisiana, at the rates prescribed by law, $4,000.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I invite the attention of the committee to the paragraph which I propose to insert after line 1007.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, after line 1007, the following paragraph:

"For completing the survey of the grant known as the Hanson grant, in the State of Florida, made by the King of Spain and confirmed to the grantees under the treaty of 1819 between Spain and the United States, $400."

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. This matter has been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. I will have his letter read, if the chairman of the committee desires it.

Mr. RANDALL. It should be published.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think we had better know it.

Mr. RANDALL. Let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 25, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by reference from the Department for report, of House resolution, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, dated June 21, 1886, requesting to be furnished, at the earliest date possible, certain papers therein described relative to the decree of United States court in the matter of survey of the John M. Hanson grant in Florida, with an estimate of the cost of such survey and such other information as may be necessary to the fulfillment of the said order of the court.

In reply, I have the honor to transmit herewith inclosed copies of the papers desired, namely: First, copy of decree of the United States district court for the northern district of Florida, dated April 14, 1885, to the United States surveyor-general, directing him to make a survey and file a plat of the same in the cause of "John M. Hanson vs. The United States;" second, copy of letter of Commissioner of General Land Office to said surveyor-general, dated July 14, 1885, deciding that the survey of said grant would have to be deferred until Congress should make appropriation for the same.

In compliance with request for an estimate of the cost of survey in accordance with said decree of court, I would state that the sum of $400, the amount named in Senate bill No. 2638, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, as introduced by Senator CALL, is considered by this office ample to cover all expenses of survey.

As the only obstacle to carrying out said decree of court is the lack of requisite funds to pay for the survey, the papers herewith appear to contain all the information necessary in the premises.

House resolution herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
WILLIAM A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

Hon. L. Q. C. LAMAR,
Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The Government loses 2,121.22 acres by an error in the survey formerly made. The United States Supreme Court ordered a resurvey. While they were making preparation for a resurvey, in pursuance of the mandate of the court above, the Land Office found there was no money provided for the purpose. In order to save these 2,121.22 acres appeal is made to Congress to make the appropriation provided for by my amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is not one of the ordinary expenses of the Government. It seems to be an appropriation for the survey of private lands. If these gentlemen desire this resurvey let them pay the money required therefor. This seems to be a private matter, and it is the duty of these individuals to pay for it. It is a change of existing law by requiring the Government to pay for a survey of private property.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I have been unable to see where it is a change of existing law. It merely provides for paying the expenses of a resurvey, whereby the Government will save 2,121.22 acres. The system of advancing money has been abolished, and whatever is done can only be done by appropriation, as suggested in the letter of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SPRINGER. I must make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The point of order is clearly not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary expenses of survey, appraisal, sale, and pay of custodians of abandoned military reservations transferred to the control of the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, $10,000.

Mr. CAREY. I offer an amendment to this paragraph, to strike out $10,000 and insert $20,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment to the desk.

Mr. CAREY. There is in my Territory alone about 100,000 acres of the public lands in the Fort Fetterman and Fort Landers reservations. These lands have been settled upon and the rights of the settlers can not be adjusted until the lands have been surveyed. They have not yet been surveyed, for the reason, I understand, that the Commissioner of the General Land Office has not had adequate appropriations for the purpose. I find upon an examination that the estimates call for an appropriation for the survey of abandoned military reservations of $20,000, and it will require that amount of money to survey the reservations that should be surveyed during the next fiscal year. If the lands are sold under the act of 1884, as proposed in this bill, they will realize to the Treasury of the United States a large sum of money. It is a great wrong to the people who have settled upon the lands not to give a sufficient sum of money for surveys so that their rights may be recognized and their claims settled. I hope the committee will permit the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to have the amendment read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 1012 "ten thousand" and insert "twenty thousand."

Mr. RANDALL. All I can say is, that we gave the amount this year that was given to us by the Department; that is to say, all they asked as necessary.

Mr. HOLMAN. And that is ample.

Mr. CAREY. I will state to the chairman of the committee that I have frequently received letters, during the last six months, asking for the survey of these lands belonging to the abandoned military reservations.

The settlers can not have their claims adjusted until the lands are surveyed. The General Land Office has made an estimate that it will require $20,000 to make the surveys. I hope the chairman of the committee will not object.

Mr. RANDALL. There was in the first six months of this year, during which an appropriation of $20,000 was available for this purpose, not a cent expended.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CAREY, there were on a division—ayes 32, noes 48.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States Geological Survey:

For the United States Geological Survey: For the Geological Survey, and the classification of the public lands, and examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the national domain, and to continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States, including the pay of temporary employés in the field and office, and all other necessary expenses, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $400,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Alabama what he understands the agreement to be in reference to the debate upon this portion of the bill?

Mr. HERBERT. I understood that I was to have forty-five minutes to discuss this question.

Mr. RANDALL. I think I wanted to make it thirty minutes.

Mr. HERBERT. Yes; but I will not be able to get through in that time.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to come to some understanding about an evening session also. In view of the fact that we have to give time just here for debate I would like to ask unanimous consent that at 5 o'clock we take a recess until 8 o'clock to go on with the bill. We have made such slow progress that I feel it is not asking too much of the House to do this.

Mr. RYAN. I think that is right.

Mr. CUTCHEON. We always get our bills vetoed when they are not passed in a full House; and you can not expect to get many members at these night sessions.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I shall object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. It would have to be done in the House anyhow.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SYMES. Before the committee rises may I inquire of the chairman of the committee if any arrangement has been made in reference to the time for debate on the Geological Survey?

The CHAIRMAN. Not yet.

Mr. RANDALL. That is one of the purposes I have in view.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. REAGAN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, there are two matters now that I wish the House to determine. First, the length of debate allowed on this Geological Survey provision; and then I want to ask consent of the House that at 5 o'clock we take a recess until 8, to sit not later than 11, on the body of the bill. I make the latter request first.

Mr. CANNON. Why not pass this item for the Geological Survey, and have the general debate on that to-night?

Mr. RANDALL. That the gentleman from Alabama does not desire; and it is not altogether fair that so important a question should be discussed; for if it be understood that there is only discussion to take place to-night very few members would probably attend.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would suggest to the gentleman if it would not be quite as germane to have a discussion on an important question with a thin House as to pass any part of an important public measure with a thin House?

Mr. RANDALL. Members will come if they understand the evening session is to be for action on the paragraphs of this bill. But if you announce that it is to be for debate only, you will not have thirty men here.

Mr. CANNON. How much debate do you propose to have on the portion of the bill relating to the Geological Survey?

The SPEAKER. The first request made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is in relation to a recess. He asks unanimous consent that the House take a recess at 5 o'clock this afternoon until 8 o'clock, and not sit later than 11 o'clock, for the consideration of the sundry civil bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I now wish to come to some arrangement with the gentleman from Alabama and whoever wants to speak on the Geological Survey. I understand the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] wants forty-five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Why could this matter not be debated under the five-minute rule? That is the effective debate.

Mr. HERBERT. I think the House will bear me witness that I am not in the habit of trespassing on its patience, and that I seldom ask to be heard except from a committee on subjects which I have considered in committee. Two years ago I was appointed upon a commission to consider the operations of the Geological Survey and certain other scientific bureaus; and I deem it a duty I owe to myself to speak to the House on this question and to give the views I entertain, and which are the result of much study on this question. I would not be able to do that in the five-minute debate.

Mr. RYAN. It would not be fair to expect the gentleman to do so, and there has been an understanding that general debate should be allowed on this portion of the bill.

Mr. HERBERT. I think I can get through in forty-five minutes if gentlemen will not interrogate me too much, and I will promise not to ask for an extension of time.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that one hour be allowed for the general debate on this subject.

Mr. SYMES. I wish to say that we want as much time to support the Geological Survey as the gentleman from Alabama, who has studied the subject thoroughly, proposes to occupy in attacking it.

Mr. BAYNE. I suggest that there be thirty minutes for each side.

Mr. SYMES. I would be satisfied with thirty minutes myself, but there are other gentlemen who desire to speak.

Mr. HERBERT. I will get through if I can in thirty minutes; but I am afraid I can not present the various points involved in this question to the House in that time.

Mr. SYMES. Suppose there be an hour and a half equally divided?

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to test the sense of the House betweeen one hour and one hour and a half.

Mr. RYAN. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania it is certainly fair to divide the time equally. I agree with him an hour would be sufficient, but whatever time is given let it be divided equally.

Mr. HERBERT. I hope the House will agree to give me an hour and a half.

Mr. SPRINGER. It does not follow, although the gentleman from Alabama proposes to speak for forty-five minutes, that that time will be occupied in making opposition to appropriation for this survey. The gentleman has been engaged for two years in investigating the workings of this bureau, and is now more competent than any other member to enlighten us in regard to it; and I believe the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES] will be as much enlightened and edified by the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama on this subject as any other member.

The SPEAKER. This is a request for unanimous censent and is not debatable.

Mr. SYMES. I desire to suggest that the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] desires to speak on this subject.

Mr. SPRINGER. He is not here.

Mr. SYMES. I think he will be here before we get through.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to limit debate on this part of the bill to one hour.

Mr. HERBERT. And I move to amend that motion so that the debate may run for an hour and a half.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The motion to limit debate to one hour was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I again ask unanimous consent to have an evening session to-night, from 8 o'clock to 11 o'clock.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I shall object to any request made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations for unanimous consent as I now feel.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. REAGAN in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House debate on the paragraphs of the bill relating to the United States Geological Survey is limited to one hour. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] is recognized.

Mr. HERBERT. I did not seek this task which has been imposed upon me. Two years ago, when the joint commission on the scientific surveys was formed, I was placed upon it without even knowing before my appointment that such a commission had been provided for. But I did not shirk the duty, and upon that commission I have labored diligently to inform myself, and I deem it now my duty to state to this House and to the country the conclusions I have reached.

These scientific institutions of ours have become great and powerful. They have patronage and know well how to distribute it. This Geological Survey has the Academy of Sciences behind it. This academy has become one of the active political forces of the country. Besides, the Geological Survey has placed the many offices at its command where it is supposed they will be most effective. But, Mr. Chairman, in my opinion the survey has transcended its powers, and I deem it my duty, although I foresee it will be of no avail, to criticise it. I do not propose by the amendment which I shall offer to cripple the survey. I only desire to keep its operations within the limits of the law.

I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the amendment I shall propose to the section under consideration. That section, it will be seen upon reading it, appropriates in bulk, without requiring any specification whatever, $400,000. All other surveys provided for in this bill are required to specify the purposes for which the money appropriated is to be expended. The Geological Survey is given in this bill $400,000, and it alone is not required to specify. I ask now that the amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend lines 1027 and 1028 by striking out "$400,000" and inserting "$375,000," and by adding thereto the following: "Provided, That no portion of said sum shall be expended for the discussion of the general principles of geology or paleontology, or for any work of any kind not essential to the preparation of a geological map of the United States, or necessary for the classification of the public lands or the examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the public domain."

Mr. HERBERT. It will be seen that this amendment only proposes to reduce the annual expenditure by the sum of $25,000. My purpose is to see whether this House proposes to limit the Geological Survey, or whether it is to be permitted to go on as heretofore. The director of the survey came before the committee and told us that it was impossible directly to restrict or control by law the operations of scientific institutions like his. He repeated this thought in several forms, and at last he said, "A scientific man spurns authority." Do we dare to do it in face of this defiance? The conduct of this bureau, it seems to me, furnishes an apt illustration of the sentiment avowed by its director. The joint commission of the two Houses of Congress appointed by law was authorized to examine the working of these scientific organizations with a view to economy. That was one of the duties we were charged with.

In order to decide whether the survey was conducted economically or not we called upon the director to give us a statement of the expenses of similar surveys in other countries. From the answers made by him and from other Government evidence the minority of the commission tabulated the expenses for geological surveys of seventeen countries, including the United States. The table as given in the report is as follows:

Summary table showing annual appropriations for geological works of certain foreign countries and the United States, taken from House Executive Document 270, Forty-eighth Congress, second session, and Powell's testimony before survey commission, pages 420–451.

This table refers to page and document as authority for every figure. Wherever the Director had given an estimate his estimate was taken. The other figures are taken from the report of Captain Wheeler, delegate to the geographical congress at Venice (House Executive Document No. 270).

The table should be corrected by adding the amount expended in the United States, so as to make it $526,240 for the current year, the latest estimate. It will thus be seen that the United States is expending annually $91,000 more than all those other sixteen countries. The countries tabulated, it will be seen, are Great Britain and Ireland, Austria-Hungary, France, Switzerland, Italy, Sweden, Russia, Belgium, Norway, India, Bavaria, Wurtemburg, Canada, Victoria, Finland, and Japan.

Director Powell made a reply to this report. His answer has been incorporated in a supplemental report; and I, as author of the report arraigning the survey for its extravagance, have attempted to answer the director, and both documents will be found printed side by side in the supplemental report. What is his answer? It is that much of this money is expended for topography and that in other countries the topography has been already done. That is true, but in those countries the topography was done either by cadastral surveys—surveys conducted to mark out property for taxation or surveys for military purposes.

We have had no military survey, no military map made of this country, and the Geological Survey is not authorized to make one. We have had no cadastral survey of this country made, and we need none, and the Geological Survey is not authorized to make one. The only survey that bureau is authorized to make is incidental to and for the purpose of constructing a geological map. Therefore it is but fair to say that this expenditure is all properly chargeable to geology and to geology alone.

When we look at it in this way, that survey, exclusive of the cost of printing, is expending, as I have said, $91,000 more than all these other countries put together. Now, Mr. Chairman, that fact alone is not conclusive against the survey. These figures, startling as they are, do not of themselves show that the work is conducted in an extravagant manner. But the printing is to be added. I have here some specimens which I wish gentlemen who are skeptical on this question to examine. Here is a book on paleontology, "Odontornithes" is the title, meaning birds with teeth.

This book [showing it] was compiled under direction of Clarence King, and was published by the Interior Department in 1880 at a cost of $8,000. Then in 1882 the same book substantially [showing another] was republished by the director of the Geological Survey in another form. It will be seen that many of the very same illustrations are included in both books, with this difference, that in the latter the engravings have been made smaller in size. This necessitated of course re-engraving. If any gentleman will compare these two volumes he will find that there is a different arrangement and possibly a little new matter in the latter, but the works are substantially the same from beginning to end. If he will turn to and read the last paragraph of both books he will see that the real difference between the two is that in the first the concluding paragraph speaks of having found three birds with teeth, while the concluding paragraph of the second book speaks of having found four birds with teeth.

If there be any other substantial difference between the two it is difficult to discover. Such difference as there is could certainly have been noted in a short chapter. Any private individual would certainly have taken that course. But the Government pays the printer. Again, the plates upon which the map of the United States is to be printed, according to the cost of those which have already been completed, will cost $1,690,000. That is the estimate from figures furnished by the Printing Office, showing the cost of the hundred plates that have been contracted for. Estimating upon the statement of Professor Powell that twenty-six hundred of such plates will be required, the cost will be $1,690,000, even if the present plan is not changed. But that this estimate of the number of plates to be used, made while an investigation is progressing, will be enlarged in the future, admits of no manner of doubt.

The minority report estimated the printing at $200,000 a year. The director in his reply I have spoken of said it would not cost more than a hundred thousand dollars. I may have been mistaken, but here is my authority. Professor Powell himself, in an article on the United States Geological Survey, published in the American Journal of Science in 1885, states that the appropriations made for the Geological Survey for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, aggregate the sum of $504,040; and he says:

> This sum does not include the amount appropriated for ethnological researches, $40,000; nor are the expenses for engraving and printing paid for from the above appropriation, but from appropriations made for the work under the direction of the Public Printer. It is estimated that the amount needed for engraving and printing for the next fiscal year will exceed $200,000.

Can this committee have any doubt as to which estimate is more apt to gauge the future annual expense of printing for this bureau—that given when the bureau was under criticism or that given to the Journal of Science? Now the amount proposed for the present year is not only the $400,000 included in this paragraph, but when appropriations elsewhere in this and other bills are taken into consideration, it will be $526,000. Add to this the $100,000 which Professor Powell estimates for, and it will be $626,000. If we take the amount he estimated for 1885 in the Journal of Science, the whole will be $726,000. The director stated to the commission that his estimates did not include the cost of uncompleted work; that the map was still, and would be for twenty-four years, uncompleted.

If we take that and other uncompleted works into consideration, then three quarters of a million dollars will not suffice to cover the annual expenditures for this bureau—a bureau which began with an expenditure of $106,000 in 1879; which had run up in 1883 to an expenditure of $258,000; in 1884, $341,000; in 1885, $504,000; in 1886, $526,000; and the estimates for 1887 are $653,000. We must thank the Committee on Appropriations that they did not give him this year his estimate of $653,000, an increase of 30 or 40 per cent., which he has been getting every year for the last five years.

But, Mr. Chairman, passing from that question of expense, let us look at the authority of this bureau. Its authority is to classify the public lands and examine the geological structure and mineral resources and products of the United States; and in 1882 there was inserted in an appropriation bill a paragraph authorizing it to continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States. Now, let us look at some of the topics which, under this authority, it has undertaken to treat. One of the works published is on "living oysters." Will any gentleman here tell me what "living oysters" have to do with a geological map of the United States? Again, the survey has published a work on "the technical condition of the steel industry." It might as well have treated of the steam-engine.

Another work is on copper-smelting, and still another on volcanoes in the Sandwich Islands. No law can confine its operations; no pent-up continent can set bounds to its ambition.

Now, as to limitations, the purpose of the amendment is to prevent the survey from going into a general discussion of geology and paleontology. We found on examination that more than two thousand pages, five or six different books, full of engravings and maps, had been published on the Comstock lode alone. One of these books was by King, another by Church, another by Zerkel, another by Becker, another by Elliot Lord. These books were not written under the auspices of the present director, but by those who preceded him. Mr. Lord wrote his book under Clarence King, but it was reported to Major Powell after he became director of the survey in 1882, and approved and published by him. There it is [exhibiting a volume]. I ask any gentleman here who is curious on the subject to look into that book and see what it is. It is nothing but the history of the great mining adventure, with which all the world is familiar. The preface begins by saying that the story is more wonderful than that of Aladdin's lamp.

The book then proceeds to tell how from an accidental circumstance attention was directed to this lode, how its mineral wealth was developed, how the town grew up. Then it proceeds very much like Mark Twain's "Roughing It." The only difference between this and Twain's book is that Twain wrote his book to be bought and read by the people; and the people did buy and read it. The people paid for Lord's book and did not read it. There is nothing in it about geology or the preparation of a geological map. I ask any gentleman to look at the book and say whether he believes that any bureau which publishes a book like that ought to be limited by law. Will you permit the director of that bureau to say that a scientific man spurns our authority, that you can not limit him by law? Will you sanction by appropriating money in bulk that he may go on without let or hinderance?

You may do it if you wish, but I will not vote for any such appropriation.

When I discovered these things, Mr. Chairman, I determined to ask for the opinion of some eminent man of science, so I addressed a letter to Professor Agassiz, one of the most distinguished scientists in this whole country. Here is the correspondence, and I ask the attention of the committee while I read it:

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 27, 1885.

DEAR SIR: Permit me to thank you for your and Professor Newcomb's letters, both of which I shall consider very carefully. Availing myself of your kind offer to answer other questions, I beg to inquire whether in your opinion the work of the Geological Bureau could profitably be brought within proper bounds. To me it is very clear that Major Powell is transcending the rule you lay down, that Government ought not to do scientific work which can properly be accomplished by individual effort. For instance, I find that in 1867 Clarence King made an exhaustive examination of and published a large work about the Comstock lode; that in 1877 he was followed by J. A. Church, under Wheeler, with a similar book; that G. W. Becker, under Powell, wrote another exhaustive treatise on the same subject, complimenting Church by saying of him, "His memoir contains a number of hypotheses which would possess great scientific importance if sufficient evidence in their favor could be adduced." To me it seems that private individuals might do all this kind of work.

In like manner, as I understand, Zerkel, in 1875, published a book on the collections of the explorations of the fortieth parallel. Major Powell seems to have considered that the Government had not published works enough about the Comstock lode, so in 1883 he had Elliot Lord to publish another book (451 pages), in which the same lode is treated from the standpoint of the historiographer—Government thus giving an interesting narrative of what had been accomplished by private enterprise, the wonderful results of an accidental discovery, &c. I would be obliged if you would let me know how and where to draw a line that would lop off some of this kind of work.

Again, is it necessary that a geological survey of the United States should go at all into paleontology? You will find on pages 26 and 27 of the testimony taken before the commission Major Powell's letter. Please examine it, and let me know whether in your opinion everything he reports himself doing is essential. For myself, I am free to confess that if no part of all this can possibly be dispensed with, and if the people must be taxed for the maintenance of all that machinery to complete the geological survey now being prosecuted, the time has come when Congress ought to consider seriously whether it ought not to abolish the whole survey. An answer at your earliest convenience will greatly oblige,

Yours, very respectfully,

HILARY A. HERBERT.

Professor A. AGASSIZ.

MUSEUM OF COMPARATIVE ZOOLOGY,
Cambridge, Mass., December 2, 1885.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to yours of the 27th November, the points you make in regard to the economic work done by King and Powell on the Comstock lode are well taken, and I should in my former letter have referred to this subject. Private individuals have learned nothing from the works you refer to, and the scope of the investigation on mining industries of Comstock, Eureka, and Leadville are all such as seem to me to fall within the limits of individual investigation. It will always be possible for specialists to write such memoirs, and if they are properly qualified they will find no difficulty in having access to all the information obtained by Government officials of the Geological Survey. There is no more reason why the Government should publish a history of the mining enterprises of the country than that they should publish a history of manufacturing processes. All that is the province of private historians.

In fact, I do not see why men of science should ask more than other branches of knowledge, literature, fine arts, &c., beyond the limitations I had suggested of Government assistance. There is no end to that kind of interesting documents which the heads of bureaus could get printed at Government expense, and which very few individuals or societies would print, even had they the means at their command. The methods of publication adopted by the various bureaus, the mode of distribution, the size of the editions, are wasteful and extravagant. Editions running into the thousands and tens of thousands are often published, and there are not five hundred people or institutions whom they will do any good, or to whom such pure scientific publications can be of any service.

As regards the paleontology: That is just one of the things which private individuals and learned societies can do just as well as Government. They will do it cheaper. There are always in the different universities plenty of people who will be too thankful to do such work for the sake of doing it, and who will manage to get the gist of their results published by scientific societies to which they belong.

* * * * * * *

The material collected by the Blake and United States Coast Survey vessels at various times since 1867 to date has all been published by this museum at no expense to the Government. There have appeared thus far what represents 14 vols. 4°, with many plates, and 3 vols. 8°; and there still remain 1 vol. 8° and 2 4° to publish, the expense for which will not have been much less when completed than about $30,000. I am sure these publications would have cost the Government, if done in usual bureau style, at least five or six times that amount. I inclose a marked list of the publications referring to Coast Survey material.

I have a written proposition from a former superintendent of the Coast Survey offering to publish all this as appendices of the Coast Survey reports at Government expense, all of which I respectfully declined to accept.

Yours, truly,

A. AGASSIZ.

Hon. H. A. HERBERT, M. C., Washington.

Professor Powell is doing precisely the same thing at Leadville that Clarence King did at the Comstock lode. Now mark the sentences:

> There is no more reason why the Government should publish a history of the mining enterprises of the country than that they should publish a history of manufacturing processes. All that is the province of private historians.

The purpose of the amendment I have sent up is to prevent the Government from doing these things which Professor Agassiz says ought to be left to private individuals.

Now, Mr. Chairman, acting upon the ideas of Professor Agassiz, the whole commission framed a bill which it authorized me to report and which I did report to the House. The report accompanying the bill was signed by only two of its members, but the bill itself was the work of the whole commission. As it was reported here it inhibited the Geological Survey from the general discussion of geological theories and from paleontological work. There was a great commotion. Office-holders and scientists were all agog.

You must know, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, there are attached to the survey, besides its four or five hundred employés, quite a number of persons scattered over the Union, professors of colleges, editors of scientific journals, mining engineers, and other gentlemen of great social and political influence. Newspapers were filled with articles about the audacious attack on our great Geological Survey. Major Powell demanded a rehearing. He obtained it; and lo and behold! when the majority report came out it repudiated the bill that had been unanimously reported. Only two of us stood by that bill. The other four contented themselves with recommending a bill affixing a limitation on printing. We bade Professor Powell stand, but he would not. If he had been content to stand it had been well; but he was not. So it was like—

DOGBERRY. This is your charge: You shall comprehend all vagrom men; you are to bid any man stand in the prince's name.
WATCH. How, if a' will not stand.
DOGBERRY. Why, then, take no note of him, but let him go; and presently call the rest of the watch together, and thank God you are rid of a knave.
VERGES. If he will not stand when he is bidden, he is none of the prince's subjects.
DOGBERRY. True, and they are to meddle with none but the prince's subjects. You shall also make no noise in the streets; for, for the watch to babble and talk is most tolerable, and not to be endured.
WATCH. We will rather sleep than talk; we know what belongs to a watch.
DOGBERRY. Why, you speak like an ancient and most quiet watchman, for I can not see how sleeping should offend.

The majority of the commission are, it seems to me, with all due respect, "most ancient and quiet watchmen." It is most unbecoming to babble in the streets and make a noise about this matter. If he will not stand why let him go, and thank God we are rid of him.

The difficulty seems to lie right here: Professor Powell deems this to be a strictly scientific institution, "organized for," as he says, "and necessarily comprehending original research," the searching for new principles to enlarge the field of science. That seems to him to be one of the prime objects of the institution and the law of its being, as he understands it. Is there anything in the law which I have read, and I have given substantially the words of the law, which authorizes him to go into the boundless field of science? Is there anything that authorizes him to treat of all of these topics he has dealt with? If the survey can treat of all these things where is the limit of its authority?

Is it not true that Congress when it established this survey intended it to be a bureau of applied science; that is to say, when a geological map was authorized to be made, did not Congress expect that it should be constructed according to the known principles of geology, applying them, and incidentally of course, but only incidentally, developing the science of geology?

Did Congress intend to commit to this bureau work which could be as well done, and which, as Professor Agassiz says, would be done more cheaply by private individuals? I think not, and to inhibit it from such work is the purpose of my amendment. It does not seek to cripple this survey; it does not seek to prevent geological maps from being made; it seeks to expedite that work. It seeks in the interest of economy to prevent this survey from traveling out into forbidden fields.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand correctly that the gentleman's time was limited to half an hour?

Mr. HERBERT. The understanding was that I was to have half an hour; has that time expired?

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. HERBERT. I thank the committee for its attention and will not ask any further extension. I think I have stated the main purpose of the amendment, and I hope the committee understands its effect.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Chairman, I had supposed the gentleman from Alabama was going to attack with some force the Geological Survey of the United States. He stated that he had been upon a commission for a year or two past and that he had investigated this subject thoroughly; in fact, that he knew all about it, and therefore he was going to enlighten this committee upon it and show this House why that survey should—if it should not be done away with altogether, as his report intimates—be limited in its operations very materially.

Mr. Chairman, instead of that we have heard from the gentleman today for about half the time occupied by him a dissertation on two books issued by the Geological Survey which are confined to a treatise upon birds with teeth. Now, sir, I am not here to make a complaint of this investigation, or undertake to argue upon the merits or demerits of these valuable scientific works that have been introduced by that branch of the Geological Survey, when it has entered into the realms of paleontology and ethnology, &c., which forms, sir, so important a branch of the work of that survey. And I apprehend that it is not necessary to dwell upon it here.

I will only say, in passing, that I think this great nation of ours can afford a few thousand dollars a year in connection with the Geological Survey in order that we may keep pace with the advance of science upon subjects that are considered important by the scientists. I am not willing, sir, that the nations of Europe, and the whole world, should monopolize all the results of science on these subjects; and while we have these investigations and works going on which have been organized for the purpose of utilitarian and practical research, I am willing that a portion of the money appropriated by this great Government should be used in aid of those branches of geological research which have for their object very properly and especially the advancement of science.

But, sir, knowing as I do the great practical value and utility of the work of that survey in developing the great mining and mineral resources and industries of this country, I am not willing to stand here and by my silence allow the work of these geologists to be sneered at by citing as an evidence of their work simply a volume or two which pertain to that branch of research to which I have referred and which pertain strictly to ethnology, paleontology, and birds with teeth, as the gentleman from Alabama expresses it.

Mr. Chairman, there is a branch of that labor, and it is the important branch; it is a branch upon which I think about three-fourths of the labor of the Geological Bureau has been expended, and which, I propose to show in a few minutes to the members of the House, has produced more practical results, and has resulted in bringing to the surface of the earth, utilizing for the benefit of man and adding to the wealth of the nation more than any other money that has ever been expended since the organization of this Government.

Perhaps, sir, the best way I can give the members of this House an idea of the value of the works, to the practical industries of this country, that have emanated from that bureau will be by referring to and exhibiting some of them.

Here, sir, is a work issued in 1876 or 1877, known as Hayden's Geological and Geographical Atlas of Colorado. Sir, there is no book in the United States, no publication that has been so much sought after for its practical value by mining geologists, by practical economic geologists, by practical mining superintendents, and by intelligent prospectors as that volume.

There has never been presented to this country or any other, confined within the same limits which cost no more money, a work which has proved of so much practical value as that atlas. It contains geological charts of an important portion of the mineral belt of the Rocky Mountains. An ordinary intelligent prospector, a mining superintendent, and those who are seeking to develope and explore the mineral resources of this country, will take this map, and have taken it, and they study it, they learn from its charts the geological formations of the different mineral belts practically, not theoretically. They will learn where that great belt of magnesian limestone is found or where it comes so near the surface of the earth that the industry and enterprise of man may reach it by exploitation.

I know that upon the strength of that atlas and the charts and the books which explain it prospecting parties have gone forth into the wilderness of the Rocky Mountains and discovered, developed, utilized, and added to the wealth of this country millions of dollars' worth of silver, lead, and gold. But I must pass on, having said so much for that atlas as a sample.

An atlas of a similar character has been produced by the Geological Survey covering the Comstock lode and what is called the Washoe district, near Virginia City, Nev. Other geological atlases and charts of much practical value have been published.

One word as to the works that have been published describing the great Comstock lode and the great mine that was developed on that vein and lode. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] says there have been published about two thousand pages describing the workings of that Comstock lode and mine, and the formations in which it occurs, and he seems to be astonished that we should waste as much as two thousand pages in describing, aside from the Potosi lode and mine in South America, the greatest silver and gold producing lode and mine that was ever developed on the surface of the earth—a mine that has produced and utilized for the benefit of the country something like two hundred and fifty millions of gold and silver, about half gold and half silver, approximately speaking. Why, sir, the great progress that is being made in the deep mining of this country to-day owes its development, and will owe its success in the future, in a great measure to the practical workings of the Comstock lode and to the surveys and investigations of those underground workings and the geological formations described in the works of the Geological Survey.

This labor and the publication of the description of the workings and developments on this great mine, which has reached a depth of over 2,500 feet, has caused the sinking of many deep shafts and the exploration of many large ore bodies by this system of deep mining.

Why, sir, until the owners of the Comstock lode showed their faith in deep mining in this country, and followed the barren contact of that great fissure for over 500 feet from what was known as the upper bonanzas, that astonished the world from 1864 to 1870, the nations of Europe and their mining engineers were scoffing at us in this country and saying we had not the wit or the ability to succeed in pursuing deep mining, and therefore we would remain a poor mining country. But, sir, the enterprise and the nerve of that company sunk shafts through barren contact in that great fissure, where its two walls come together so close that you can scarcely put a knife-blade between them for 500 feet, at the cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars, until they opened to the view of the practical miner, as well as the mining engineer, the greatest bonanzas of gold and silver ore the world has ever looked upon.

Sir, the economic branch of mining that was proved to be successful——

Mr. HERBERT. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SYMES. In a moment—and which has been examined and written up by those geologists, Clarence King, Professor Church, and others, will, I have no doubt, result and is resulting in a system of practical mining, engineering, and enforcement of practical mining systems and exploitation in this country that will add hundreds of millions to our mineral wealth in the next quarter or half a century.

Mr. HERBERT. Does the gentleman not understand it was private enterprise that discovered and private enterprise that developed the mine he is speaking of, and that these books were written about it afterward?

Mr. SYMES. I thank the gentleman for the question he has asked me, because it serves to illustrate exactly what I was going to say, that this company, like others in the mining districts, have expended hundreds of thousands, yea, millions, in demonstrating the practicability of the deep mining in this country which was instituted by this private enterprise. Now, the gentleman is not willing even that our able practical mining engineers and geologists shall walk into those mines to observe and to write up—what? Not theoretical geology, not paleontology, not works upon the teeth of birds, not works that undertake to find out what particular race of man the Indians of New Mexico and Arizona belong to, but the practical manner in which mining can be carried on at a profit in this country at a depth of over 2,000 feet.

Mr. HERBERT. Now, what is the reason that private enterprise could not write those books, just as private enterprise has developed the mines? It ought to be left to private enterprise.

Mr. SYMES. My friend says this ought to be left to private enterprise. That is his opinion, and I do not believe it is worth much, because he has had no practical experience in the matter.

Mr. HERBERT. That is the opinion of Professor Agassiz.

Mr. SYMES. That is the opinion of the gentleman from Alabama, backed up by the greatest theoretical dreamer as to practical science and practical mining geology of this age and time, Professor Agassiz. Professor Agassiz does not care anything about utilitarian mining geology progressing in this country. The gentleman from Alabama has fallen into the trap of Professor Agassiz. I know whereof I speak. Professor Agassiz would like to see every man that owns a mine hire scientists like him to go out upon the public domain and be paid $1,000 or $5,000 for a theoretical guess before sinking a shaft.

Sir, I have seen the works on practical mining geology produced by the mining geologists of this bureau availing themselves of the geological facts—not theory, not history, but the geological facts which are exhibited to them without extra cost when they go into the mines that have been developed by private enterprise. There they can observe the rocks in which the ore is usually precipitated and deposited, and then, going into other fields in the vicinity and finding the places where those zones or strata of rock come close to the surface, and describing and delineating them in such atlases as these, they produce works which are of the greatest value to the practical miners, prospectors, and explorers. I do not think that mining geology in this age and time should be confined to the Eastern colleges. If we will carry on this geological survey as it has been commenced, and encourage and sustain it, we shall in time have a system of practical geological works in this country far removed from theory, far removed from geological generalization, consisting of plain, exemplified geological facts as they are developed in the leading mining districts of this country, and of the greatest practical value.

Sir, I know something of what I am talking about. I have examined as an attorney a good many of the best mines in Colorado. I have spent my evenings in the cabins of practical mining superintendents who never had more than a common-school education, but who had gone out at the head of exploitation parties placing their faith in the delineations of these atlases, and being guided by them in the different geological districts where certain phenomena appeared. Capital backed up these practical men, and they sunk shafts and ran inclines. They did not become discouraged because the porphyry above and the lime contact below came close upon each other; but they pursued their course, following the guide which led them on with as unerring certainty as the north star guides the mariner, until they developed "bonanzas" that paid dividends of 500 per cent. to the gentlemen who had backed up their practical knowledge in these mining operations.

Sir, all through the mineral belt of the Rocky Mountains, a great portion of which is already surveyed and described in the Geological Survey atlases and memoirs, is found here and there approaching near the surface a great belt of dolomite, or magnesian limestone. By means of the geological survey of the mineral belt as embraced in the books to which I have referred the prospectors could go to a mining district and see where this limestone came near to the surface of the earth in the last great upheavals that lifted those rocks and mountains to their present position. It was not necessary to pay Professor Agassiz or any other theorist of an Eastern college for the information as to where the miners should go to expend their money. The knowledge had been published and distributed by this Government, and by means of this information such mines as are found to-day in Garfield County, Pitkin County, and others that I have not time to mention, have thus been prospected and brought to the knowledge of man.

I want to impress upon gentlemen of the House the fact that the practical mining geologists employed by this geological bureau to make the examinations and get up these atlases and reports to which I have referred are as different in their education, in the construction of their minds, in the objects they have in view, and their works, from the old school of geologists, headed by Professor Agassiz and other scientists, as are followers of the Baconian philosophy from the disciples of the old Platonic school.

I ask gentlemen to examine these volumes of reports, memoirs of the Leadville district and other publications, written by Professor Emmons, by Professor John A. Church, Dr. Raymond, and by others with whom I am acquainted; and let any gentleman tell me, when he gets through, whether he finds in these works anything wasted in theory—whether he finds anything of that theoretical geology which consists in expending the force of a man's intellect, not in trying to find out how nature in her processes of chemical reactions deposited in the bowels of the earth the ore which is there found by prospecting.

There is nothing of that kind there. They have passed from that school of geology. When they come to a mining district like the Comstock, the Leadville, the Eureka, and others they simply survey these mines and examine them geologically and otherwise. They write up no theory; they write up the facts. They show that in certain geological formations in the Rocky Mountains they find these veins, they find certain characters of lead and silver ore, they find certain characters of true fissure veins carrying gold ore. The result is practical, not theoretical. They show that similar mines and similar bodies of ore may probably be discovered upon the sides of the mountains where you find the same character of rocks coming near enough to the surface of the earth by the last upheaval to be explored. This is practical mining geology.

Again, here are the volumes called the Mineral Resources of the United States, by Williams. They are made up of the same kind of information gathered at the same time from different mining districts in this country by men who are sent out in the summer to survey and examine the mines where the work is going on. And let me say that probably 50 per cent., yes 75 per cent., of the work contained in these volumes was furnished free, costing the Government nothing, because it was furnished by mining engineers in charge of important mines to the agents and employés of the United States going to these mines. Intelligent mining superintendents who get good salaries from their companies study these works all the time. They keep up their office maps with a description of the different drifts and levels, the character and richness of the ores, sometimes the chemical and geological character and formation of the small rocks. This information they put upon their maps and note-books night after night. They give this information to the United States geologists, and they write up the same in these volumes, and it does not cost the Government one-quarter of what it is worth. Yet to the practical miners of this country as distinguished from the theorists whom gentlemen have talked about this information is worth millions of dollars.

Two volumes of that work have been issued and a third is in press. It contains nothing upon gold and silver mines. These reports upon the mineral resources of the United States are confined to what may be called the base-metal mines alone. They contain well prepared articles and a great deal of valuable statistical information on anthracite coal, coal-mining and coal-fields, the manufacture of coke, natural gas, the manufacture of iron and steel in the United States, the iron ores of the United States, the copper and lead industry of the United States, the manufacture of fertilizers and many other reports and papers containing a very great amount of valuable information to those engaged in the mining industries of this country. These volumes are greatly sought after, and another edition of them ought to be printed for general distribution.

There are also published annually what are called the reports of the Director of the Geological Survey, the fifth volume of which has just been issued. These volumes contain a report of the operations of the bureau during the year; and also special reports and papers upon the more important mining developments in different parts of the country, papers upon the progress of mining and smelting, and other matters specially important to the mining industry.

The monographs and memoirs of the most important mining districts, such as that upon the district of Leadville by Professor S. F. Emmons, that upon the Eureka district in Nevada by Professor Hague, the works on the "Comstock" by King, Church, Becker, and Elliot Lord are exceedingly valuable. The mining statistics of the Rocky Mountains, prepared by Dr. R. W. Raymond, did a great deal toward attracting the attention of capitalists and to bring about the exploration and development of many mining districts. The bureau has published from time to time what are called bulletins, which appear in advance of the annual reports and monographs.

These bulletins contain papers upon some important, practical subjects relating to the economy of mining, smelting, &c., and other subjects pertaining to general geology. They are very valuable, because they bring to the attention of those interested in such subjects the progress that is continually being made in mining, in the reduction of ores, and in mining industries generally, within a short time after the information is gathered by the bureau and long before the larger reports and other works can be published. I do not know but that too large an amount of labor and cost of the bureau is expended upon subjects of general geology, paleontology, ethnology, ornithology, &c.; but, as I have before stated, I think this Government can well afford to expend some money in the pursuit and development of those branches of science which may not be of any particular economic value, but which is of very great value from a scientific standpoint.

I do not think the cost of geological surveys in other countries forms a proper criterion from which to judge of the amount of money we should expend in such work. Our country is so much larger than those cited by the gentleman, the area of its mineral land and its mineral wealth so much greater, and the time so short since the mineral belts were even explored or known to exist it will require a much greater amount of work for some years to come to make the necessary progress in this field of industry.

The salaries paid to the leading geologists of the Geological Survey are less than they can command from colleges, scientific institutions, and mining companies. It is a fact that several of the most valuable men in the employ of the bureau have and are about to resign to accept an advance of from $1,000 to $2,000 in salary.

The papers, bulletins, and reports upon the smelting industry of the United States have been of great practical value. The progress made in smelting and the reduction of ores during the last few years in this country has been wonderful. Millions upon millions of tons of low-grade lead, silver, and copper ores that a few years ago were considered of no more economic value than the stone quarries of the Rocky Mountains are now being smelted and utilized, and are producing millions of metal and bullion. We are indebted to the Geological Survey for much of the progress made in this important art in our mining industries.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the appropriation for the Geological Survey will be increased instead of diminished.

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed for the general debate has expired.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask that we go on with the consideration of the bill by paragraphs under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WAIT. I move to amend by striking out the last word of this clause.

Sir, I had the honor at the opening of the present session of Congress to be selected as a member of this commission to consider the present organizations of the Signal Service, the Geological and other surveys, and the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department, in place of a distinguished scholar, a former member from Massachusetts, who (unfortunately perhaps for this purpose) was not re-elected to the House. By reason of the lateness of my appointment I had not time to give to the matters pending before that commission the same attention as other gentlemen who were appointed to this duty in the last Congress. But the examination I have given to the general subject and to the testimony of witnesses called before the commission since I have been a member leads me to differ entirely from the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] in his proposition to cut down the amount which the Committee on Appropriations propose to give for the prosecution of what I consider one of the most important scientific works ever undertaken in this or any other country.

The amount reported by the committee is $400,000; and that amount was determined after the most careful scrutiny of the facts developed in the testimony and examination of the requirements that a full, fair, and honest prosecution of this important work demanded at the hands of Congress. I have reason to believe that every dollar which could by possibility be saved was saved in this appropriation, and this sum, as I understand it, was named as the very lowest amount for which this survey could be successfully carried on.

I think it would be most unfortunate for the prosecution of these great geological surveys if the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] should prevail, cutting down the amount to be appropriated for these surveys $25,000. I have but a few moments allotted to me, Mr. Chairman, and therefore I must hurry on without elaborating to the extent I would like the discussion upon all these points which are presented in the argument of the distinguished gentleman from Alabama.

I have given personal attention to the consideration of the various publications made by the Geological Survey under Professor Powell and his scientific associates. What are they? They are scientific works of the highest character. They are such works as are called for by institutions of learning all over this broad land. Men of science who entertain intelligent views of the importance of these publications demand their continuance. Our young men (whom Horace Greeley told to go West and there locate) who wish to be acquainted with the geological structure, the mineral resources, and the products of the public domain clamor for these books. They wish to acquaint themselves from the best sources with the character of the public lands which are opened up to their settlement. They wish to learn of the location of the mineral wealth of the country. Not to publish them would be to retard very seriously the settlement of our public domain and to a great extent, I may say to a deplorable extent, deter the settlement of the Far West and the building up of the splendid towns and cities which in half a century will grow up to enrich and brighten and beautify that whole country. [Applause.]

There has been no criticism, as I look upon the matter, made by the gentleman from Alabama to the publication of these scientific works by the Geological Survey which can be sustained by any evidence that was presented to the commission. I know from declarations which my friend from Alabama has heretofore frequently made that he relies upon the opinion of Professor Agassiz for the statements which he has now made. He pins his faith upon the opinion of that one gentleman, while I pin my faith and base my assertions upon the evidence of the many scientific gentlemen who came before our commission and testified fully, freely, intelligently in regard to the unrestrained prosecution of this great national work.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. WAIT].

Mr. WAIT. I thank the gentleman from Ohio for his courtesy.

Mr. Chairman, when gentlemen of this House believe honestly that the best interests of the country require this expenditure to the full amount of $400,000 it should be granted without regard to the proposed amendment of the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT]. I believe and declare, after having heard the testimony before the commission, and carefully and impartially considering the same, that every dollar of the four hundred thousand will be required, and that the expenditure of this money will be made judiciously by Major Powell and his able associates in the work.

Out of abundant caution the bill provides that it is to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. So every safeguard is thrown around it. Mr. Powell can not go on ad libitum and disburse this money just as he pleases, but he is to expend it under the superintendence and by the authority of the Secretary of the Interior. I have all confidence in Major Powell's integrity and sound judgment, but if he should undertake to spend the money upon objects not legitimately within the purview of his duty he will at once be restrained by the authority of the Secretary of the Interior. Mr. Powell can enter into no unwarranted expenditure of this public money, but he will be kept within the letter and the spirit of the appropriation.

The interests of science, in my judgment, demand that this great and important work should go forward. It is absolutely necessary for the proper and rapid development of the mineral wealth of our public domain. These scientific works, which my friend from Alabama would disparage, should be published and spread broadcast throughout the land. They should be put in the hands of our people in every section until they become familiar with all the requirements of the public welfare. They should be instructed fully as to the geological structure, the mineral resources, and the various products of our great national domain, and so be able to judge and act intelligently in advancing not only their personal but also the public interest.

I look upon the Geological Survey, Mr. Chairman, as one of the most important works undertaken by the Government, and I believe that in the past it has aided, and in the future will continue to aid, to make the people of this great Republic what they are destined to be—the richest, the most powerful, and the most intelligent people on the face of the earth. They will be rich in every resource; possessed of abundant and fertile lands, scientifically cultivated, of mines pouring out limitless mineral wealth, with beautiful towns and cities springing up from sea to sea, the places of their abode, and in short, possessing all that is necessary to constitute them of all nations the most prosperous, powerful, and independent.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the pro forma amendment.

The pro forma amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask to have the amendment again reported.

The amendment was again read.

The amendment of Mr. HERBERT was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salary of three topographers, at $2,000 each; in all, $67,700.

Mr. SPRINGER. After line 1052 I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 1052, insert:
"Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated for the Geological Survey shall be paid to any persons engaged in private occupations or pursuits."

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, the report of the commission, to which the gentleman from Alabama has called attention to-day, contains a list of persons who are engaged in other and private pursuits, but who are paid out of the fund appropriated for the continuance of the Geological Survey. That list embraces in all sixty-nine names, and they reside in eighteen States and two of the Territories of this Union. Some of these gentlemen who are carried on the roll at $4,000 a year are professors in the large colleges of the country. Others are engaged, some in newspaper work, while others are in various private pursuits, all specified here in the report.

The list which I hold in my hand states that seven of these are State geologists; twenty-four are professors of geology and allied sciences in colleges and universities over the county; four are editors of scientific newspapers; three are mining engineers; and so on throughout the list of sixty-nine names, all being carried on the rolls of the Government and draw monthly their salaries out of the fund appropriated to carry on the work of the Geological Survey.

I notice among these the name of Professor Marsh, one of the professors of Yale College, and in the books to which the gentleman from Alabama has called attention, published in 1880, the work of Professor Marsh on birds with teeth appears. It was printed in one of the volumes of Clarence King's reports published that year. The same work produced by him is also printed in 1882 in one of Powell's reports, covering many pages, and embellished with many elaborate plates, costing evidently a large sum of money.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. The same report?

Mr. SPRINGER. The identical work, only that in the last volume there is an addition, showing the discovery of four classes of birds with teeth instead of three, as in the former report.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. It was published then as a new discovery, no doubt.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir; I presume so.

Now, what I desire is to require that all persons who draw pay from the Government of the United States shall give to the Government their services. There are certainly persons in the United States who are willing to serve the Government in these capacities for the prices quoted in this bill, and who will give all of their valuable time for the compensation proposed.

It is said that these gentlemen who contribute these essays on scientific subjects can as well prepare them in the colleges and at the same time perform their duties there and draw the compensation which is allowed by those institutions. But I deny in toto the principle that the Government should go into a partnership with the colleges in employing the persons to be engaged in any particular Government pursuit. If they are willing to serve the Government and accept the salary it gives, then they should give the Government all of their time, for then we know what we are getting; we know the service which is being performed and the time which we can control of these employés. But as it is now, when gentlemen are carried upon the rolls as professors in universities or editors of newspapers and at the same time are drawing their salaries as Government officials out of the Treasury, they are to a certain extent placed beyond our control; and it is a principle which should not be tolerated. I ask gentlemen upon the other side of the House, then, and on this side to put the seal of their condemnation upon any system which looks to large salaries and little returns.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps——

Mr. HERBERT. Will the gentleman permit me to make a correction?

Mr. CANNON. I think I shall need all of the five minutes at my disposal.

I think my colleague from Illinois, eminent as a legislator and I suspect eminent as a scientist, is very competent to discuss this question in the manner he has discussed it if he desires to do so. And yet I suspect that he knows about as much about scientific subjects as I do; and what I do not know on this subject would make a pretty large library. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Very large, indeed.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, very large upon this subject, certainly; and yet I presume that I am almost as wise as my colleague.

Mr. SPRINGER. Much more so.

Mr. CANNON. Very well, as the gentleman concedes that to apply as between himself and me, I do not know that we are the most competent people in the world to undertake to arbitrarily direct that this money shall not be expended in a certain way.

Now, if we are to have valuable scientific work we want the best skill and scientific knowledge in this country to carry it on. If the men at the head of this bureau can best utilize somebody not permanently connected with them to carry on the investigations they desire to make let us allow them to be the judge of that. I do not want to pay gentlemen for service not performed. If it be true that they are borne upon the rolls and paid for no service at all, I will go with my colleague to prevent such expenditures.

Now, while I do not know much about scientific subjects, yet I recollect very well when this bureau was first organized of sitting for an hour and hearing the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] advocate its organization as he so ably did; and I took what he said upon faith and voted for the organization of this bureau. I have not regretted my vote since that time. In fact I have lived long enough to have found I know so little about scientific subjects that I am willing to take many things upon the faith of men of character and of knowledge.

There have been two men in this country, one certainly the greatest the country has ever produced, Franklin, and another among the greatest, who died here a few years ago, Henry, men who will be known five hundred or one thousand years from this time as the great men of their centuries. They contributed to the advancement of science, especially the latter, in an exceedingly unselfish way, perhaps not in a more unselfish way than the former, but not with so much notoriety as Franklin. They made discoveries without selfishness. They quietly proceeded on and allowed somebody else to utilize those discoveries.

I do not know that we have now any Henry or any Franklin connected with this scientific bureau, but I think I know this present head as a prudent man and I believe this money will be wisely expended, and for one I am not willing to place the limitation on this expenditure that my colleague desires.

Mr. RANDALL. As a general rule the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] might operate to advantage—I mean outside of such bureaus as those which regulate the scientific examination by the Government. But I think the scientific bureaus are an exception to what I should consider the proper regulations. It might be that this Geological Survey desired to employ a professor in a college who was a specialist in a particular branch of science. I fear that this amendment might debar the country from getting the knowledge possessed by that individual.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman will pardon me for interrupting him, I will say that I have made a verbal change in the amendment, which makes it applicable only to those receiving annual salaries in connection with the survey.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not so understand the amendment originally.

Mr. SPRINGER. I does not prohibit payment for particular essays on particular subjects.

Mr. RANDALL. Large amounts under this appropriation are given to professors in colleges, but they are given for what I call special work, and they are only paid for that work, and we might not be able to secure the services on an annual salary of a man who would do justice to that particular branch of science.

Now I want to say that the Committee on Appropriations have had more difficulty in securing what may be thought to be the reform necessary in relation to these scientific bureaus than they have had in reference to other branches of their duties. In the first place we find the commission divided in sentiment as to what should be done. We have not the power of legislating on this bill, if they agreed unanimously, differently from the existing laws, and the only possible way we have been able to reach a remedy of what seems to be some extravagance and some abuses has been by cutting the appropriation; and as to this bureau, we have conformed, I think, as far as we could by way of limitation to the views of the gentleman from Alabama. In this condition of things some of us on the Committee on Appropriations were quite ready to reduce those expenditures below $400,000. They asked for $550,000, an excess over the present appropriation of $150,000. Finally the judgment of the committee settled upon $400,000, the amount of last year, to be given again this year in the absence of any positive recommendation from the commission.

I am ready and willing as one member of this committee to co-operate with any member in attaching proper amendments to this bill that will remedy any existing abuses.

Mr. SYMES. I hope this amendment will not prevail. If this amendment prevails a large portion of the most valuable information contained in the publications I have referred to will cost about ten times what it does now. To illustrate: In a mining district where practical mining is going on and large mines are being developed, there are several young, ambitious, able mining engineers in charge of these mines. Now, sir, they keep notes, they keep a sort of journal, they keep up their maps describing the character of the ore and the character of the geological formations through which the shafts incline or which they penetrate. The manager of the Geological Bureau can employ these men simply to turn over to him this information for a pittance. It is practical, it is valuable, it is what these men absorb in their calling every day. But if he was to employ mining geologists and send them to those districts and let them make the necessary investigations and spend the necessary time to obtain the same information, it would cost ten times as much. I do not think my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] understands this subject or he would not offer this amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman from Colorado does he think a man who is a professor of geology in Yale College staying there the year round should receive $4,000 from the Government of the United States in connection with this survey?

Mr. SYMES. Upon this branch of the subject I am not so well posted, but I understand that those employments arise in this way: The bureau desires a paper upon some important subject and a professor in some college spends his vacation in investigating the subject, and they pay him for writing a paper upon that particular subject; but I do not understand that any of those gentlemen draw annual salaries.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to correct a misapprehension that may arise from the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] based upon the minority report. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES] is in part right, but he is partly mistaken. There are several professors in colleges who draw regular salaries, some of them as much as $4,000 a year. Professor Marsh, of Yale College, is the chief of the section of paleontology, and he is paid $4,000 a year, and others draw salaries nearly or quite as large. It is true, however, that the majority of the sixty-nine persons mentioned in the report are paid, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] says, for special work.

Mr. RANDALL. I really have not any objection to this amendment if it does not prevent the employment upon particular work of such men as Professor Marsh and others who are at the head of their respective branches.

Mr. HERBERT. I will state to the gentleman that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], as it now stands, would not prevent the employment of Professor Marsh or Professor Emmons, or any other gentleman from doing special work.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Then what is the use of the amendment?

Mr. HERBERT. It simply applies to those persons who are professors in colleges, and who at the same time draw an annual salary from the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. So that you would not allow them to have salaries from the Government, but you would let the Government pay them for special work. I do not know whether that would be economy or not.

Mr. REED, of Maine. As I understand it, the only objection is to the method of paying these gentlemen.

Mr. SPRINGER. You may say that it is an objection to the method. I am opposed to putting anybody on the pay-roll of the United States at an annual salary and paying him monthly, when everybody knows that during that very time he is engaged in teaching in a college or university, or otherwise employed. If these gentlemen owe their services to the Government and the Government has to pay them let us pay for what we get; in other words, let us call it piece-work and pay them for what they actually do, so long as they have other engagements with private institutions or corporations which occupy the greater portion of their time.

Mr. REED, of Maine. What difference does it make how we pay them if we get the equivalent for our money?

Mr. SPRINGER. It makes a great difference if we do not get an equivalent for our money, which I assume to be the fact here.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Precisely. The gentleman from Illinois assumes that to be the fact, but I wish he would give us some evidence of it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make that assumption, because I assume that if anybody does his duty as a professor in any college in this country he can not at the same time serve the United States so as to be entitled to a salary of $4,000.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But that is entirely an assumption.

Mr. FARQUHAR. And it is a gratuitous assumption. Mr. Chairman, I say on behalf of the scientific men of America that that statement made upon this floor is unfair and unjust. Without wishing to take part in this debate, I say here that I know there is no college in this country that pays any of these eminent scientific men a salary commensurate with his services; but, between work done for private individuals and scientific works issued by publishing-houses and the demands of the Government for their services, certain of these men—Professor Marsh and others—do make reasonable incomes. The Government can not afford to pay a whole year's salary in these cases, but they can afford to pay for service done at odd times at the convenience of these scientific men. That has been the custom; is the custom with the Government; it is the custom with private individuals; it is the custom with State governments, especially in regard to geological work.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to place the Government service upon the same basis that every private individual would desire to place his business upon. Is there a college or any other institution in the United States that will pay a member of Congress an annual salary of $4,000 from year to year and allow him to come here and serve the Government for eight or nine months in the year? It may have been done for one term in the case of Professor Seelye—I do not know whether he was paid by the college during his Congressional term or not—but I do not believe there is a mercantile house, or a banking house, or a corporation, or an educational institution in this country that will pay a man a salary from year to year, as we are doing in these cases, and allow him to spend most of his time in some other pursuit or employment.

Mr. REED, of Maine. And yet the very facts in this case, as cited by the gentleman from Illinois himself, show that what he does not believe would be done is in fact done. Here is Professor Marsh receiving a yearly salary from the United States and at the same time receiving a yearly salary from his college. Why, the very facts the gentleman produces work just as well one way as they do the other.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; but Professor Marsh serves the college for nine months in the year, and gives us only his odds and ends.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Well, the odds and ends are worth what we pay.

Mr. SPRINGER. I doubt that.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Show it to be otherwise, if you doubt it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I show it by the fact that right here on this desk is Professor Marsh's essay on birds with teeth, and that same essay was reproduced by him at another time nearly verbatim in another volume. Now, why should he be paid twice for such work as that?

Mr. REED, of Maine. If that strikes the gentleman from Illinois as an argument, or as conclusive, I must leave it to the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. It does strike me as conclusive so far as showing that we have been paying one of these professors twice over for doing the same work. Furthermore, birds with four teeth are not very important in the scientific researches of this country, and I think we might be able to get along without these essays on that subject.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. SPRINGER, and it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For care, repair, and refurnishing the Executive Mansion, $16,000, to be expended under the direction of the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, by contract or otherwise, as may be most economical and advantageous to the Government.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out this paragraph, and shall move to strike out the three succeeding paragraphs of the bill. I make this motion, not because of any desire to criticise specially these items or to carp at these appropriations; but I do it in the interest of gentlemen who I know will be very seriously embarrassed if these provisions are not stricken from the bill. It would be a very embarrassing condition of affairs if this most important appropriation bill should receive the veto of the President. Yet there is almost a certainty that gentlemen who may insist upon retaining these paragraphs in the bill will force upon him the necessity of a veto. One of these paragraphs provides for an expenditure of $16,000 for refurnishing the White House, a building that was furnished less than eighteen months ago at a cost of many thousands of dollars, and was then put in complete repair. This appropriation is proposed too in face of the fact that $12,500 was expended in this same way last year by the administration that came into office so soon after the complete refurnishing and repair to which I have referred. The other items are:

For fuel for the Executive Mansion and greenhouses, $3,000.
For care and necessary repair of greenhouses, $4,000.
For repair of conservatory of Executive Mansion, $6,000.

These three items, together with the one under consideration, make a total of $29,000 of comparatively unnecessary and useles expenditure. What reason in the world, Mr. Chairman, can the head of the present administration, wedded as it is to "Jeffersonian simplicity," intent as it is upon the strictest possible economy, have for expending $29,000 on furniture and flowers? Why, sir, we know that the President will not tolerate useless, extravagant, wasteful expenditure of the public money in this way.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I hope it will not interrupt my colleague for me to remind him that the expenditure here proposed is three times what the President will save on the seventy-five pension bills he has already vetoed.

Mr. HEPBURN. I was about to say that the President has given us earnest of his purpose to guard carefully and sedulously the public Treasury. He is known to be a man of kind heart, a man of great personal generosity, a man whose emotions go out in almost irresistible streams toward all those worthy objects of charity that are everywhere to be seen about him. And we know that when he nerved himself to the unthankful duty of vetoing the pension bills for sixty destitute old soldiers and widows there must have been an extraordinary necessity for it; that he must have been constrained by his official oath, that his sense of duty and his admiration for "Jeffersonian simplicity" must have compelled him to veto those bills. Yet they appropriated in the aggregate less than $7,000, one-fourth of the sum which this committee—recklessly it seems to me—is now trying to force him to expend in new furniture and flowers! [Laughter.] Why, Mr. Chairman, he will not do it. Gentlemen, he will veto this bill if you do not strike out these provisions; and what a position you will then be in! [Laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, obtained the floor, and said: I yield my time to my colleague [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Should this bill be vetoed, what will become of the Government? We must have money in order that the wheels may go around. Mr. Chairman, there are so many hungry Democrats waiting for the passage of this bill that it will not do to have it vetoed, and hence it will not do to permit these obnoxious items to remain in it, compelling the President to exercise his veto.

I therefore urge gentlemen on the other side of the House not to allow these unnecessary, extravagant, wasteful items of expense. What would a man wedded to "Jeffersonian simplicity" do with $16,000 worth of new furniture? What can he possibly do with $13,000 worth of flowers? [Laughter.] Just think of it, gentlemen—you who rode into power upon the idea of restoring "Jeffersonian simplicity" to the administration of public affairs! How many times during the campaign of a couple of years ago were we referred to the old prototype of simplicity? How many times did the Democratic orators draw the picture of Mr. Jefferson riding alone, on a mud-besprinkled horse, along Pennsylvania avenue to the Capitol, dismounting without any attendant near him, hitching his horse to a Virginia rail-fence, and going into the Senate Chamber to take the oath of office? This is the picture of "Jeffersonian simplicity" which enabled you gentlemen to elect your President. And now you are trying to force him to a directly opposite position. You are seeking to compel him to waste $16,000 of the public money on magnificent new furniture and $13,000 a year on flowers and bouquets. Do not do it. Such appropriations will be abhorrent and repulsive to every idea of "Democratic simplicity" in the mind of that excellent gentleman.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] will give me his attention, I would like to ask him whether he was a member of the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, yes, sir; but I was not wedded to "Jeffersonian simplicity."

Mr. RANDALL. I will show you that we are on that road. The Forty-seventh Congress appropriated for this purpose at its first session $20,000, and at the second session $25,000. That was under your President. Under ours we have reduced it to $16,000. [Applause.] That truly was in the line of Jeffersonian simplicity. Perhaps next year we will do better. We now have a most able housekeeper there. [Applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN rose. [Cries of "Vote!" "Regular order!" and great confusion.]

Mr. RANDALL. That is all I have to say. The gentleman has struck outside of the facts when he essayed to attack this provision.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman recollects in the Forty-seventh Congress the Executive Mansion was newly furnished under Mr. Arthur's administration. Does he recollect what the appropriation was for this purpose when Mr. Hayes was President?

Mr. SOWDEN. He never was President. [Great laughter and applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. I make the comparison between two bachelor Presidents. Our President at present and in the future is fortunately blessed with a partner for life. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. I wish to refresh the recollection of my friend from Pennsylvania that when Hayes was President—— [Cries of "He never was President!" and laughter.] That is pretty cheap. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] I wish to call my friend's attention to the fact that during the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses the expenditures were much smaller than are recommended by the committee in this bill. At that time the furniture and carpets had grown to be absolutely shabby. Indeed the furniture was so shabby it would soil any one who would put a finger upon it.

Mr. RANDALL. In 1880, which was the year alluded to, the appropriation was cut down in a paragraph like this to $25,000. In this appropriation we have gone $9,000 below that. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. It was newly furnished when Garfield was President.

Mr. RANDALL. I may say there is no one in the United States, no matter who occupies the Executive Mansion, who does not wish to see it kept up in a proper manner. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. That is true. I am delighted the gentleman from Pennsylvania takes that position, but I do say that during the Forty-fifth Congress, when the gentleman was either Speaker or chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the appropriations for the Executive Mansion were absolutely shabby, so that every American citizen was ashamed to go inside of it.

The question recurred on Mr. HEPBURN'S amendment, and it was disagreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I will now move that the committee rise, but before I do so I desire to state to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] that I have received a letter from the Navy Department touching the paragraph to which he called attention on yesterday. My object is to go into the House now for the purpose of passing upon certain conference reports on appropriation bills, and after these are concluded I will ask to go back into Committee of the Whole and have read the letter to which I refer.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Why not take it up to-morrow?

Mr. RANDALL. That will suit me.

The motion that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. REAGAN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, the House and Senate conferees have agreed upon a report upon the Post-Office appropriation bill, which I send to the desk, accompanied by a statement on the part of the House conferees as to its effect.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, and 6 to the bill of the House No. 5887, making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, and 6.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same.

JAMES H. BLOUNT,
JOHN M. TAYLOR,
HENRY H. BINGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. B. PLUMB,
WILLIAM MAHONE,
JAMES B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

The conferees on the part of the House make the following statement in connection with the conference report on bill H. R. 5887, making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department, as provided by the rules of the House of Representatives in Rule XXIX.

The Senate amendment numbered 3 provided as follows:

"(3) The Postmaster-General is authorized, after due advertisement, to contract for inland and foreign steamboat mail service, when it can be combined in one route, where the foreign office or offices are not more than 200 miles distant from the domestic office, on the same terms and conditions as inland steamboat service, and pay for the same out of the appropriation for inland steamboat service; said contracts to be made with and performed by American built and registered steamships."

The Senate recedes from it.

This leaves the Postmaster-General to make contracts for the carriage of the mails from the west coast of Florida via Key West to Havana under a provision of law in the Post-Office appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, which is in the following language:

"The Postmaster-General is authorized to contract for inland and foreign steamboat mail service, when it can be combined in one route, where the foreign office or offices are not more than 200 miles distant from the domestic office, on the same terms and conditions as inland steamboat service, and pay for the same out of the appropriation for inland steamboat service."

This, in the opinion of the Postmaster-General and of the Attorney-General, gives the Postmaster-General the same power to contract for said service as he would have under the Senate amendment.

The effect of the receding on the part of the Senate from the fourth amendment is to reduce the sum for railway postal car service $80,000, leaving the amount for the service as it was when it originally passed the House.

The sixth amendment provided a rate of compensation not exceeding 50 cents a nautical mile each way traveled, for the transportation of foreign mails by American built and registered ships plying between the United States and Brazil, the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, the Sandwich, West India, and Windward Islands, New Caledonia, China, and Japan, amounting to $800,000.

The receding from this amendment reduces the amount of foreign mail service in the sum just named.

The House concurred with the Senate amendment numbered 5, with an amendment in the following language: "To be expended in the discretion of the Postmaster-General." The receding of the House from its amendment leaves the matter in the discretion of the Postmaster-General under the law, and the House amendment if agreed to would have been mere surplusage.

JAMES H. BLOUNT,
JOHN M. TAYLOR,
HENRY H. BINGHAM,
House Conferees.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move the adoption of the report.

The motion was agreed to. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BRAGG. I am directed to report back from the conference committee the Army appropriation bill.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6395) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Y., as follows: Ten clerks at $1,200 each; twenty-five clerks at $1,100 each; and ninety clerks at $1,000 each, said sums to be in full for all pay, commutations, and allowances; in all, $129,500.

And the Senate agree to the same.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of said amendment insert the following:

"For the purchase of subsistence supplies: For issue as rations to troops, civil employés when entitled thereto, contract surgeons, hospital-matrons, military convicts at posts, prisoners of war (including Indians held by the Army as prisoners, but for whose subsistence appropriation is not otherwise made), estimated for the fiscal year on the basis of 9,971,800 rations; for sales to officers and enlisted men of the Army; for authorized extra issue of candles, and salt and vinegar for public animals; for issues to Indians visiting military posts, and to Indians employed with the Army without pay as guides and scouts; for payments for cooked rations for recruiting parties and recruits; for hot coffee, canned beef, and baked beans for troops traveling, when it is impracticable to cook their rations; for scales, weights, measures, utensils, tools, stationery, blank books and forms, printing, advertising, commercial newspapers, use of telephones, office furniture; for temporary buildings, cellars, and other means of protecting subsistence supplies (when not provided by the Quartermaster's Department); for bake-ovens at posts and in the field, and repairs thereof; for extra pay to enlisted men employed on extra duty in the Subsistence Department for periods of not less than ten days, at rates fixed by law; for compensation of civilians employed in the Subsistence Department, and for other necessary expenses incident to the purchase, care, preservation, issue, sale, and accounting for subsistence supplies for the Army; for the payment of the regulation allowances for commutation in lieu of rations to enlisted men on furlough, to ordnance-sergeants on duty at ungarrisoned posts, to enlisted men stationed at places where rations in kind can not be economically issued, to enlisted men traveling on detached duty where it is impracticable to carry rations of any kind, to enlisted men selected to contest for places or prizes in department, division, and Army rifle competitions while traveling to and from places of contest; in all, $1,745,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War; and not more than $105,000 thereof shall be applied to the payment of civilian employés of the Subsistence Department."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from the matter proposed to be inserted the words "sixty-five thousand dollars" and insert in lieu thereof "sixty thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$3,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

EDWD. S. BRAGG,
EGBERT L. VIELÉ.
GEO. W. STEELE,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN A. LOGAN,
P. B. PLUMB,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask unanimous consent that the sitting of the House may be extended beyond 5 o'clock for the consideration of this and another conference report, which I understand is ready to be presented.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is asked to extend the time for adjournment sufficiently beyond 5 o'clock to allow the consideration of this report, and also of the conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill.

There was no objection.

The statement of the House conferees on the Army appropriation bill was read, as follows:

The House conferees on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6395) "making appropriations for the support of the Army," submit the following report and explanation of the changes made in the original bill by the conference committee, and of the effect thereof:

The first amendment reduces the amount appropriated for the pay of enlisted men in the Army from $4,303,108 to $4,276,588.

The second and third amendments provide a substitute for the provisions in the original bill, and Senate amendment for the pay of enlisted men serving as general-service clerks and general-service messengers. The effect of this amendment adds twenty-two men to the general-service-clerk service, making the number appropriated for one hundred and twenty-five instead of one hundred and three, and increases the amount appropriated $33,678.75.

The fourth amendment restores the House bill relating to mileage to be paid officers, but limits the expenditure to $130,000, and strikes out the words "but in no case shall the whole amount paid exceed 8 cents a mile."

The fifth amendment adds the words "and for that purpose shall constitute one fund" at the end of the appropriations for the Pay Department, the effect of which is to prevent any misconstruction by the accounting officers in their dealings with the Paymaster-General.

Sixth amendment is but an incorporation of a substitute for the original bill and the Senate amendment, which it was deemed advisable to make, as a clearer and more definite statement of the purposes to which the appropriation for the Subsistence Department might be applied, and reducing the amount appropriated in the original bill from $2,046,030 to $1,745,000; and also striking out the reduction of clerks from the fifth to the fourth class, and reducing the amount of the appropriation that may be used in payment of civilian employés from $120,000 to $105,000.

Amendments numbered 7, 8, 9, 11 and 12 are mere changes of phraseology, and do not alter the House bill in substance.

Amendment numbered 10 strikes out limitation on civilian employés in Quartermaster's Department, but does not affect the bill in matter of substance, as the same limitation is now existing law.

Amendment numbered 13 fixes the maximum limit of clerk's pay at $150 per month, unless the same be specially fixed by law.

Amendment numbered 15, of the Senate, which was agreed to: Strike out the appropriation of the House of $20,000 for the erection of quarters for commissary sergeants, &c.

Amendment numbered 16, which was agreed to: Strike out $10,000 appropriated in House bill for chapels, school-houses, &c.

Amendment numbered 19, which was adopted: Add the word "disinfectants" in enumerating the purposes for which the appropriation to the Medical Department could be expended in providing.

Amendment numbered 21, which was adopted: Limits the amount which may be paid civilian employés in the Medical Department to $36,000.

Amendment numbered 27, which was adopted: Makes the appropriation for manufacture of small-arms at national armories at $400,000 instead of $300,000, as provided in the House bill, and also removes the limitation of salary upon clerks as fixed in the House bill, but limits the amount of expenditure for the Ordnance Department in all its branches, for civilian clerks, to the sum of $60,000.

Amendment numbered 28, which was adopted with an amendment: Appropriates $3,000 for expenses of the Signal Service of the Army.

There was no provision in the House bill relating to the Signal Service.

Amendment numbered 30, proposed by the Senate, was agreed to with an amendment making the contingent fund of the Secretary of War $15,000 instead of $10,000, as provided in the original bill.

The bill, as amended by the conference report, appropriates $23,621,107.21, which is $391,945.31 less than the appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the House concur in the report.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to make a report from the committee of conference on the agricultural appropriation bill, and I move its adoption.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House, 7481, making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and strike out in line 21, page 3 of the bill, the word "eleven" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten." Strike out, in line 5, page 4 of the bill, the words "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the words "twenty-three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 30, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. HOAR, and by unanimous consent, its further reading was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter of the Secretary of the Navy asking an appropriation of $186,998 to complete the three steel cruisers—the Chicago, Boston, and Atlanta—and to pay the amount due on the dispatch-boat Dolphin; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the assistant treasurer at Cincinnati, Ohio, asking to be allowed an extra watchman for his office; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade of Portland, Oreg., declaring that the resolutions adopted at a special meeting of the board June 24, 1886, protesting against the forfeiture of the land grant on the Cascade branch of the Northern Pacific Railroad were inconsiderate and illegal, and directing that they be expunged from the records of the meeting.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Mr. President, I wish to say in reference to the resolutions which have just been laid before the Senate by the President of the Senate that the Board of Trade of the city of Portland, State of Oregon, is composed of several hundred, I believe—I do not know exactly how many—of the most respectable and influential business and professional men of the city of Portland, and their views with reference to matters pertaining exclusively to the commercial interests of that city should be and with me are very potential. Those of us, however, who are so fortunate, or unfortunate, as the case may be, as to hold positions in the Senate and House of Representatives are necessarily compelled to take a somewhat broader view of legislative matters here than it is expected will be taken by a board representing almost exclusively the commercial interests of a particular city.

Therefore I, as one of the representatives of that State in the Senate, in connection with my colleague, have believed it to be for the material and commercial interests of Eastern Oregon in particular and Washington Territory, and of the whole nation, that there should be a speedy completion of the line of the Northern Pacific Railroad across the Cascade Mountains to Portland via Puget Sound, thus making a through connection to the Pacific seaboard, for the benefit not only of the farmers and producers of Eastern Oregon and Eastern Washington Territory, Idaho, and Montana, but for the people generally of the East and of the whole nation East and West. In this connection permit me to attract attention to the fact that the farmers and producers generally of Eastern Oregon and of Eastern Washington Territory are now subjected to burdens in the matter of freight charges along the Columbia River that are unparalleled in the history of transportation in this or in fact in any other country. Wheat producers are compelled to pay now $6 a ton for transporting their wheat from Wallula, Wash., to Portland, Oreg., a distance of 214 miles, whether they transport it on the cars of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company on their railroad along the banks of the Columbia River, or whether they transport it on the river boats to Portland and controlled by the same company. It is at the rate of nearly 19 cents per bushel for 214 miles, or at the rate of nearly 3 cents per ton per mile.

Therefore we have thought and we still think, notwithstanding the Portland Board of Trade has changed its opinion upon the subject from that expressed a few days since in a memorial presented here, that we would be false to our duty if we were to sit idly by in the Senate and not lift up our voices and give our votes in favor of the encouragement of a competing line to the seaboard for the benefit of the producers of Eastern Oregon and Eastern Washington Territory, and especially when in our judgment the commercial importance of our metropolitan city of Portland is to be promoted by such action.

We have no fight, at least I have none personally, upon the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company or its managers. The men who control that company are highly respectable and enterprising business men. Nor are we interested in advancing the individual interests of any other company or corporation. We have, however, an interest in the welfare of the producers and shippers of that country and of the consumers as well. We believe we ought to do all we can to aid in the completion of competing lines by rail and water, to the end that freight charges along the Columbia basin and down the great Columbia Valley to the seaboard may be reduced to some reasonable and proper limit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions of the Board of Trade of Portland will be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of 24 citizens of Potsdam, N. Y., praying for the passage of the bill to tax oleomargarine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CULLOM presented the memorial of 32 Knights of Labor of Englewood, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the petition of Dr. J. N. McCord and 31 other citizens of Fayette County, Illinois, praying for the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HAWLEY. I present sixteen petitions, signed in the aggregate by 1,605 citizens of Connecticut, praying for the passage of the following measures at the present session of Congress:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;

2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays and punishing bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of the Massachusetts Fish and Game Protective Association, signed by Edward A. Samuels, its president, and Henry J. Thayer, its secretary, praying that Congress enact laws for the protection of mackerel by prohibiting their sale during the spawning season; which was referred to the Committee on Fisheries.

Mr. MILLER. I present a large number of petitions from various parts of the State of New York, praying for the passage of the following measures:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL presented six petitions of citizens of Cass and other counties in Missouri, praying the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BLAIR. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the message of the President of the United States returning to the Senate with his objections the bill (S. 2005) granting a pension to Mary J. Nottage, to report the bill back with the papers, and ask that the report now submitted be printed and placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair). That order will be made in the absence of objection.

SUSPENSION OF PUBLIC LAND LAWS.

Mr. MANDERSON. There was referred by the Senate to the Committee on Printing a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of the Land Office relative to a certain circular of that office. The Senate ordered the letters printed, and referred the maps and accompanying papers to the Committee on Printing to report as to the advisability of printing those exhibits. On investigation the committee found that to print the papers and maps would cost $3,960 for the usual number. The committee, therefore, called upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office to see whether the exhibits and maps could by any process be reduced. He has very materially reduced them, so that we find the cost will be but $32.50 for the document in its present form. The committee, therefore, recommend the printing of the usual number of the accompanying papers.

The report was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 2778) to authorize the Billings, Clark's Fork and Cooke City Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Crow Indian reservation, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM (for Mr. LOGAN) introduced a bill (S. 2780) granting a pension to Miss Anna Platt; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (for Mr. LOGAN) introduced a bill (S. 2781) granting a pension to Rebecca Lemmon; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MILLER introduced a bill (S. 2782) for the relief of Ellie McRoberts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EDMUNDS introduced a bill (S. 2783) to vest in the President of the United States the appointment of sundry inferior officers thereof, to regulate their tenure of office, and to provide for their removal when the public interests shall require it; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT TO BILL.

Mr. HARRIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EMMA H. FISH.

Mr. CONGER. Yesterday the bill (H. R. 1185) for the relief of Emma H. Fish was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, and I do not find it on the Calendar. I suppose that it was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. CAMERON. The bill was reported adversely, and indefinitely postponed.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed will be reconsidered, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. CONGER. In this connection I think it proper to say that very often bills are reported and indefinitely postponed without any notice to anybody, and in the absence of Senators who supposed that the bills would not be reported adversely. There should be some way in which there will be some record made of that action except the general reports of committees.

I have asked that the bill be placed on the Calendar, for from my own knowledge of the case Congress has on many occasions reported favorably and has passed just such bills. I should like to have the bill on the Calendar so that I can find out if possible on what grounds the adverse report was made.

Mr. CAMERON. I will say in reply to the Senator that he will have no difficulty in finding out on what ground the bill was reported adversely. There was a written report made in the case.

Mr. CONGER. It is the opportunity to find that I desire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been ordered to be placed on the Calendar.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. GRAY, it was Ordered, That M. C. Mordecai have leave to withdraw the papers in his case from the files of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had appointed Mr. RICE a conferee on the bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, in the place of Mr. HITT, excused.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 5201) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 5887) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887;

A bill (H. R. 985) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer the United States barracks at Baton Rouge, La., to the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College at said place for educational purposes, and granting to the city of Marquette, Mich., certain lands for park purposes;

A bill (H. R. 2148) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a building for the use of the United States circuit and district courts of the United States, the post-office, and other Government offices at Williamsport, Pa.," and making an additional appropriation therefor; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 177) appointing managers for the National Homes for Disabled Soldiers to fill vacancies in the board which occurred by expiration of terms April 21, 1886.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no "concurrent and other resolutions" the Calendar is now in order.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution in regard to open sessions. Indeed unanimous consent was given yesterday that the speech of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] should be read at this time.

Mr. EVARTS. The Senator from Massachusetts will allow me to make a suggestion, which is not intended to interfere with the order of proceeding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. EVARTS. I wish to call attention to Order of Business 1124, being the joint resolution (H. Res. 125) in recognition of the services of Joseph Francis, which was reached on the Calendar during my necessary absence from the city, and upon the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] it was then passed over because of this absence.

I learn now that the Senator from New Jersey, who wishes also to take part in this matter, though it will occupy very little time, will be obliged to leave the city before long; and I now, with the indulgence of the Senate, will say that to-morrow morning, immediately after the morning business, I shall ask an opportunity to make some observations upon this subject, and, as I hope, as the matter involves very little except the attention of the Senate for a short time, to have a decision of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 163, being the resolution submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] declaring that executive nominations shall hereafter be considered in open session.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to interfere this morning with the arrangement which I understand has been made in reference to taking up the resolution, but I give notice that after the Senator from Massachusetts shall have concluded I wish to go on with the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill without further interruption.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, for I propose to accept the Senator's determination upon that subject, because he is in charge of the appropriation bill, and I wish to do what is necessary for the public business, I desire to ask him whether he proposes to object to going into executive session at an early hour to-day? If so, it will be convenient for the Senate to know that fact.

Mr. ALLISON. I certainly will object to that. I think we ought to finish the legislative appropriation bill before we take up any other matter.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator will pardon me a single suggestion, it is obvious that the appropriation bill can not be passed to become effectual during this fiscal year. The necessary joint resolution to continue existing appropriations for a period of ten or fifteen days must be passed to-day. Therefore there is no reason, so far as I can understand, why there should be any particular haste or precipitation about the passage of the appropriation bill to-day. We should gain nothing by it.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall not debate the question, but will submit it to the Senate when the time comes.

Mr. INGALLS. We ought to have an executive session to-day.

Mr. HOAR. I do not make any contest on the point.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSIONS WITH OPEN DOORS.

Mr. MANDERSON. Acting for the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who is detained from the Chamber and from his duty by severe illness, I ask that the resolution which is now before the Senate be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. PLATT January 29, 1886, as follows:

Resolved, That executive nominations shall hereafter be considered and acted upon in open session, except when otherwise ordered by vote of the Senate, and so much of section 2, Rule XXXVI, and section 2, Rule XXXVIII, of the standing rules of the Senate as conflicts with or is inconsistent with the above is to the extent of such inconsistency rescinded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I pass to the Secretary's desk the proposed amendment submitted by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. MORRILL:

Strike out the words "executive nominations" and insert in lieu thereof the words "reciprocity treaties, so called."

Mr. MORRILL.* Mr. President, it is temerity, I am well aware, for me to appear in opposition to any measure of the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], and let me add that it is very rarely that any one here finds occasion to differ from that Senator, but I have noticed that those who are seldom wrong, when they are wrong, are apt to be conspicuously wrong, and I have a sincere conviction that for once my learned friend is immensely wrong. No other Senator has yet opposed his resolution for open executive sessions, and, therefore, I feel it the more an imperative duty to present, for whatever they may be worth, such reasons as occur to me why the resolution should be rejected or radically amended. On this question there can be no division on party lines. All parties are equally interested. Nor is it a question of to-day only, but a question for all time, and to be decided, as it was a hundred years ago, by such statesmanship as the country finds in its service.

In listening to the arguments of distinguished Senators in favor of changing the rules of the Senate so as to hold executive sessions with open doors, there would seem to have been a sudden resurrection of ancient erudition concerning legislative sessions with closed doors, as if legislative sessions had some analogy or correlation to executive sessions, when the high purpose and business of the sessions are fundamentally distinct and independent. Arguments pertinent to one are destitute of all relevancy to the other. Open doors for legislative sessions, unknown in Europe at the date of the Declaration of our Independence, was wholly an American victory; but open doors for executive sessions would be an American defeat, a failure on the part of the Senate, handicapped as it would be by new and hostile conditions, to maintain intact its constitutional and confidential executive functions.

Before I proceed further, let me for a moment refer to a point made rather triumphantly by the Senator from Connecticut, which also to me seems irrelevant. He has stated that he had seen "men, strong in other respects, relegated to private life simply on account of their use of patronage of the Government." Suppose that to be true, would it not then be difficult to show what relation it has with executive sessions of the Senate? The Executive Mansion under all circumstances offers the only gateways to patronage. But I deny the validity of the charge. "Strong men" seldom rely upon patronage for their support. They find it an embarrassment. It was not the prop of Webster, nor of Benton, nor of Douglas, nor of Thurman, nor of any of the "strong men" I now see about me. The distinguished Senator further added these words:

I have found it the general, if not the universal, custom of Senators to solicit nominations at the hands of the President, and then come here and act upon those nominations in secret session. If there be a more monstrous impropriety than that I do not know what it is.

Let me say, if the nomination was fit to be solicited and fit to be made, where is the "impropriety" in coming here and acting upon it? If Senators are ever guilty of seeking the nominations of their personal adherents from the President simply because they are their personal adherents, with no reference to other merits or to the public welfare, no wonder they are relegated to private life; but when a vacancy has occurred in any public office in Connecticut I presume the worthy Senator has never refused to convey to the President the wishes of his people and to urge the nomination of a proper person to fill the vacancy. Having done this, where is the "monstrous impropriety" of acting upon the nomination, so fairly obtained, in secret session and of urging its confirmation? After a nomination thus sought by a Senator, if he were to come here and oppose its confirmation I concede that might be "monstrous impropriety." Does not my esteemed friend see that it is the first step that costs, and if there is any impropriety it all hangs on soliciting the nomination? The marvel is, how open-door executive sessions are to cure this newly discovered but rather shadowy impropriety.

After all, no Senator can look on with complacency and see his State utterly neglected by any administration in its distribution of official public trusts, and, if he is not consulted, he must from State pride and party loyalty sometimes and in some way volunteer his expostulations; and that, as I conceive, without any "monstrous impropriety," or crucifixion even of the highest-toned civil-service reform.

The claim that public sentiment is clamorous for open executive sessions of the Senate, as it appears to me, should not be accepted even with a grain of salt; and at present the state of public sentiment at the most must be classed among the things unknowable. There has been no serious public discussion of the subject insomuch as one-quarter part of the several States, and though Senators may hereafter have, as trusted exponents of the subject, a potential and, as I must hope, salutary influence in their respective States in enlightening and guiding the public judgment, I very much question whether a majority of the people in a single State have yet formed any fixed opinion on the subject. In due time, should the subject reach the dignity of a public question, they may be willing to hear and weigh all arguments, pro or con, but they will not decide upon the merits of the whole question before they have heard anything about it.

We are all easily persuaded to think public sentiment is in accord with and supports our own ideas and conclusions. The least whisperings in that direction are melodious and carefully treasured up; but there is seldom any ear for discordant voices, and no census of the silent multitude is ever reported.

Executive sessions of the Senate with closed doors were ordained and established by the founders of the Republic, by such worthies as Washington, Adams, Jefferson, and Madison. Before we charge these early American statesmen, all republican to the very core, with a gross political blunder, anti-republican in character, had we not better inquire whether or not any blunder has been committed? The proposition now made is to conduct the business of executive sessions—so far as nominations to office are concerned—with open doors, and will consequently offer on all such occasions a tempting invitation to the public to fill the galleries with an eager crowd to witness with uproarious delight a free spectacular entertainment. The simple statement of the proposition prompts negative answers, and would seem almost to make other refutation unnecessary. Have closed doors brought wrong upon any citizen? Will a Senator, who was a straight republican upon his entrance into an executive session with closed doors be in any danger of coming out an aristocrat? I can only answer for myself that I have never seen or felt any temptations in that direction, and I feel very certain, if any Senator should have aristocratic tendencies, they would all vanish or be smoked out of him by the inevitable fumigation which awaits him at every session as soon as the doors here are closed. The suggestion that these sessions are unrepublican because they are retired from the public gaze does not seem to be well-grounded, and the discovery that the Senate, because of these sessions, resembles the House of Lords, which, by the bye, holds no such sessions, is hardly eclipsed by the everpreposterous Mrs. Malaprop, who, instead of an alligator seems to have discovered once a "headstrong allegory on the banks of the Nile."

I am disposed to think that some opposition to executive sessions with closed doors has arisen from the unauthorized and unrecognizable reports of what has been said or done here by Senators. But open doors will not cause such reports to fall into "innocuous desuetude." Newspaper correspondents are properly ambitious to show their industry and their wit, perhaps rather too ambitious to show that caricature is a fine art; and if they are penned up throughout a dull day in the reporters' gallery without catching anything with which "to point a moral or adorn a tale," they will fall back upon their own original resources, and try to furnish some compensation for what they may hold to have been the shortcomings of Senators—whether with the doors opened or closed. It may not be a very profound grief to them to be told the next day that they were all wrong—they are not desperately wicked, but hopefully wait to be set right—and guileless Senators, unconscious of any trap or joke, sometimes, perhaps, attempt to set them right, which is all the "deft and debonair" reporters ever wanted. All will remember how the inimitable Grace Greenwood once gave a fancy sketch of an executive session where Charles Sumner and another dignified Senator were said to have played leap-frog, while other sedate members were having a sly game of poker behind their desks, and among many other unique performances I think she portrayed a wrestling match—go-and-catch-as-catch-can—between the two Morrills. All this hurt nobody, and the farce had its day.

These apocryphal reports, however, good-natured or otherwise, made in defiance of the commandment against bearing false witness, at once win a special reputation that carries a sufficient antidote for any intended or unintended poison. As an auxiliary force or argument in support of open executive sessions they are likely to prove no better than boomerangs, which often fly back to plague the inventors.

In spite of this, or even worse than this, I should hope that we may still pursue the even tenor of our way, and not feel too ambitious to have all we may say and do here daily reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. A "flash of silence" now and then will do the Senate no harm, and, otherwise, it is manifest that the annual procession of these ponderous Congressional volumes will become so extended and bulky that future generations will not attempt, what now requires a stretch of time and courage, to read even the index.

In executive sessions we have to consider and advise about treaties with foraign nations, which often involve matters of delicate and confidential international relations. Their publicity might frequently be productive of some harm. I do not know that any Senator proposes that ordinary treaties shall be discussed in open sessions, although it would greatly cheapen their surreptitious publication. Let me say, however, so long as I may remain a member of the Senate, if any executive administration—blind to all our own sad experience, as well as blind to the Constitution—shall negotiate what is romantically called a reciprocity treaty, regulating our own and some particular foreign tariff or any treaty which requires the supplemental action of the House of Representatives, I shall feel it to be my duty most certainly to urge its consideration and rejection in open session. There is no more propriety in considering a treaty tariff in secret, or a tariff about which only some foreigners have been consulted—utterly without any knowledge on the part of our own people, avoiding protest and comment from all those most interested—than there would be in concealing our action upon a legislative tariff law, or in suffering foreigners to be diplomatic dictators of its terms; and may I not be pardoned for once more humbly reiterating that there is no constitutional propriety in considering a so-called reciprocity treaty either in secret or open session; none whatever.

The radical invasion of the constitutional powers of the House of Representatives by the Senate in advising and consenting to reciprocity treaties, not one of which has ever practically turned out even decently satisfactory to the country, subjects the Senate to the damaging imputation of arrogating and disastrously using extraordinary powers and prerogatives to which it is clearly not entitled. The Committee of Ways and Means on the part of the House of Representatives have just reported a joint resolution requesting the President to give the required notice to terminate the Hawaiian treaty, and have also reported adversely upon the Mexican treaty. This is perhaps the death-knell of reciprocity bad bargains; and while we ought at once and forever to renounce the omnipotent and anti-republican power to make such treaties, my amendment now only proposes, should any of these tariff monstrosities hereafter appear, that they shall appear visible to all the world with open doors.

In executive sessions, also, the Senate has to advise and consent to a very wide range of executive nominations to fill all of the most important offices of the country. These may have partisan aspects, but they are mainly of personal importance, and require careful examination as to the character, fitness, and qualifications of the nominee for the office it is proposed to fill. It is mainly these personal details which we are to impartially and conscientiously weigh and scrutinize, and then give or withhold our advice and consent according to our best judgment. The general public takes very little interest in these personal matters—most often of merely local account—except that the Senate shall so faithfully and intelligently discharge its official duties that no harm shall befall the Republic. What do the people of Iowa care who is postmaster at Louisville, Ky., if he or she is a competent and faithful officer, and not likely to become a defaulter? What do the people of New England care about who is collector of internal revenue in North Carolina, if he is a competent and worthy man, not afraid of "moonshiners," and will honestly collect and deposit the revenue to the credit of the United States Treasury? Of course Senators, not wholly free from "offensive partisanship," greatly prefer nominees when selected from their own political party; but that is a condition irrevocably settled by the preference of the President himself, and it is rare that the Commander-in-Chief ever risks having a "bone to pick" with his own party by the gift of the smallest bone to his opponents.

It has sometimes happened after a nomination has been made that facts are communicated to the Senate which deserved to be made known to the President; and, when so made known, have induced the withdrawal of the nomination, and saved the extreme measure of rejection.

Considering the brief time the Senate can have to make sufficient and proper inquiries as to personal qualifications or disqualifications, there must be in our deliberations the utmost freedom and frankness, and that confidential relation which is willing to listen to the whole truth. It may very well happen that Senators may feel some embarrassment about discussing an old friend or neighbor whose intelligence and integrity they are, however, quite ready to indorse, and yet not quite ready to make an open and public declaration that their friend is wholly lacking in the efficiency and administrative ability required for the office under consideration. Many responsible public positions demand special learning or special training, and though the nominee may enjoy the reputation of having creditably filled other official positions, at length he may be named for a post where, as some of his best friends know, he would prove to be discreditably incompetent, or, as President Lincoln was in the habit of saying, would prove to be "a round peg in a square hole." Who would then be eager to step forth here and—

> Damn with faint praise, assent with civil leer,
> And, without sneering, teach the rest to sneer?

As soon as any executive nomination has been transmitted to the Senate abundant communications are often received by Senators from their correspondents favoring or condemning the nomination. If these are anonymous little or no weight is attached to them; but if serious charges are made over known and responsible signatures they must be investigated and the accused party notified and invited to answer. Often local party strife begets more or less personal bitterness. If there should seem to be any dirty linen adhering to the outgoing or to the incoming officer it has to be washed in executive sessions. It may all prove to be immaculate, but open sessions might furnish malignant correspondents with a tempting opportunity to traduce their political opponents. Even the complete public refutation of mere gossip often leaves behind an ineradicable stain from the fact that any refutation has ever been necessary.

Strange as it may appear, there is occasionally a nomination that reaches us which perhaps ought not to have been made, but which, from special reasons, the Executive can not apparently afford to withdraw, and which the Senate is almost unanimously agreed should neither be rejected nor confirmed. Under these circumstances the nomination, to use the language of Burke, by "a wise and salutary neglect," quietly drops out of sight with the end of the session.

Many well-deserving, modest men of high sensibilities would rather decline any nomination than to run the gauntlet of sharp tongues in an open session of the Senate, where not only virtues but deficiencies and vanities, if any can be found, may be paraded and forever recorded.

But worse than that, some nominee of distinguished genius, of much natural ability, who might have passed the ordeal without a scratch, only that recent habits have not been wholly concealed, and seem known to a few Senators to be such as must involve great risk as to whether the person named will at all times confine himself to

> The cups
> That cheer but not inebriate.

Yet such unwelcome cases sometimes turn up, and we know how reluctantly volunteer accusers come to the front.

It might possibly happen that even some Senator, goaded by the remembrance of unjust personal or political provocations, would exercise the privilege of free speech in an open session of the Senate to retaliate by becloudingthe character of some nominee with unwholesome criticisms or unanswerable innuendoes; but, instead of this, I more fear that we should have a surfeit of sweets from the Senators locally most interested in the form of an elaborate and eulogistic biography of each and every nominee to any office. The nominees would expect it. Their friends would hanker after it. Such eulogies, impregnated with poetry, might be very attractive to the inhabitants of Buncombe, who no doubt would be made to gaze at the sudden eminence of their cock-eyed fellow citizen and wonder "That one small head could carry all he knew." The literature might be excellent, but, unlike "The Old Farmers' Almanac," would hardly "answer for Boston and the surrounding country."

My observation here leads me to the conclusion that in executive sessions the testimony received is sifted with judicial fairness and that substantial truth is nearly always reached in the shortest possible space of time. I do not now remember an instance where any man's character has been wrongly and successfully assailed. In arrriving at an impartial and upright decision in an executive session of the Senate a popular audience would be no more helpful than it would be in aiding a verdict within a jury-room. The influence certainly would not be specially healthy. Beyond all this I have no doubt that open executive sessions would very greatly prolong the duration of every session of Congress. Much more time would be consumed, with less satisfactory results, and subject the Senate to criticism, unlike any now existing, which might have some just foundation.

But it is said that even if the doors of the Senate continue to be kept nominally closed the doings in executive sessions will somehow leak out and be sure to be disclosed. If that is inevitable, then open-door advocates are already sure of the full measure of their demands without further action; but it has been more than hinted by those who favor open sessions that disclosures much better than mere guess-work are made, and made by some incontinent member of the Senate. I have no opinion on that matter; but if the fact were to be admitted, it is a melancholy remedy which is now proposed, namely, to open the doors and galleries to all the world to prevent the leaky complaint from spreading and contaminating the whole Senate.

I am not willing to sacrifice the useful and wholesome methods of the founders of our republican institutions, even were the suspicion well founded, as I trust it is not, that seventy-six gentlemen are too many to be entrusted with confidential communications, or that there has been any offending member here; but, on sufficient proof of the violation of the penalty rule, as long as that remains the law of the case the offending member should be cut off. At the same time I should be glad to modify the rule and to let the obligation upon members, now hedged around with penalties, rest solely upon their individual sense of decency and propriety. If any member has obtained license and absolution for disobedience to the rule he may still feel the obligations of good breeding.

If it has been attempted by a tilt of so-called reformers in any quarter to bring executive sessions with closed doors into disrepute, if some libels by parties assuming the character of eaves-droppers or necromancers have appeared, or if, to our surprise, some open and eloquent assailants have appeared, let them all be squarely met by proclaiming our faith in the past, faith in the future that knows no fear, and steadfastly adhere to the American rule of honorably discharging the duties of executive sessions with closed doors, as was so clearly originally intended.

For myself I shall not, by favoring the change proposed, plead guilty to any charge or inference that the United States Senate with its doors closed is any less entitled to the confidence and respect of our fellow-countrymen than with its doors open.

It is very plain that members of the Senate with that knowledge only to be derived from actual experience must know the propriety and value of closed doors in executive sessions far better than any outsiders. I venture to think it may be well to have some confidence in ourselves, some courage to do our duty without apprehending that our own people are afraid to trust us out of sight. We shall all be judged at last according to our works. The Senate, even with the doors closed, fails not to make its record, and its conclusions in due season never fail to "leap to light." We need no other vindication.

The proposition to hold executive sessions of the Senate with open doors can not be maintained with any greater propriety or with more cogent reasons than a like proposition could be maintained to compel the President to admit spectators and reporters to the meetings of his Cabinet, and then to have all the facts, suggestions, and discussions, relevant and irrelevant, which may there appear in regard to nominations unloaded and dumped into the breezy columns of the evening and morning newspapers.

Under our standing rules, when the President of the United States shall meet the Senate in the Senate Chamber for the consideration of executive business, he is to have a seat on the right of the presiding officer. What a "field day" in an open session we should have with the President, "the manliest of men," at the right of the presiding officer, especially if, in addition to other visitors and to the Corps Diplomatique, the wife of the President, the first lady of the Republic, "glittering like the morning star, full of life and splendor," should happen to be in the reserved galleries.

Whether the President shall be present or not, the Senate, for the purposes indicated, is a fixed portion of the executive branch of the Government. One of the prominent constitutional features of the Senate is its participation in certain executive duties by which the otherwise absolute power of the President over the appointment and removal of United States officials is held in some check and made subject to the Senate's revision and co-operation. It is, as it was intended to be, a conspicuous republican limitation of executive power—a brake on the royal locomotive. The duties imposed are responsible but irksome, and no service in executive sessions on the part of Senators, however valuable, are likely to have any public recognition or to catch any beams of glory.

The executive functions of the Senate, so far as operative upon nominations, are exercised in the most obscure manner possible. If a good officer has been nominated and confirmed, the President has the sole credit of the selection, and the Senate, after its action, is no more thought of than a petit jury when discharged by the court after the rendition of its verdict. But if a bad officer is confirmed, the Senate does not escape its full share of criticism and responsibility. Its executive duties, to give advice when asked, are in no sense privileges, and the labor is not coveted; but it is labor performed without ostentation, and without the slightest reward. To style these duties of the Senate as an aristocratic prerogative would be no more appropriate than it would be to assert that the poor man's duty to pay his debts is an aristocratic prerogative, or to assert that the brakemen who sometimes check the speed of railroad trains with closed doors, exercise an autocratic power which should no longer be tolerated.

These humble and secondary duties of the Senate, of democratic origin, and of much governmental significance, would technically remain exactly the same, whether exercised in open or in secret sessions; but it is quite possible that—with a strong-willed nominating power, supported by an acquiescent majority of the Senate—executive sessions with open doors and with a claque in the galleries in behalf of nominees, if they should not sink to a farce, would soon leave the Senate, in its executive capacity, with a diminished independence that ultimately would only tamely register the edicts of the Executive Mansion. Disagreeable discussions over disagreeable nominations would be shunned and finally abandoned. The inevitable would be accepted.

The executive functions of the Senate are far less broad, as the Madison papers abundantly show, than many of the stern republicans in the constitutional convention of 1787 advocated, for they—ever distrustful of the prerogatives of a single ruler—attempted to endow the Senate with the sole power to appoint judges and other superior officers. The final adjustment, by which these appointments were all made dependent upon the approval of the Senate, was consented to as the minimum of control to be reserved to the Senate; and the time has not come for the Senate to abdicate any share of its executive functions, nor has the time come to confess its degeneracy by a pusillanimous abandonment of the only proper mode through which such functions have been or ever can be efficiently maintained.

All of the ordinary business of committees here, as well as in the House of Representatives, is conducted not open to the public, but with closed doors. According to Jefferson's Manual "the proceedings of a committee are not to be published, as they are of no force till confirmed by the House." By the Journals of the House of Representatives it will also be further seen that "it is not in order to allude on the floor to anything that has taken place in committee, unless by a written report sanctioned by a majority of the committee."

Even after the report no member of the committee is permitted to refer to anything or to divulge anything done in the committee "save what is to be found in the written report of the committee." This rule is daily enforced by the Speaker of the House, and was enforced conspicuously by Speaker CARLISLE a few days since in the notable case of FORAN and O'NEILL.

There are one hundred and two committees of Congress—forty-seven of the Senate and fifty-five of the House—constantly holding their sessions with closed doors; but does any brand-new reformer venture to stigmatize such sessions as belonging to the age of a "star-chamber" oligarchy, or that the hard-working members of these unseen committees are all aristocrats though wearing the livery of democrats?

The preliminary work of committees is the most important work done in Congress. The committees are the index-fingers which point and guide the ultimate action of both Houses. Is there any public clamor that these committees shall do their work with open doors? The work of the Senate in executive session, not being the consideration of legislative measures, much more requires that the public should be excluded until the ripe reports have been made of its final action.

The excuse of the Senate for holding its legislative sessions with closed doors at the outset might very well have been the paucity of its numbers. On the 4th of March, 1789, only eight members were present, and not until the 6th of April was there a quorum of twelve. All of the States were not fully represented until July 25, when twenty-two Senators appeared. On the first day of the next session, January 4, 1790, only ten members were present, and up to May 18 only twenty-one had appeared, though all were present June 26. At the opening of the third session, December 6, 1790, only fifteen members were present, and all did not appear till February 15, 1791. At the first session of the Second Congress only seventeen were present at the opening, and the full Senate does not seem to have been present at any time during the session. During the second session of the Second Congress, Vermont and Kentucky having been admitted, out of thirty members twenty-eight appeared during the session. At the opening of the third session of the Third Congress, November 3, 1794, only eleven Senators were present, and a quorum of sixteen members was not secured until November 18.

For the first five years the whole number of the Senate at any time present was hardly more than the present number of members on the larger committees of the House or Senate, and the absentees were often so many as to be embarrassing from the lack of the quorum required for the transaction of business. It was not strange, therefore, that such a limited body should temporarily meet together and act more like a committee with its doors closed than like an open legislative assembly. The Congressional daily RECORD and phonographic reporters seem to have been later inventions.

When the Senate, after some increase of its members, first opened its doors to legislative business the change was at once recognized as legitimate and what was expected, without which its dignity and usefulness would have been pitifully circumscribed. The development of its character as a co-ordinate legislative branch of the Government made it necessary that its debates, as well as its bills and amendments to bills, should be fully known, not only by the public but especially by the House of Representatives. But with executive sessions of the Senate the House of Representatives, so far as nominations to office are concerned, has no greater interest than that of the general public, and neither has any interest beyond that of just and proper conclusions. To such conclusions neither the public nor the House would bring through open doors any valuable contributions, nothing but premature curiosity and unsolicited advice.

The division of executive power, by which the advice and consent of the Senate must be confidentially obtained to many of the official acts of the President, is wholly an American institution; and the closed doors of executive sessions are absolutely essential to its vital force and healthy preservation.

After an experience of nearly a century, an experience maintained by the approval of the wisest statesmen of all parties, the innovation now proposed that executive sessions to consider nominations shall be held with open doors to the public, dismissing all confidential relations, would seem to me such a freak of levity as would not comport with the character of the American Senate. For any existing evils open doors can not offer a panacea, but, instead, would offer a new brood of evils more numerous than those of Pandora's box.

Having no chronic aversion to any measure of real reform, giving to many such measures the right hand of fellowship, I am yet not ready to renounce all reverence to the institutions ordained and practically tested and established by the framers of our Constitution; and it appears to me unadvisable to hail open-door executive sessions as a measure of reform. On the contrary, it would tend ultimately to cripple, if it should not destroy, that great American measure of reform in the civil polity of nations by which absolute executive power can be in some degree limited and divided. As ages roll round there are many improvements beneficial to the human race in which the New World moves and often takes the lead, but these onward movements will not be promoted by obliterating the deepest traces of the customs of our most illustrious predecessors, and surely will not be promoted by taking a step backward in the march of popular governments.

Mr. HOAR. I am very sorry, Mr. President, to set an example of the practice of discussing questions until they are before the Senate for practical decision, but several Senators have addressed the Senate upon this resolution and have complained that their arguments have found no reply, and it seems due to the gravity of the question, to the Senate, and to the American people that there should be stated without further delay some of the arguments upon which the existing practice rests.

The resolution before the Senate involves two very simple questions.

In deciding whether it will be for the advantage of this nation to make a bargain with a foreign power is it for the public interest that Senators should talk over the matter among themselves without admitting that power to hear what they say?

In determining whether the Senate will advise and consent to the appointment of seven thousand three hundred public officers is it for the public interest that Senators should talk over together in confidence the character, the quality, the habits, the ability of the men proposed?

These two functions, from the beginning of the Government until this hour, with rare and extraordinary exceptions, have been performed as they are performed now. The authority of the Senate itself, of the men charged by the States of this Union with these important duties, with their experience of a hundred years, is in favor of the existing practice, and, as the Senator from Connecticut has well shown, of an increasing strictness in its observance.

The Constitution declares that "each House may determine the rules of its proceeding," and that "each House shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such parts as may in their judgment require secrecy." The framers of the Constitution rightly referred this whole question to the discretion of the Senate. No experience can by any possibility be as valuable as the experience of the Senate itself; no judgment can be like its judgment; no authority like your authority in determining the convenient rule and method of your proceeding.

This is answer enough to those gentlemen who tell us that public opinion requires us to alter our rule. The framers of the Constitution were men of large experience in public bodies where legislative and executive functions were blended. They knew that it was indispensable to the due and orderly conduct of the public business in the public interest that some part of it should be conducted in secret. They knew that no unbending rule could be laid down in advance and that nobody else could establish the proper limit between publicity and secrecy so well as the two Houses themselves.

But I utterly deny that there is any public sentiment which favors a change of our rule in this particular. I know that it would be extremely convenient for the newspapers to have our sessions open. I agree that the convenience of so large and influential a body of men as the conductors of the press deserves the greatest consideration. It is never likely to be neglected in a free country. Its wants will be made known with all due emphasis. No legislator is likely to err on the side of disregarding them. But, with one exception, I have never yet seen or heard from a single person in this country not connected with a newspaper who felt much interest in the subject or who thought the change desirable.

Mr. President, the press has become in this country one of the most important, honored, and influential of the liberal professions. There is none which at this moment offers to the youth of America a field more attractive to an honorable ambition. Like other professions it has its unworthy members. But, as a rule, the conductors of the press of America are men of honor and character. They are patriotic citizens who desire the public welfare. They must as good citizens expect the Government of the country to be administered by the hands that the Constitution has placed it in. They ought not to desire, and I am sure that on reflection they will not desire, that the proper conduct of the foreign affairs of this country or the character of the appointments to its domestic offices shall be sacrificed to any one interest, even if it be one so important and influential as their own.

The public sentiment of this country demands that the Senate shall do what on full deliberation and discussion it thinks just and right. It makes no other demand upon us whatever.

An absolutely decisive proof that there is no public desire for a change in this respect is this: There are nineteen States where the advice and consent either of the senate or an executive council is required for the appointment of certain officers. In only one is it the practice to deliberate with open doors. Nowhere is there any popular demand for a change. In the other States public officers are appointed by the governor or by popular elections.

The function of selecting men for important executive employment is a common one. The great university, the college, the school board, the directors of corporations great and small, private firms, the President and Cabinet are constantly performing it. The suggestion that either should discuss these things in the presence of the public would everywhere be received with derision. No man, so far as I know, ever dreamed that Cabinet discussions of such things should be open. There is no possible resemblance between the claim of the Senate to have access to the facts which appear in the public archives of the Government and a demand for removing the veil of confidence from such discussions whether in the Senate or the Cabinet.

Mr. President, the advocates of this new rule can not point to a spot on the face of the earth, with one possible exception, where either of these two functions, assenting to treaties or selecting officers for appointment, is performed by a deliberative assembly whose discussions are public. That is the universal experience of mankind. Nor can they find anywhere any disposition to make them public outside of the artificial pressure that it is now attempted to put upon the Senate.

But it is said the Senate is unpopular, that we do not see ourselves as others see us, that we are losing the confidence of the people. Even my wise and sober friend from Connecticut seems to think that this silly stuff about the American house of lords has some claim to our serious consideration. I believe, on the contrary, that the Senate of the United States never performed more perfectly its constitutional function and never stood higher in the estimation of the people from the inauguration of the Constitution until this hour. I think my friend from Connecticut misunderstands the sentiment of the American people when he thinks they undervalue the Senate. His modest nature does not know the strength of his own place in the public regard. Whatever cloud of detraction may arise, the clear sense of the American people pierces its thin and pestilent mist.

I hold myself the humblest of the members here. But I should be unworthy the confidence which the people of the venerable Commonwealth I represent have reposed in me if I were to admit that when they called me to this trust they supposed they were summoning me to a degrading office or to a degrading companionship. I agree with the Senator from Connecticut that the Senator is the servant of the people. But his service can be neither useful to them nor with honor to himself unless his conscience and his understanding be left free. He holds his high office on no other or meaner condition. To do whatever the lord will hath ever been held by the common law to be a tenure of a base nature, and it is a tenure which never can be ennobled, whether the lordship be in one or a million men.

This independent personal responsibility in the Senator never has been and never is likely to be incompatible with a profound study of public opinion and a profound respect for the people's wish. There is no danger that the people will think so. They know too well their own history. They know too well the history of the Senate. Is not the Senate alive and alert to all new questions; to the demand of public interest or the expression of the people's will? Is it not so in this day and this generation as never before? It was, it is true, intended by the framers of the Constitution as a certain conservative and restraining force. Every part of our legislative and administrative system is meant to give voice to the will of the people. Here you have its deliberate will, its sober second thought. But I am willing to take the history of the Senate from 1860 to this hour, and challenge anybody to show that it has not been the leader in accomplishing and in trying to accomplish all the great reforms demanded by a people the law of whose life is progress. Was the Senate behindhand in the great and original policies which subdued the rebellion and saved the Union? How was it with the great amendments to the Constitution? The thirteenth amendment first passed the Senate. The fourteenth amendment first passed the Senate. The fifteenth passed the House first, but passed the Senate the very next day. The law which restored specie payment was matured and first passed in the Senate. The national banking act, the refunding act, and a hundred others have had their conception and their original passage here. The great modern homestead law was introduced in the Senate and in the House, and, although it first passed there, the Senate contributed its full share to its final perfection. Who matured and passed the civil-service-reform act? Where was the Presidential succession bill fashioned? Where does the country look to-day for great measures of practical legislation? What legislative body in this country more entirely reflects the best and most advanced public sentiment, at this moment, than the Senate?

I am not now instituting a comparison between political parties. I speak of those matters where there is no party division in this Chamber. If any man or body of men desire the redress of a grievance or protection against a danger or the adoption of a new policy, they come here. We have matured and once sent down the bankruptcy bill, the bill to provide against the return of the peril of a disputed Presidential succession, the interstate-commerce bill, the new pension bills, and many others. How often is the appeal made to Senators to pass important measures of legislation because to pass them here is the only way to get attention for them in the House. This, too, although the House, by the Constitution, has the sole power to originate revenue bills, and, under the established practice, the sole power to originate general appropriation bills. This talk about this body as an American house of lords, a body of men removed from the people, spending its time in selfish and inglorious ease, thinking of its own dignity and self-importance, is the merest and the idlest chatter. The office of Senator is a constant burden of labor and responsibility. I do not believe that it is equaled in these respects on the whole by any other under the Government, with, perhaps, a single exception.

The notion, too, that there is a claim of Senatorial prerogative or privilege or courtesy—a demand that the public offices shall be treated as the patronage of members of this body is, so far as relates to the present day, a myth. It belongs to a time which has passed, never to return. Whatever life it had grew up in the administration of Mr. Johnson when the two-thirds majority felt justified in going to the extreme of all constitutional resources to save what had been gained by the war from being surrendered by the President. This claim did not long survive the administration of Mr. Johnson's successor.

Equally trifling and fanciful is the charge that the Senate adopts or preserves this policy because of any notion that its dignity is increased by an appearance of mystery. I can appeal to the consciousness of every individual Senator that no such notion ever occurred to them.

These two functions—the making bargains with foreign powers and the approving or rejecting persons nominated for public office—are performed in confidence, because their nature is such that it is for the interest of the public service they should be so performed. That is the whole of it.

I suppose the slightest reflection will satisfy every man that openness or secrecy of the vote and the debate must go together. The right to state to the public the reasons for the vote must exist if the vote be made public.

Treaties, of course, are submitted to the Senate before they are ratified and while it is in the power of the other party to withdraw. Many of them we shall always approve as a matter of course without discussion or division. The formal proceeding by which we assent to them will have no interest outside the Chamber. It will be only those that involve large international interests, which deal with and compose grave disputes, about which there will be public curiosity. There are treaties which put an end to great wars; treaties which prevent great wars by composing great and heated strifes; treaties where in dealing with one nation we secure great advantages over another; treaties where we give and take great and imperial equivalents and exchange commercial benefits. In negotiating these treaties we insist on the value of what we give to the other contracting power. In discussing them in the Senate we insist on the value of what we receive. Open debate will be as much in the hearing of our commercial rivals as in that of our own people. Such discussions often require the expression of judgments as to the character and designs and weaknesses of foreign nations which would tend to destroy friendly relations. The very recent experience of the Senate will furnish to every Senator a sufficient example of what I mean.

The reasons are still stronger against such a change of our rules as shall put it in the power of a single man to provoke a public debate upon the personal character of any one of nearly seventy-five hundred officers. I do not speak of the Senator's interest or comfort or convenience. I speak only of the interest of the public. It is as important to the public that the Senator should be free from the bias occasioned by the desire to make friends or the fear to make enemies when he votes upon nominations as that he should be free from the corrupting influence of personal gain. The Senator who votes to reject an unworthy aspirant who has power and influence enough, in spite of his worthlessness, to get a nomination from the President is pretty sure to have to account to somebody. Public discussion here must involve public discussion elsewhere with every disappointed man. It is, I repeat, Mr. President, wholly a matter of the public interest and not of yours or mine. But it is as much for the public interest to protect the independence of the Senator in this way as it is to protect the independence of the judge by the life tenure. Everybody agrees that the confidence of communication to the Executive on the part of private citizens should be respected and secured; although some persons who discuss this subject marvelously misunderstand and misstate the attitude of the Senate upon that matter. Is it not quite as important that the confidence of Senators in communicating with one another should likewise be respected and secured?

Second. To open the doors to those debates on executive questions must, as everybody will see, have a vast tendency to prolong them. The Senate is the only deliberative body under the Constitution where debate and amendment are unfettered. There is no previous question here. It is said that a great historian traced the decline of the liberties of Rome to the limit placed upon the freedom of speech in public discussion. On a memorable occasion in our own history the Democratic leaders threatened forcible resistance to an attempt by a majority to establish an hour rule for debate and to introduce the previous question into our practice. How long the increasing number of the States and of the vast concerns demanding legislation will permit us to maintain this freedom of discussion we can not tell. But open discussion on appointments to office will, in my judgment, soon bring it to an end.

Third. There are many considerations not involving moral turpitude which frequently must be brought to the attention of the Senate in performing this constitutional duty. There are cases of insanity, of mental idiosyncrasies, of advancing age where it would be cruel to have the discussion public. I can recall several cases during my own service here where, without the slightest party difference, we have had to decide whether it would be true kindness to a young man who had at some time been intemperate to expose him to the temptations of official life. I can not understand how any body can insist that such things shall be talked of in open Senate.

Fourth. It is said that secrecy is always bad and unrepublican. The walls and partitions of our houses should be of glass that all mankind may look in. This notion is as unnatural as it is impractical. Its advocates will abandon it when you come to apply it to a hundred other departments of the public service. Who says this of the jury or the grand jury? Who says so of the deliberations of the Cabinet, of the conduct of any other executive business, public or private, of the discussions of committees? Who says so of any other appointing power anywhere on earth?

Fifth. But it is said the Senate now discusses the personal character of men with open doors when we are debating bills to relieve officers from the sentence of courts-martial and like cases. There are a few such cases in which we speak only of what the public records show. Such debates differ very widely from such general considerations of the traits of personal character as enter into an original selection.

Sixth. It is said, too, that in popular elections the qualities and capacity of candidates are discussed before the whole people. But the argument seems to me to have no application here. The candidate for elective office is presumed to be known to the constituency to whose suffrages his name is submitted. If the office be small, the constituency is small. The electors are the neighbors or townsmen of the candidate. If the office be of a higher class, as the executive of the State or the nation, the persons voted for are ordinarily expected to be men as widely known to their countrymen. But even in such cases we abstain commonly from personalities. Those persons who have thought it their duty to make attacks on the personal character of Presidential candidates, except in cases of very gross personal unworthiness, do it at a great cost to themselves in the loss of the respect of their fellow-citizens. But the names submitted to our approval are almost always unknown to the majority of Senators. We must depend on the Senators from the State where the officer dwells, or on special inquiry by committees. We must preserve the right to receive and the right to make confidential communications, or the public service will suffer. Senators certainly will not feel at liberty to withhold such information as they may have or such opinions as they may entertain about men in their own States. Is every member of this body henceforth to be exposed to a public catechism as to the personal quality of every person nominated from his State?

Seventh. But it is said the confidence of executive session is violated now. That may be, for the purpose of the argument, admitted to be true to some extent. But there is much exaggeration in the common belief. With the present numbers of the Senate executive secrets are known to eighty-eight persons. On important occasions, where special effort has been made to discover them, experience may have shown that the proceedings of executive sessions have been betrayed. The reports of such proceedings which reach the public are always attended by the suspicion which belongs to assertions which must rest for their original title to belief solely on the credit which belongs to the veracity of a scoundrel. But the great body of our executive proceedings, especially those which involve discussion of individual character, will in my judgment almost always remain undisclosed. I do not think that the framers of the Constitution would have deposited this share of executive power in the Senate if they had anticipated its great increase in numbers. When it becomes impracticable to exercise it in the confidence of private sessions it will be time to remove it altogether.

Eighth. But the Senator from Connecticut asks "how is public sentiment reflected in this country but from the press?" It is reflected in a thousand ways. In matters of government it is reflected in the constitutional way by petitions, and by the voice of the people in elections. The people expect to hold their legislators to their constitutional functions and sworn constitutional duty of doing what they shall themselves believe is best for the public interest. There is but one method by which the Senator or the Representative is to ascertain the sentiment of the people; and that is by finding out what is right. The mistakes and the misfortunes of the public men of this country have arisen, not from a disregard of public sentiment, but from a disregard of their own sense of right in the endeavor to please a temporary popular demand, and a loss of public confidence in so doing. The man who loses the habit of seeking for what is right loses with it the capacity to form a correct judgment of the true opinion of the American people.

Ninth. If we change our rule these two functions will imperfectly and unavowedly and under many disadvantages and inconveniences be exercised in practice and substance as they are now. The advantages we are to get in treaties will be discussed in private and not disclosed to the other party or to our rivals until the treaty is made. Senators who do not know them or the men who recommend them will be largely influenced in their votes in confirming or rejecting persons nominated for office by the opinion of the men who do know them or the men who recommend them. This opinion will be communicated in private, as now. You will retain most of the evils and lose most of the advantage of the present system if you undertake to change it.

An attempt is made in some quarters to connect this question with the difference of opinion which has lately arisen between the President and the Senate. It is said, "You demand that the President shall disclose to you the reasons on which he acts in making removals from office and the documents which exhibit those reasons; but you refuse to disclose to the people whose servants you are the reasons on which you act and the documents which exhibit those reasons when you confirm or reject nominations.

I do not mean to reopen that debate. The Senate has never demanded to know the President's reasons for anything. It has never questioned his right to receive communications, written or verbal, in absolute confidence and to maintain that confidence inviolate. A large majority of the Senate, as I think, believe further that the spirit of the Constitution requires that the Executive should be clothed with the sole power and responsibility of the removal of executive officers—a power and responsibility which it was not intended the Senate should share. What we do claim is, that either House of Congress is entitled, as of right, to have access to all the documents in the public archives which show how the executive offices of the Government are or have been administered; and this, whether the information be sought for that instruction in the general political history and condition of the country essential to intelligent legislation, or for special legislative purposes, or to enable the Senate to obey the tenure-of-office act, under which officers whom the President has suspended, not removed, may be restored to their functions if the Senate refuse to confirm their successors. Of the proper occasion to exercise this right we believe such legislative body to be the sole judge.

There has been, in some quarters, a disposition to charge the Senate with a purpose to embarrass the administration of President Cleveland. There never was a greater mistake. This Republican Senate has shown a greater deference to this Democratic President than was ever shown by a Republican Senate to any of his Republican predecessors. Among its earliest acts was the bill which diverted the succession to the Presidency from its own chosen officer who is under its own control to an official appointed by him, a bill which the Democratic House refused to entertain when Republicans were in power. An amendment to the Constitution, favorably reported from a Republican committee, has unanimously passed the Senate which will prolong his term of office two months. We have promptly created a new officer to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to remain in office during the illness we all so much regret. There are 7,318 officers, civil, military, and naval, who require confirmation by the Senate. Of these, 3,725 belong to the military, naval, and revenue service, leaving 3,593 of the civil service proper. The terms of nearly all these would expire by their own limitation during the present administration. The President has already, in fifteen months, nominated successors to 2,087 of these civil officers. There are left 1,306 upon whom time or the ax of the Presidential headsman are hereafter to do their work. I presume that by the end of his term there will not be twenty Republicans left in office in the United States whom he can get at, where he has the power under the law to give the places to Democrats. Yet the Senate of the entire number has already confirmed 1,749 and rejected but 16.

General Grant came into power on a triumphant tide of popular favor and affection. The Senate, as well as the other branch, was made up of his supporters by a majority of more than three to one. Yet in his first Congress 25 of his nominations were rejected, 142 fell with the adjournment without action, and 92 were withdrawn. In the second Congress of his first term 7 were rejected, 95 fell with adjournment, and 119 were withdrawn.

In Grant's second term—I give for brevity the two Congresses together—there were rejected in Grant's second term 52, fell with the session 269, withdrawn 184, returned to the President 1.

In Hayes's term there were rejected 103, withdrawn 103, fell with the sessions 298, and returned to the President 56.

In the term of Garfield and Arthur there were rejected 29, fell with sessions 107, withdrawn 89, returned to the President 22.

See how much more liberally in this respect we have dealt with the Democratic administration than with our own.

It is true there has been some delay in dealing with these nominations; but manifestly I think not so much as usual. This has been partly owing to the pressure of legislative business in a session in which, as both sides of the Chamber will agree, the Senate has labored with an unprecedented industry. But it has been largely due to the President himself. He avowed before his inauguration that removals of officers disconnected with the policy of an administration should not be made on partisan grounds. He has declared in a recent message that he hoped "the holders of public office might find protection against unjust suspensions in the justice of the Executive. Now, when he proposes to remove these thousands of civil officers, having nothing to do with the policy of his administration, against whose personal and official integrity their Democratic neighbors would disdain to bring an accusation, and refuses, as is his clear and unquestioned right, to confess his reasons, it becomes the duty of the Senate, so long as the law makes its consent a part of the process, so to express that consent as to protect if it can the reputation of these officials. But this is neither an impediment to the Executive nor an injury to the new official. These appointees in the place of suspended officers are all in office from the time of their first appointment. But their lawful term of four years begins with their new commission after the consent of the Senate has been given. So that every day's delay of the Senate simply postpones the time for the ending of the lawful term of office of every Democrat who takes the place of a suspended officer.

Mr. President, no President of the United States, not even Washington, has been treated by his countrymen with an indulgence like that which has been extended to Mr. Cleveland. This, too, while his competitor for the great office of the Presidency, with his brilliant record of a public service of twenty years, idolized by such large numbers of his countrymen, who believe that had the people's will had its lawful and constitutional expression he would now be in the seat which is of right his, has been pursued even to his retirement with a malignity unsurpassed in political warfare.

The President of the United States is responsible for the executive service of the country. He is sworn to take care that the laws be faithfully executed. The conduct, the misconduct of every executive official, when it is based upon a wrong principle and the official is retained in office after the President knows it, belongs to him by a direct personal responsibility. It is upon this ground alone that the argument rests which denies to the Senate any share in the constitutional process of removal. I think that argument is sound. The President can act only by subordinate instruments. He can not "take care that the laws be faithfully executed," the "executive office" is not really "vested in him," if he be compelled to retain instruments in whom he has not confidence. I hope to see what is left of the tenure-of-office law repealed for that reason. But his supporters can not claim for him the benefit of this principle and escape the responsibility.

All intelligent men, of whatever party, would have justly blamed the Senate if we had refused to permit the President to appoint the present Secretary of the Treasury or Postmaster-General, or Commissioner of Pensions, or the collectors of the ports or the postmasters of the chief cities, being men of good personal character, because we do not approve their political principles. The title to the office of President carries with it under our Constitution, by the will of the people, the right to select these instruments for the faithful execution of the laws. The President may, of course, make mistakes, for which he will not be blamed, if when they are discovered he promptly set them right. But for every error of principle, persisted in after it is discovered, the President is as responsible for the conduct of these subordinates as for his own.

In judging, therefore, of the President's fidelity to the cause of a reform in the civil service we must look not only to his own conduct and policy but to the conduct and policy of those officials whom he has selected, whom he has clothed with power, whom he can at any time instantly remove, with many of whom he is in daily intercourse and whose execution of the law it is his sworn official duty to supervise and control.

Judging by this test, I do not find that the Executive has kept or has attempted to keep the pledges which preceded and followed his election. The power of appointment to office seems to me to have been used by the present administration with as absolute and single a purpose of promoting partisan interests as it was under Van Buren or Pierce. It is said that with some notable and very significant exceptions the law passed in President Arthur's time has been obeyed. There has been in my judgment a remarkable contrast between the manner of observance of this law under the present administration and its predecessor. But we had a right to expect much more than compliance with this Republican law. That law is not his achievement. That he has obeyed it is not his merit. We had a right to expect a firm forward step. Instead of that, he has failed to make a single one of his subordinates understand that he means business. We find in a very few localities, where the Democratic party needs the votes of civil-service reformers for any hope of success, some slight concession is made to this sentiment, while the doctrine "to the victors belong the spoils" is in force for the rest of the country. The appointing power is bestowed upon the President by the Constitution. Where is the constitutional warrant for its exercise on one principle in Boston and another in Baltimore? What doctrine of reform is that which is good for the post-office in New York and not good for the registry of deeds in Washington; or which is sound where it will not hurt the Democratic party and unsound where it will hurt the Democratic party? What new oath of office is that which binds a Chief Magistrate to reform where, and only where, the Democratic party will not deem itself injured?

There are two doctrines concerning this matter of the civil service, each of which has found its defenders. One is that the offices of the country, great and small, are the legitimate rewards of party service and the fair prize of political victory. The other is that the officers of the country are to serve the people and not to bribe them; that those officers whose conduct is not to be affected by their opinion shall be chosen without thought of their party as you select the officers of a church or the officers of a bank. To the latter President Cleveland is thoroughly pledged. He has acted upon the former as faithfully as any President in our history. There was never a worse example of the desertion of a good cause than the desertion of civil-service reform by the men who abandoned the Republican party to vote for Mr. Cleveland, and who are now seeking to cover their mistake by proclaiming that "the President is doing very well," and that he is true to the professions on which he was elected. If there be no truth in these gentlemen's professions, the President is doing very well. If there be truth in them, he is doing very badly.

There are 3,593 civil officers whom the President personally appoints with the consent of the Senate. Of these about eighty are judges with a life tenure; collectors of internal revenue, the Director of the Mint, and perhaps a few others hold office by an indefinite tenure. All these latter he has already removed and filled their places with Democrats. Of the rest he has already nominated successors for upward of two thousand. The terms of all these would expire by their legal limitation during his term. Yet his ax is constantly falling upon the necks of worthy and faithful officers for no other reason but that they are Republicans, and he wants their places for Democrats. To his credit be it said that the poor pretense of offensive partisanship seems wholly abandoned. The invitation to Democratic members of Congress to make secret charges against honorable Republican office-holders has, I am glad to believe, in most instances been contemptuously spurned. This invitation given by a member of the Cabinet, but of which the President could not be ignorant, and of which the full resposibility rests upon him, is especially odious. It deprives American citizens of honorable public station, without notice or trial, on a charge of offensiveness. It removes responsibility from the Executive to the member of Congress, contrary to the spirit of the Constitution, thereby keeping alive the worst feature of the old system. It degrades the member of Congress into a secret informer. The occupation of the rag-picker of the Parisian gutter is respectable compared to that which this policy assigns to the successor of the august and stately Washington and of brave and honest old John Adams.

It is not necessary to invoke the responsibility for his subordinates which the Constitution imputes to the President to ascertain his principles and intentions in regard to the use of patronage for party advantage. Judges in the Territories have a term of office established by law of four years. No power is expressly given to the President to remove them. The constitutional principle which applies to executive officers does not affect them. Many eminent authorities deny the right under the law to remove them at all. But however that may be, the removal of a judge within his term to find place to reward partisan service is not the act of a man to be trusted anywhere as a leader in the cause of civil-service reform. The root of the matter is not and never will be in him. The men who applaud him in so doing, if they profess to be civil-service reformers, make of this cause a pretext, a cloak, a veil, and can not be depended upon for either earnestness or constancy in its support. The judge who represents in those plastic and forming communities the majesty of the law should be removed if any man on earth should be removed from the hopes, the fears, and the excitements of the partisan. He is the last man to be bidding and bowing for executive favors. Of the twenty-nine Territorial judges, the President in fifteen months has already put sixteen Democrats in office. Nine Republicans have been removed solely on account of their political opinions that he might appoint Democrats in their places. Of some, I believe all, of the otber seven he has demanded the resignation. This he has done himself. It is his own act. The responsibility is upon the shoulders of no subordinate. This is the worst and extremest case possible under our laws of the use of patronage in the service of party.

The President of the United States proclaimed that political office shall not be the reward of party service, and that officers whose duties have no relation to political opinion shall remain undisturbed. That was the text. He then demanded the resignation of Frederick Douglass from the office of recorder of deeds that he might have a place with which he could reward a zealous, active, Democratic politician for political service. That was the application. This is the President's own direct act. No evil counselor deceived him. No party clamor overpowered him, no scape-goat bears the blame. The President who did that will in my judgment never rescue the civil service from the evil spirit of party.

That is no sound constitutional doctrine which is not good for the whole country. We must distrust the professions of those who practice one thing in one State and another in another, which gives the spoil to the victor, or pays respect to the desire to divorce the civil service from politics according to the local exigencies of the Democratic party. In Massachusetts, the civil-service reformers are to be, I will not say decoyed, but attracted, persuaded, enticed from the ranks of the Republican party, or there is no hope for Democracy. You find in that State, therefore, a certain respect for that sentiment, and a certain slowness in making changes. Even there, however, I have never seen an exhibition of a blind party spirit which surpassed that which has been shown by some of those gentlemen who left the Republican party to vote for President Cleveland and who now seek to cover their mistake by claiming him as a civil-service reformer. What a difference between their captious criticism of Republicans and their blind adoration of Democrats. What a straining at Republican gnats, what a swallowing of Democratic camels!

In Massachusetts, the problem is to gain Republican recruits. In Maryland, the problem is to hold fast a trained and drilled Democratic army. The policy of the administration for Maryland has been described by an eminent Democrat of the highest authority, Mr. FINDLAY, whose earnestness in the cause of pure government is not likely to be disputed. He has lately declared, and the authentic report of his declaration is on our tables, that "the spoils Democracy have corrupted and debauched the franchise of Maryland, and have made, through the agency of the President, appointments which cause the name of civil-service reform to be offensive." The editor of the Civil-Service Reformer, published in the chief city in that State, charges that the Democratic postmaster had made three hundred appointments—in the month of April over one hundred, at the rate of over four a day, and had been able to select almost invariably from the ranks of his own party; and that he had reduced the operation of the law to a sham.

Mr. President, the Commissioner of Pensions testified the other day, March 25, 1886, before a committee of the Senate:

> I have removed as many Republicans as I could with due regard to the expedition of public business. I can state approximately that 90 per cent. of those originally appointed have been Democrats. Out of seventy-seven appointed under civil-service rules, seventy-two have been Democrats, and five politics unknown.

The President who has found leisure to reprove Congress as to its method of discharging its legislative duties will not plead ignorance of the existing method of the execution of the laws which it is his sworn constitutional duty to superintend. The officer who made that utterance three months ago is in office to-day. That declaration has become by the law of constitutional responsibility the President's own. There is but one constitutional origin and one constitutional responsibility for the application in grossest form of the doctrine "to the victors belong the spoils" to the judges in the Territories, and the clerks in the Pension Office.

The two persons from whose character the theory and practice of any administration in the matter of true civil service can be best judged are, I suppose, the chairman of the Civil Service Commission and the appointment clerk in the Treasury. The latter is Mr. Higgins, of Maryland. The former, Mr. Oberly, of Illinois, was one of those two most efficient Democratic machine politicians who, as chairman and secretary of the Democratic State executive committee of Illinois, furnished the country an example of the Democratic ideal of divorcing office-holding and politics. President Cleveland might as well make Dennis Kearney his Secretary of the Treasury and thereafter avow a belief in public credit or honest money as expect to be further counted as a civil-service reformer with Mr. Higgins as his appointment clerk. There is no executive officer whose duty is so absolutely non-political as the fourth-class postmaster. There is none who can be made so efficient a party servant. The crucial test of the President's belief in the reform doctrine is the dealing by his administration with the fourth-class postmaster. He is not ignorant either of the profession or the practice of the Postmaster-General; the response of that officer to the inquiry of the Senate has long since met his eye. He knows that under the law the term of every postmaster in the country would expire during his administration. He knows too that the officer selected and kept in office by him to perform that very duty under his own constitutional supervision in his first twelve months removed 8,635 of these officers in order to reward partisan service in the past, and that there may be ready for the future this vast force drilled and disciplined for the needs of the Democratic party.

There has been, Mr. President, it is true, some little moderation in relieving the hunger of the starving Democracy, as the wise physician puts the rescued arctic sailor on slender allowance despite his indignation and eagerness. So he saves his life twice from lingering death by starvation and sudden death by repletion. The doctor at the White House understands the constitution of the patient. If he miscalculates anything it is the intelligence of the country. The determination of the American people to have a non-partisan civil service, which has compelled the reluctant promises of both political parties, is not to be put off by this transparent attempt to serve God and the Democratic party at the same time. The President who declared within two years that he was chosen "to represent the plans, purposes, and policy of the Democratic party" now says at the beginning of his reign, like the young King Henry:

> Presume not, that I am the thing I was,
> For Heaven doth know, so shall the world perceive,
> That I have turned away my former self;
> So will I those that kept me company.

The people listen with an amused smile. Meantime the old Democratic sachems stand by like the shrewd Westmoreland. Each says to himself as he looks on approving:

> I like this fair proceeding of the king's;
> He hath intent, his wonted followers
> Shall all be very well provided for;
> But all are banished till their conversation
> Appear more wise and modest to the world.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 196) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

NEWCOMB PARKER—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

I hereby return without approval Senate bill No. 1077, entitled "An act granting a pension to Newcomb Parker."

This claimant filed an application for a pension in the year 1880.

Before the passage of the bill herewith returned the Commissioner of Pensions, in ignorance of the action of Congress, allowed his claim under the general law.

As this decision of the Pension Bureau entitles the beneficiary named to draw a pension from the date of filing his application, which under the provisions of the special bill in his favor would only accrue from the time of its passage, I am unwilling that one found worthy to be placed upon the pension-rolls by the bureau to which he properly applied should be an actual loser by reason of a special interposition of Congress in his behalf.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 29, 1886.

JOHN S. KIRKPATRICK—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

I hereby return Senate bill No. 1977, entitled "An act granting a pension to John S. Kirkpatrick."

This claimant appears to have enlisted December 10, 1861, and to have been discharged December 20, 1864. He is borne upon the rolls of his company as present up to June, 1862, in July and August, 1862, as on detached service as hospital attendant, and so reported February 28, 1863. In March and April, 1863, he is reported as present, and in May and June, 1863, as on detached service. There is nowhere in his service any record of disability.

He filed his application for a pension in 1880, in which he alleged that from hardship and exposure on a long march in New Mexico in the month of December, 1862, he contracted varicose veins in his legs.

As I understand the record given above, this claimant was on detached service from July, 1862, to February, 1863.

It will be observed that his claim is that he contracted his disability within that time and in December, 1862. He appears also to have served for two years after the date of his alleged injury, and that he did not file his application for pension till about sixteen years afterward.

His claim is still pending undetermined in the Pension Bureau, and if there is merit in it there is no doubt that he will be able to make it apparent.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 29, 1886.

Mr. BLAIR. The first of those messages is written under a misapprehension of the law and of the fact. It seems that while the application was pending in the Pension Office, worn out with delay the applicant came to Congress in the hope of getting something here since he was failing in the Pension Office.

That has been a very common practice hitherto, and always was until the present Commissioner made a ruling which I believe to be unconstitutional and entirely without precedent and cruel in its nature, that where a special act is granted the applicant shall under no circumstances be permitted to prosecute his arrears in the Pension Office under his former application. Until that was the case it was not unusual for bills for special relief to be passed by Congress, and subsequently the Pension Office would continue its tardy investigation for the arrears to be granted under the general law.

The President has written this message to us and vetoed this bill under the apprehension that this ruling, which is alleged to be the ruling at least of the Commissioner of Pensions, is founded either in sense or in law or in justice. If that ruling is to stand the message is a humane message, but the ruling itself ought to be overruled.

In regard to the other case——

Mr. COCKRELL. Before the Senator leaves that case, let me ask when was the ruling first established?

Mr. BLAIR. I understand by the present Commissioner. It certainly was not in existence until the present session. I never heard of it before.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not understand exactly what the Senator stated the ruling to be.

Mr. BLAIR. I understand that the Commissioner has ruled (and the message seems to indicate that the President understands that to be the rule now) that where an application is pending before him under the general law, and the applicant for any reason applies to Congress for relief and receives relief by a special act, which commences, of course, with the passage of the act, the fact that Congress has taken jurisdiction he holds to have ousted his claim and to deprive the applicant of the privilege of prosecuting further his application in the Pension Office for the arrears, even though he might be able to establish the origin of disability back in the service; and the veto of the President is based on that idea.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that the Pension Committee had for many years past adopted a rule that they would not consider individual pension cases which had not been acted upon in the department where the department had jurisdiction of the class to which they belonged.

Mr. BLAIR. However that may be, and it is not so——

Mr. COCKRELL. Has not that been the rule?

Mr. BLAIR. However that may be, it has nothing to do with legal rights of the applicant under the general law in his application pending before the Commissioner, and never until the present Commissioner came into power has any such rule been set up against the applicant.

The general rule of the Committee on Pensions has been that until there had been an honest and a reasonable effort to obtain a decision by the Commissioner of Pensions it would not entertain an application for special relief, and if there has been no unreasonable delay the applicant should be held to prosecute his claim there.

Under the ruling to which I have referred, if the only remedy received is by special act, the applicant, however just his claim, will be deprived of his arrears, because by a rule of Congress all special acts take effect upon their passage, and we have got in a way that we will not as a rule grant arrears, no matter how justly they may be due. So this veto of the President is based upon a pernicious, an unjust, and a false practice, recently introduced by the ruling of the Commissioner of Pensions.

I have that to say in regard to the veto, and further on the point, that I have designed to prepare a bill compelling the Commissioner of Pensions to entertain these pending applications, although Congress may have felt it necessary to step in and to relieve the immediate emergencies and the future of the applicant by special legislation. It seems unnatural that it should be necessary to do this, and no previous practice of the Government has made it necessary.

In regard to the other veto, I was unable to catch the sense of it by reason of the confusion in the Chamber. I move that both messages be printed and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection such will be the order.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6392) "making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3 and 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
JAMES B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

PERRY BELMONT,
WM. R. COX,
W. W. RICE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to explain one or two items about restoring some matter.

Mr. ALLISON. Amendment No. 7 relates to the special fund to be expended under the authority of the President. When acting as in Committee of the Whole we struck that out. It was actually restored in the Senate, but in making up the bill in some way it was sent to the House as stricken out; and to save the record we simply restore it now in the conference report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was sent to the House as an amendment of the Senate striking out the clause?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then why did you not provide simply that the Senate recede from that amendment instead of saying that you restore the matter stricken out?

Mr. ALLISON. We provide that the House recede from its disagreement to our amendment. We added an additional appropriation. The House recedes from its amendment and agrees to our amendment with an amendment, restoring the original House text with the Senate amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So that the result is that how much money is appropriated?

Mr. ALLISON. The result is that there are $15,000 appropriated under the provision as it came from the House and we added $50,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is agreed to?

Mr. ALLISON. That is all agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the conference report.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 8970) for the relief of the trustees of the Judson Female College; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 2732) authorizing the printing of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late John F. Miller;

A bill (H. R. 5862) providing for the establishment of certain light-houses and fog-signals, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 6395) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 7481) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

TEMPORARY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the joint resolution which came from the House of Representatives a few moments ago extending the appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be laid before the Senate and read at length.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 196) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government was read the first time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That all appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under existing laws which shall remain unprovided for on the 30th day of June, 1886, be, and they are hereby, continued and made available for a period of ten days from and after that date, unless the regular appropriations therefor provided for in bills now pending in Congress, shall have been previously made for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887; and in case the appropriations, or any of them, hereby continued, are or is insufficient to carry on the said necessary operations, a sufficient amount is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry on the same: Provided, That no greater amount shall be expended therefor than will be in the same proportion to the appropriations of the fiscal year 1886, as ten days' time bears to the whole of said fiscal year: Provided further, That authority is also granted for continuing during the same period the necessary work required for public printing and binding, and for all other miscellaneous objects embodied in the sundry civil and naval appropriation acts, in advance of appropriations to be hereafter made for said objects: And provided further, All sums expended under this act shall be charged to and be deducted from the appropriations for like service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to the second reading of the joint resolution for reasons which I will state to-morrow when it comes up on its second reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the second reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I presume it can not be read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can not be read the second time to-day under the rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To-morrow morning we shall have a little consideration of that subject.

THE STATE OF THE CONGO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

In response to the resolution of the Senate of the 28th of April last I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State in relation to the affairs of the Independent State of the Congo.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, June 30, 1886.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. Before proceeding with the bill I should be glad to have some understanding with the Senate respecting the adjournment to-day. It seems to me that if it is agreeable to the Senate we had better take a recess, say at 6 o'clock until 8, and endeavor to go on with the bill to-night.

Mr. INGALLS. If we sit in the evening we had better take the recess at 5 instead of 6 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair). For what length of time does the Senator from Iowa suggest a recess?

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest a recess from 6 o'clock until 8 in the evening.

Mr. HARRISON. Say from half past 5.

Mr. PLATT. Make it half past 5.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; from half past 5 to 8 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks that the Senate consent to take a recess from half past 5 to 8 o'clock this evening, in order to proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. INGALLS. If the bill should be passed before that time I suppose an evening session would not be necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. I mean if the bill is not completed. If we find that we can complete the bill by half past 6 it would be better, of course, to go on with it.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest that the bill had better be proceeded with, leaving the matter of the recess to be considered later in the day.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the effect of that suggestion. I shall not press my request, however, at this moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the "Department of State," after the word "each," at the end of line 478, to insert:

One telegraph operator, at $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 482, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of the Secretary of State, the Assistant Secretary of State, and clerks and employés in the office of the Secretary, from $114,150 to $116,950.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "contingent expenses" of the Department of State, in line 497, after the word "same," to strike out "one thousand" and insert "six hundred;" and in line 499, after the word "thousand," to insert "four hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For contingent expenses, namely: For care and subsistence of horses and repairs of wagons, carriage, and harness, $1,200; for rent of stable and wagon-shed, $600; for care of clock, telegraphic and electric apparatus, and repairs to the same, $600; and for miscellaneous items not included in the foregoing, $2,400; in all, $4,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 503, to insert:

For editing and distributing the Statutes at Large of the Forty-ninth Congress, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Treasury Department," in the appropriations for office of chief clerk and superintendent, in line 520, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

An inspector of electric-light plants, gas, and fixtures for all public buildings under control of the Treasury Department, $1,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 527, before the word "assistant," to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to read:

Two assistant messengers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 536, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

One gardener, $840.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 545, before the word "charwomen," to strike out "eighty" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to read:

Seventy-five charwomen, at $240 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 552 to reduce the total amount of the appropriation for office of chief clerk and superintendent of the Treasury building from $154,706.50 to $150,046.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for "division of captured property, claims, and lands" in the Treasury Department, in line 633, after the words "class four" to insert "one clerk of class three;" and after the word "all," at the end of line 635, to strike out "nine thousand two" and insert "ten thousand eight;" so as to make the clause read:

Division of captured property, claims, and lands: For chief of division, $2,500; one clerk of class 4; one clerk of class 3; one clerk of class 2; two clerks at $1,000 each; one clerk, at $900; and one laborer; in all, $10,860.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriation for the "offices of disbursing clerks" of the Treasury Department, in line 645, after the words "class three," to insert "one clerk of class one," and in line 646, after the word "all," to strike out "nine thousand four" and insert "ten thousand six;" so as to make the clause read:

Offices of disbursing clerks: For two disbursing clerks, at $2,500 each; one clerk of class 4; one clerk of class 3; one clerk of class 1; and one clerk, $1,000; in all, $10,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for office of "First Comptroller of the Treasury," in line 679, after the words "class four," to strike out "eleven" and insert "thirteen;" and after the word "all," at the end of line 683, to strike out "eighty-four thousand two" and insert "eighty-seven thousand four;" so as to make the clause read:

First Comptroller of the Treasury: For First Comptroller of the Treasury, $5,000; deputy comptroller, $2,700; four chiefs of division, at $2,100 each; five clerks of class 4; thirteen clerks of class 3; eleven clerks of class 2; eight clerks of class 1; three clerks, at $1,000 each, and eleven clerks at $900 each; one skilled laborer, at $840; one messenger; and three laborers; in all, $87,460.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before we pass on that I should like the chairman of the committee to explain how it happens under this economical and diminishing and reform administration that it is necessary to increase the clerks of class 3 from eleven to thirteen in the First Comptroller's office.

Mr. ALLISON. The First Comptroller and the Secretary of the Treasury sent to the committee a communication on that subject, stating that it was absolutely necessary in order to carry on the current business of this office that an increase of clerks should be had.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us have that paper read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How had they got on before?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know. I suppose they must have worked extra hours. I will send to the desk a copy of the letter addressed by the First Comptroller of the Treasury, and in another place the Secretary of the Treasury makes a similar request. The letter of the First Comptroller will, however, explain the matter fully.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 17, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I see by the morning paper that the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill has passed the House.

The provisions of the bill, as respects my bureau, do not give me the force that is requisite to carry on efficiently the duties of this office.

When I took charge of the office the business was very considerably behind. Judge Lawrence, in his last report, had stated that the land division was more than a year behind, and attributed it to want of clerical force. I found that there were six details of clerks from other bureaus at the time. I soon saw that two, who were on work that was not much needed, could be spared, and so recommended, when they were transferred to other bureaus, leaving me with four details.

I have watched the workings of the office very closely, and have to say that while we have gained in some directions, yet the work has increased, and in the absence of these details could not be properly performed. I ask the House committee to give me these four details, and that some of them be of a higher grade, because this office is the final accounting office and needs clerks of superior qualifications. By the bill, as it has passed the House, I am only given one additional clerk at $1,400, and one copyist at $840.

Now, I beg to state that at the commencement of the next fiscal year if the details are taken away, as it is understood it is the intention of the Secretary, it will be impossible to keep up with the current work. Besides, there are nearly one hundred cases that ought to be prepared for suit, out of which I think a considerable amount could be realized, which can not be done with the present force. We have occasionally stopped other business and brought suit upon some of these old bonds, some of them running back for fifteen years, and have collected several thousand dollars. How much can be collected on the other old bonds I do not know, but I believe very much more than would pay for five times the labor that is required.

You and the Senate committee are apprised that I have endeavored to discharge my whole duty, and the clerks have worked well and are still working well. I would not, as you know, ask for these additional clerks if I did not need them, and I respectfully ask for two more clerks, in addition to what the House has given me, of class 3, for the reason, as I have said above, that I need higher grade clerks. Three or four of the best clerks I had have been taken from me, because they could obtain greater pay in other bureaus, by which my office has been much crippled in its operations. You may say that I ought not to have permitted them to go, but it seemed hard not to permit the men to go where they could obtain more pay. Others have been put in their places, but it really seems necessary, in order that I may retain my clerks, that these additional clerks of class 3 be given me.

There are some other things that I would be glad to state before the committee in person, if permitted to do so, and if the subcommittee having this bill in charge would hear me for five or ten minutes, to explain more minutely this matter, I should be very glad to have the opportunity of so doing. I write this because I do not know who may be on that subcommittee, and if it is proper you can hand it to Mr. ALLISON, who is the chairman of the general committee. I ask that you will in justice to me and to the public service have this matter laid before the committee; but I repeat again that I would not ask for this if I did not regard it as absolutely necessary in order to carry on the business of this bureau promptly and efficiently. I should see you in person about this matter, but will be out of the city for two or three days; and then, I suppose, you would rather have it stated fully in writing.

Yours,

M. J. DURHAM, Comptroller.

Hon. JAMES B. BECK,
United States Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This presents a rather extraordinary state of things, Mr. President—no, not extraordinary in this present Congress. We find the First Comptroller of the Treasury appealing to a Republican Senate (which I suppose is about as good a Senate as can be had at present) to help him out of the difficulties that he has experienced, as all his predecessors did, in the House of Representatives of another character. His predecessors were forced by law to get on with the public business with the force that Congress chose to give them, and they did it. I am bound to say that in one part of the public service they did it much more readily and better than the present administration does, for in former administrations when some of the committees of the Senate desired to know what was the state of the accounts of marshals of the United States to whom great sums of public money are sent in various places as they must be, when those marshals were to be reappointed, or having been appointed in vacation were to be confirmed if the Senate thought them proper persons—that could always be done from the First Comptroller's office within a day or two, and with a detailed statement of just how their accounts stood, what had been allowed and what had been disallowed; so that we could inform the Senate in reporting upon such a case precisely how that particular gentleman had been administering his office.

I am not violating any secrecy, because all that I am speaking of is public information that anybody could get (unless the President thinks it is a private affair) by going to the public offices at the Treasury in trying to ascertain how the accounts of the present designated marshals of the United States in twenty or thirty districts, whatever the number may be, who have been in office, some of them more than a year, and all of them more than a great many months; but we have been so far unable to ascertain at all what has become of the public money that has been put into the hands of these officers; and in one or two instances that I remember we have been informed by the First Comptroller—and I am not blaming him, I am not saying anything about him at all in any critical sense, but I say there is something wrong—that vouchers have been sent in covering the period of more than a year which have not yet been examined.

That is a very strange state of things, and it affects the Treasury as well as the good administration of the laws; and so I do not wonder that the First Comptroller says that he wants more force, although under his predecessors' administrations the Senate of the United States was able to know within forty-eight hours after it had asked for the information through a committee precisely how all these gentlemen stood with respect to their disbursements of the public money. A good many of my friends on the other side know how we have struggled and labored to find out, without any very great success, until at last in some instances we have been able to work it and run it down.

Now, I think that it is rather a strange commentary upon the way things go in this world that the first thing these new charmers who keep serpents that charm never so wisely come to us and say we are not able to get on with the force that our predecessors had and did get on with much more readily and rapidly. It is true, and it is due to Mr. Durham, for whom I have the greatest personal respect as an upright, painstaking, and energetic man, to state that he says here are a lot of old bonds that are behind, &c. But I have the impression—I do not speak by the book—that the Solicitor's office of the Treasury is the one, the accounts being settled and declared and showing that some office-holder, some man intrusted with the public money, is behindhand, that is to direct suits to be brought by the district attorneys upon the bonds. And therefore the difficulty should be in the Solicitor's office and not in the office of the Comptroller, unless you come back to the mere question of accounts; and on the question of accounts we have found hitherto that the accounts of the disbursing officers that came to one committee of the Senate—of course only a small part of them—were always in such a condition that we could know any day just how they stood.

It may be that this increase of force is necessary. It is necessary if old and faithful officers have been discharged who knew what they were about, and new men have been brought in who do not understand the business; and you must have more men to do imperfectly the work that fewer men did perfectly before, and I suspect that is the real difficulty about it.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, in this communication from the First Comptroller, upon which the Committee on Appropriations appear to have acted, there are some statements which seem to me to require further explanation.

Judge Durham does not state that he can not get along with the force in his office unless the details that are now there are retained. He says that he understands that it is the purpose of the Secretary at the beginning of the next fiscal year to take away certain details from him; that when he entered upon the discharge of the duties of his office he found there were these details of clerks from other bureaus at the time. It appears that they have been continued in the service of the office of the First Comptroller up to this time, four of them have been retained, and that the only reason why he requires this additional clerical force is because he apprehends at the beginning of the next fiscal year the Secretary of the Treasury proposes to transfer those details to some other bureau. He adds:

Three or four of the best clerks I had have been taken from me because they could obtain greater pay in other bureaus, by which my office has been much crippled in its operations. You may say that I ought not to have permitted them to go, but it seemed hard not to permit the men to go where they could obtain more pay.

This seems to be a very mysterious and inexplicable statement of the condition of business in that office. They have been conducting the business, as he states, with an inefficient clerical force from the fact that there has been a detail from some other bureau, where there must have been a superfluous force, of six men, subsequently reduced to four, so that he has been enabled by that clerical force to keep up the business of his office; and he now anticipates that those men, that mysterious contingent that appears to be a mobilized force in the Secretary's office which can be transferred hither and thither like the force under the centurion in the Scriptures to one of whom he said "Go," and he goeth, and to another "Come," and he cometh, and "do this," and he doeth it, will be withdrawn. I do not understand that. I never knew before that there was a mobilized force in the Secretary's office that could be detached from one place and attached to another, with a fluctuating salary paid now on one roll and now on another; and I hope, the House of Representatives having examined this matter fully, before we are required to listen to the voice of this charmer, charm he never so wisely, that we shall be advised how it is that Mr. Durham permitted four of his best clerks to be taken from him because they could obtain greater pay in other bureaus, without the concurrence of Congress, without so far as we know the authority or sanction of the law.

Why did not Mr. Durham keep his clerks if he had them? He says he permitted them to be taken from him because they could obtain better pay in other bureaus, by reason of which his office has been much crippled in its operations, and he adds what seems a very natural comment:

You may say that I ought not to have permitted them to go—

Very true. "Thou reasonest well." That seems natural.

You may say that I ought not to have permitted them to go, but it seemed hard not to permit the men to go where they could obtain more pay.

Mr. BUTLER. Perhaps I may be able to throw a little light on that subject, because there is a case in point that came under my own knowledge. There was a young man in the bureau of the First Comptroller from my State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Only one?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know. There may be forty such for aught I know, but for the purpose I am going to state there was one, a very competent and as I understand a very accomplished man, having certain duties to perform. The head of another bureau or the chief of a division, I am not certain which, having a vacancy, applied for this young man. He was receiving in the First Comptroller's Office $1,200 a year, and by this transfer to the other division he would receive $1,600 a year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How could that be?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know how.

Mr. INGALLS. Permit me to ask one question right there. If this South Carolina gentleman was transferred from the First Comptroller's Office, was there not a vacancy to be filled under the civil-service rules?

Mr. BUTLER. I was just going to state, if the Senator would give me a little time, that this young man really was not transferred, but as I say the chief of a division applied for him, and by the transfer he would receive $1,600. In Mr. Durham's office he was receiving $1,200. Of course, I take it that when that transfer took place there would be a vacancy in the First Comptroller's Office. The Comptroller objected to the other division getting this man because he had trained him and he was a very efficient clerk, and the Comptroller did not want him to go.

I went in person, I have no hesitation in saying, and remonstrated about it, and said that I thought inasmuch as this young man had proved himself worthy and had an opportunity of getting increased pay, the Comptroller ought to consent to his going to the other division. I take it, of course, there was a vacancy in the twelve-hundred-dollar place by this change. Of course the man who would fill the vacancy would not have the experience and capacity of the man who was transferred to the other division, and I take it that is what the Comptroller refers to.

Mr. INGALLS. I can hardly conceive that. Of course the statement of the Senator from South Carolina is instructive as showing the processes by which business is transacted there; but under his statement I should assume that the transfer or promotion of this gentleman from South Carolina who was employed there would leave a vacancy in the office of the First Comptroller.

Mr. BUTLER. I take it for granted.

Mr. INGALLS. That would necessarily have to be filled by selection under the civil-service regulations, and it would not be such a diminution of his force as would require him to come to Congress and say that he needed another clerk.

Mr. BUTLER. I take it not numerically, but in efficiency it might be a very great diminution of his force, because there is one trained man who has been in the office for some time and gives up the place and an untrained clerk comes in, as I understand it.

Mr. TELLER. If I understand the matter there was a detail from some other bureau of the Treasury Department to this bureau, which is perfectly proper and legitimate. Subsequently there was probably a vacancy in the higher grades either in the bureau from which the clerks were detailed or in some other bureau, and it was the desire of the Department to promote the clerks then in office to the higher grade, which I think is the sentiment that actuates nearly every executive officer, and very properly too. So these men were transferred from one grade, $1,200 we will say, the first class, to the second or third class clerkships. That is all there is of it.

Mr. INGALLS. They could not be transferred unless there were vacancies.

Mr. TELLER. There were vacancies, of course, or they could not have been transferred. That left just as many clerks in the office and there might have been a detail from some other place after that special detail was withdrawn.

Mr. INGALLS. As the Senator has had experience, allow me to ask him one question there. How can there be a detail from one bureau to another unless there is a superfluity of force in the bureau from which they are detailed or unless you leave that force crippled?

Mr. TELLER. I will just say a word.

Mr. BUTLER. Before the Senator from Colorado proceeds I should like to ask him a question for information, because I know no more about it than the Senator from Kansas; but is it not entirely competent for the head of an Executive Department to transfer clerks from one bureau to another in cases of emergency? I understand that to be what was done in this case. It was abundantly competent for the Secretary of the Treasury or the Secretary of the Interior to transfer twenty clerks from one bureau to another where they can be spared in one to meet an emergency in another? Is not that true?

Mr. TELLER. That is true.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Colorado will excuse me a moment, I think the difficulty in this particular matter of the Treasury lies in the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury called upon the several heads of bureaus to ascertain how many clerks they could dispense with, if any, and the heads of bureaus having clerks detailed to other bureaus of course reported that fact to the Secretary of the Treasury, as had been done often, which was a disclosure that these clerks were not needed in the particular bureaus on whose rolls they were borne. Now, I suppose the fact to be in the case of the First Comptroller that these detailed clerks were attached to some bureau where the head of it stated to the Secretary that he did not need the clerks, and they have been reduced accordingly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is to say, they have been dismissed, and you are to make a new appointment for the place to which they were detailed.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a mild and clearer way of stating it. So they have dispensed with these clerks, and now it is necessary that the other bureaus where the work is essential to be done must have the force that was formerly assigned to other duties.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And where they were before, only new men are put in.

Mr. TELLER. It does not follow because there is a detail from one bureau to another that the bureau from which the detail is taken is overcrowded.

Mr. BUTLER. Not at all.

Mr. TELLER. If there is an emergency in one office, the head of the Department will transfer for the time being from one bureau to a crowded bureau for special work. That is done always, and always has been I suppose. For instance take the Land Office. If Congress should ask, as they do during the winter, for a great number of copies of some documents from that office, there might not be copyists enough in the Land Office; it is a common thing then to detail force from the Patent Office or the Pension Office for the time being, if it is necessary, to meet that emergency; otherwise the work will be delayed. When the work is accomplished it is usual to return the detail to its proper office, and frequently the bureau from which the detail is made suffers while the detail is absent.

So there can be no conclusion drawn because there is a detail from one bureau to another that it is an overcrowded bureau by any means. They may be entirely short of men, and their work may stand still while what appears to the head of the Department to be a more important office is proceeding for the time being.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of the following clause, from line 695 to line 698:

For the additional force in the Second Comptroller's Office rendered necessary by increase of work relating to pensions, namely: Three clerks of class 4 and one clerk of class 1; in all, $6,600.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have it explained what this Second Comptroller's Office has to do with pensions, and how this additional force provided for in lines 695 to 698 becomes necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. This is not an additional force.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The bill says so.

Mr. ALLISON. So it has said for a good many years. When the arrears-of-pension act was passed this additional force was placed in the Second Comptroller's Office, that office having the final adjustment of the accounts of the soldiers respecting their terms of enlistment, &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do you mean about back pay or about pensions?

Mr. ALLISON. The pension work, which is finally revised in the Second Comptroller's Office.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is, it is the revision of the pension disbursements?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Go ahead.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the office of "Second Comptroller of the Treasury," to strike out the following clause, from line 699 to line 704, inclusive:

For continuing the adjustment of the accounts of the Soldiers' Home, under section 4818 of the Revised Statutes, in the office of the Second Comptroller: For five clerks, at $660 each, to be employed on the Soldiers' Home roll, $3,300.

Mr. SEWELL. I should like an explanation from the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, in relation to that amendment, and also in relation to a similar clause in the appropriations for the Second Auditor's Office.

A few years ago when the affairs of this institution, the Soldiers' Home, were investigated by a committee of the Senate it was found that that home, supported primarily by a tax of so much a month on the soldiers of the regular Army, enforced by the proceeds of the sales of unclaimed effects of deceased soldiers and deserters, a large part of the latter class having accrued during the war, was entitled to a million or a million and a half of dollars, which had not yet been adjusted by reason of the lack of clerical force in the Treasury Department. I would like to know what has taken place making it necessary that this provision should be stricken out, as the home wants at an early day to get the money due it on this account.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee made as thorough an examination of this Soldiers' Home matter as they could in the brief time allotted to them. Their attention was especially called to it by a request from the Second Auditor asking an increase of clerks from seven to twelve, the House having only provided seven clerks in the Second Auditor's Office for the examination and adjustment of these rolls.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How many were there before under existing law?

Mr. ALLISON. Until this year the Soldiers' Home force in the Second Auditor's Office was provided for by a lump appropriation, and under it I believe eleven clerks have been employed. This year, instead of appropriating a lump sum to the Second Auditor's Office and the Second Comptroller's Office for this purpose, the bill appropriates specifically for these clerks, giving them a salary of $660 a year, which is a very small salary for clerks compared with the salaries received by clerks generally in the offices.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why is such a distinction made? Is it because you are going to get inferior people, or because superior people are to be paid less?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know precisely why. I suppose the clerks at $660 do not come under the civil-service rules, and can be appointed without reference to civil-service examinations; but I do not know whether that is the reason or not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That accounts for it.

Mr. ALLISON. I only know that the House of Representatives put in these clerks at these extremely low rates. The Second Auditor convinced the Committee on Appropriations that if this force was retained in the Second Comptroller's Office he ought to have a force of twenty-two clerks, because these clerks in the Second Comptroller's Office merely revise the work in the Second Auditor's Office, and it requires at least, as they say, two or three clerks in the Second Auditor's Office for one in the Second Comptroller's Office.

So we inquired further as to the character of these examinations, and we found that under the appropriations which have been made hitherto at the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL], the Second Auditor's force and the Second Comptroller's force were employed in the examination of accounts beginning with the war of 1812 and running down through all the period since to the present time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You do not mean the Soldiers' Home accounts.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes. These clerks have been employed upon accounts prior to the establishment of the home itself, and I understand one branch of the examination has now reached the year 1845, but that is only one branch of the accounts; and under that they have found due to the Soldiers' Home $211,000. The committee made some examination of the law of 1851, and under it became convinced that as to one branch at least they had the right to go back of the year 1851.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What for?

Mr. ALLISON. The law of 1851 provides that all forfeitures on account of desertion and all moneys belonging to the estates of deceased soldiers which are or may be unclaimed for the period of three years subsequent to the death of such soldier shall go to the home.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They are simply hunting then for the money to go into the funds of the home.

Mr. ALLISON. To go into the Soldiers' Home fund. So far as desertions are concerned, I believe they have brought down the accounts to 1845. They have not yet examined from 1812 to 1845 the accounts of deceased soldiers who left unclaimed effects.

The Second Auditor in his report states that this force of clerks on this work will be required indefinitely; in other words, he led the committee to believe and means Congress to understand that these examinations will be required for many years to come.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is money in the Treasury of the United States which is to be turned over to another public object; and so we are merely hunting around to find out how we can transfer it from one part of the public pocket to another institution.

Mr. ALLISON. That is true, but that is the law. The law of 1851 carried into the Revised Statutes, quoted in this communication, being section 4818, is the foundation of the home and constitutes its fund. So the committee believe that whatever this fund may be, at least so far as relates to the accounts prior to 1851, it might very well in some way be estimated or aggregated without the examination of the accounts. Under the appropriations which are asked for by these officers for the examination of these accounts it will require an expenditure of $14,000 per annum.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator about what per cent. that would be on the total amount of claims settled during the year, for that expenditure is practically the interest the Government pays on that account.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not able to state that in exact words, although the Auditor stated to us that these accounts had now reached the year 1845, and that during the last year $211,000 had been paid into the home, and they had a fund of $10,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not collected from any private person, but merely taken out of the Treasury as lapsed funds, and we spent a great many thousand dollars in order to turn it over from one set of books in the Treasury to another set of books in the Treasury.

Mr. ALLISON. Two hundred and eleven thousand dollars has been settled during the last year by these two forces.

Mr. HARRISON. And the salary of the clerks working upon it was $9,000 or $10,000.

Mr. ALLISON. The appropriation was made in the lump, $10,000, so that this appropriation of $10,000 for the last year may be stated to have yielded $211,000 to the Soldiers' Home.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Out of the Treasury.

Mr. ALLISON. Out of the Treasury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We paid $10,000 then for transferring $211,000 from one set of books of the Treasury to another. That is very good.

Mr. ALLISON. Under the law as it stands undoubtedly this home is entitled to these forfeitures and fines and penalties and so on; but it seemed to the committee that it was an unwise expenditure to expend this $14,000 per annum in making an examination of these accounts, and that it would be better in some way for some committee of Congress to take up the question and ascertain by some general system of averages about what these accounts would amount to and if need be set apart the fund for the benefit of the home.

Under the law now, the funds belonging to the Home are deposited in the Treasury and draw 3 per cent. interest per annum. So it seemed to the committee that it would be wiser and better for Congress in some way to segregate a sum and place it to the credit of this fund to the extent that we are required to do by the law, rather than to go into a detailed examination of these individual accounts running back fifty or sixty years.

Mr. SEWELL. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has probably thought of the mode of doing it, but I should like to suggest how the emergency arises and the amount of money that is now due under the law without going into the accounts. At the same time I would suggest also that the accounts are now being audited yearly and have been since the war. The accounts are now kept up yearly. The committee had a report from General Hunt, now commanding the Soldier's Home, stating that—

We are living beyond our means; that is, beyond our adjusted credits, and the excess is eating into capital.

Each soldier of the regular Army is paying 12½ cents a month, amounting to thirty or forty thousand dollars a year. In explanation of the remark of the Senator from Vermont, I might say that this home is not entirely the property of the Government. It is the home of the soldier. He has paid for it during all his term of service, and in that sense the veterans are entitled to great consideration. The property is theirs, and it is used very largely by the citizens of the District of Columbia as a pleasure park at the expense to a great extent of the private soldier from his monthly pay.

This is the language of the commandant:

If required, the home can well afford to pay for such clerical force as may be needful to present such a result; at any rate, for so much more force as is needful beyond what Congress is willing to give.

I should be perfectly satisfied if we could arrive at a gross sum that might be credited to the home, upon which under the present law it would get an interest of 3 per cent., so as to avoid this expense. The committee want to avoid having a large annual outlay for the mere transfer of accounts from one book to another. I simply desire to ask the chairman of the committee if the committee has thought how that might be arrived at?

I should then be glad, in connection with my former service as chairman of the subcommittee that investigated the home—a matter that I take great interest in—to have such legislation as would carry out that view.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that on inquiry of the governor of the home we found that the amount of current fines, penalties, and forfeitures paid into the home—because these penalties and forfeitures still run on and they are turned into the home—vary greatly with different years. For instance, one year they have amounted to as high as $65,000, and another year $35,000, with practically the same number of men.

It seems to me—though of course I have not given attention to it, nor has the Committee on Appropriations—that an average could be reached by taking, say, ten years of time and the number of soldiers in the service, and finding what the income for ten years would be, then average it according to the number of soldiers.

The Committee on Appropriations had no intention of crippling in the slightest degree the income of this home, nor had they any intention of depriving the home of whatever sums may be due from the examination of these accounts as required by law; but it did seem to the committee that the law itself did not require that we should go back of the establishment of the home in the year 1851.

Now, the home is not impecunious, although I believe the governor does say that they will be obliged to draw somewhat upon the capital of the funds of the home. They have to-day, as I remember—I may not state the sums exactly—$780,000 invested in 4 per cent. bonds of the Government of the United States, which is certainly a very good investment. Those bonds if sold now would yield to the home a very large sum of money; and if I was one of the directors of the home I should propose to sell those bonds and place the money, as the law authorizes, in the Treasury of the United States so as to draw 3 per cent. interest.

Mr. INGALLS. That in addition to all their real estate?

Mr. ALLISON. In addition to all their real estate.

Mr. INGALLS. And no incumbrance on the real estate?

Mr. ALLISON. No incumbrance on the real estate. They have these 4 per cent. bonds, which, in my judgment, ought to be turned into the Treasury, where by law they will be entitled to draw 3 per cent. In addition to that, they have $480,000 in the Treasury of the United States drawing 3 per cent., and about $100,000 in other invested funds, I believe chiefly in Missouri State bonds. They have one dollar and a half per annum from each soldier paid regularly into the treasury of the home.

Mr. INGALLS. Each soldier in the entire Army?

Mr. ALLISON. Each soldier in the entire Army.

Mr. CHACE. Does that include officers?

Mr. ALLISON. That does not include officers; it includes private soldiers. They have in addition to that the current fines and forfeitures and all unclaimed funds that have been unclaimed for three years. Of course if the funds owing to deceased soldiers are again sought to be reclaimed by the heirs of the decedent, the home must return them.

So, I do not think in the brief space between now and next December there will be any hardship to the home; and the desire of the committee was simply to save this amount of money during the year, which it seemed to us was unnecessary in order to examine these old accounts, and in order to compromise and adjust the matter upon some basis that would easily be devised by people familiar with the accounts.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think it would not be difficult, after an examination of the collections hitherto made, to give a fair annual average of the sum that might be found due, and if even 60 or 75 per cent. of that sum were assumed as a fair payment to be made, that would probably satisfy all the wants of the home, and give the $500,000 now (I judge roughly from these figures), and this form of collecting and examining these old musty accounts from year to year might as well be dispensed with.

Mr. DAWES. Endow it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Endow the home virtually by making a fair estimate of 75 per cent. of what they are entitled to upon an examination of the accounts with existing funds in real estate.

We have had a little experience in another line in this matter in the modern soldiers' homes for volunteer soldiers, such as there are at Togus, Dayton, Hampton, and other places, which are supported in the first place from sums realized in a similar way from the great volunteer army. A force of, I think, not less than thirty, it may have been sixty, certainly forty or fifty, clerks at least for a while were employed here hunting over the accounts of the great volunteer army of two and a quarter million soldiers to see what pensions or forfeited pay of deserters they could find. It was costing $40,000 or $50,000 a year. Subsequently Congress discovered that this money was not found in the pockets of outside parties but in the Treasury all the while, and it discovered also that it was under obligation to support those soldiers anyhow, and therefore the forty or fifty clerks were dismissed at a saving of $40,000 or $50,000 a year.

Mr. DAWES. How were they paid?

Mr. HAWLEY. They were paid by drawing right straight out of the Treasury what was necessary.

Mr. DAWES. By annual appropriations?

Mr. HAWLEY. By annual appropriations taken out of the Treasury.

Mr. SEWELL. I did not desire to oppose this amendment; I simply desired the information I have received. I shall take occasion hereafter to introduce a resolution instructing the proper committee to investigate this matter with a view to the future legislation of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be agreed to if there be no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the office of "Second Auditor," after the word "messengers," at the end of line 729, to strike out "eighteen copyists, at $840 each;" and in line 731, after the words "two hundred and," to strike out "sixty-two thousand four hundred and fifty" and insert "forty-seven thousand three hundred and thirty;" so as to make the clause read:

Second Auditor: For Second Auditor, $3,600; deputy auditor, $2,250; six chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; eight clerks of class 4; forty clerks of class 3; additional to one clerk of class 3 as disbursing clerk, $200; fifty-five clerks of class 2; forty-eight clerks of class 1; eight clerks, at $1,000 each; one messenger; three assistant messengers; and eight laborers; in all, $247,330.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 733, to insert:

For the purpose of restoring and repairing the worn-out and defaced rolls in the Second Auditor's Office, $21,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the clause from line 737 to line 742, inclusive, as follows:

For additional force for continuing the adjustment of the accounts of the Soldiers' Home in the office of the Second Auditor, under section 4818, Revised Statutes: Seven clerks at $840 each, and one at $720 per annum, $6,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the office of "Fourth Auditor," in line 746, before the words "clerks of class three" to strike out "twelve" and insert "fourteen;" after the word "each," at the end of line 766, to strike out "four clerks, at $800 each;" so as to make the clause read:

Fourth Auditor: For the Fourth Auditor, $3,600; deputy auditor, $2,250; three chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; two clerks of class 4; fourteen clerks of class 3; eight clerks of class 2; nine clerks of class 1; three clerks, at $1,000 each; five clerks at $900 each; one assistant messenger; and two laborers; in all, $69,390.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to explain the amendment. The Senate will notice that on line 764 the number of third-class clerks was reduced from fourteen to twelve, and in line 767 there were added four clerks at $800 each, it being the purpose to substitute four clerks at $800 each for two clerks at $1,600 each. The committee thought that rather a singular amendment and restored the clerks of class 3 in order that the House might have an opportunity to explain why it was that this change was made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I observe that in the Second Auditor's Office there has been quite a change made, striking out eighteen copyists at $840 each and then reducing the sum appropriated in the aggregate from $62,450 to $47,330, and subsequently adding a paragraph for the purpose of restoring and repairing the worn-out and defaced rolls in the office of the Second Auditor, $21,000, so that the appropriation on the whole is increased rather than diminished.

The two Houses seem not to have had the same information in reference to the necessities of these appropriations. One House deems that eighteen copyists are the proper force. Another deems that that is too much and strikes it out, and then adds a subsequent paragraph appropriating $21,000.

It seems to me that this whole matter is in confusion in the minds of the Committees on Appropriations, as well as everybody else. I confess that I do not know the necessity for these clerks. There may be a necessity, but we must depend upon some committees to ascertain. However, here are two committees, one at the other end of the Capitol and one in this body, differing as to what is proper to be done.

I think there ought to be some definite information given to us on this subject. I believe the very best thing that could be done would be to have a committee appointed by the Senate and House to investigate and inquire into the necessities of the Executive Departments of the Government to ascertain what is the force they need. All the information we have now on this subject comes by estimates. The estimates are furnished by the Secretaries. The Secretaries derive their information from heads of bureaus, and the heads of bureaus from the chiefs of divisions, and finally all the information we have obtained has come from some subordinate branch of the Government, and we have no proper information in reference to what is the proper force to give to any of these bureaus or Departments.

I believe the best thing that could be done by Congress at the present session would be to appoint a joint committee to examine in detail every bureau in every Executive Department of the Government, and ascertain definitely the amount of force which is necessary for each of those Departments and to make their report to Congress, and let us act upon that. But we are acting blindly here to-day. The committees of the two Houses having charge of these appropriations differ entirely in regard to the amount of force necessary and in the character of force, so that we have no definite information, but we are voting the appropriations without knowing the absolute necessity of them from any knowledge we have obtained, taking the estimates furnished as the basis for the appropriations. They may be correct, but I do not know that they are correct.

When we come to find that the two committees of Congress charged with making appropriations differ so widely I am ready to conclude that we are acting blindly and do not know what we are about in making these appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Delaware desires to raise a committee of investigation upon the heads of Departments with reference to the conduct of their business of course I shall not object, but it is very easy to ascertain all the facts about the matter to which he has called our attention.

The Secretary of the Treasury, who is responsible for the particular Department we are now considering, estimated for twenty-five copyists in the Second Auditor's Office for the purpose of restoring and repairing worn-out and defaced rolls in the Second Auditor's Office. These rolls constitute the rolls of the Army of the Union during the war chiefly, in fact wholly; and they are the vouchers or the receipts that the Government holds for the payment of money, whether it be pay proper or bounty or whatever.

These rolls by frequent and constant handling for a great many years have become worn and defaced so that some of them must be entirely copied in order to be of use and service to the Government. They are being used now constantly in the settlements of old claims for bounty and back-pay and various amounts which are due to the soldiers under the laws which we have passed, and they must be examined and re-examined day by day. Some of them are in such a condition that they must be replaced by copying and others replaced by repairing.

We called before us the Second Auditor. I am merely making this statement now for the information of the Senator from Delaware to show that we examined this subject. We called before us the Second Auditor and requested him to bring to us a sample or a number of samples of these worn-out and defaced rolls, which he did bring; and he stated that instead of having twenty-five copyists, the number estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury, if he had room for them he would require one hundred copyists, and that that number even would not be sufficient to restore these rolls as rapidly as should be done.

Mr. TELLER. Why not give him more?

Mr. ALLISON. He has no room for them in which to work upon these rolls.

These rolls constitute the vouchers of the Government. They ought to be preserved, and they must be preserved. By what system of arithmetic the House of Representatives found that only eighteen copyists were necessary instead of twenty-five I do not know. It may have been upon that general calculation which we hear whispered around in the wind here and there, that they expected the Senate of the United States would increase the amount according to the estimates of the head of the Department, and then they would have an opportunity of going to the country and saying, "Look at the extravagant Senate; it insists upon increasing all the appropriation bills that come over from an economical House of Representatives."

We have endeavored in making the suggestions with reference to appropriations to carry out what we believe to be the essential needs of the Government, and we were convinced upon an examination that the whole of the sum appropriated here would be required for the purpose indicated. We suggested a lump sum for the reason that it was stated to us by those in charge of these rolls that if they had it in that way they believed they could repair more of the rolls than they could by having twenty-five men or women at a fixed sum. That is the reason why the sum was appropriated in a lump.

Mr. BECK. If the chairman will allow me, my recollection is that it was stated further that if we placed people upon the rolls they would claim to be there permanently, and complaint would be made about their discharge when the work was finished, whereas if a lump sum was given they would not be in a position to make any such complaint when there was no further need for their services.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, that was stated.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am not finding fault with the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate in the point I made. I have no doubt they acted according to the best information they had, and that they did what in their judgment it was right and proper to do. What I was talking about was the apparent disagreement in the committees of the two Houses, that one or the other or both have not sufficient data upon which to make recommendations here for the votes that we give; and then I suggested that we ought to have an inquiry by Congress itself to ascertain definitely what are the necessities of the various bureaus connected with the Executive Departments of this Government.

We are now acting, as I said, solely upon the estimates of the heads of Departments. The heads of Departments can not personally know exactly what is needed. It is utterly impossible for them to enter into the details of the various bureaus under their supervision. They are compelled, therefore, to rely upon heads of bureaus, and the heads of bureaus consult the chiefs of divisions, and they go down to the lowest grade of officials having charge of these matters to ascertain what are the necessities of the bureau.

Mr. ALLISON. Does not the Senator see that the head of a bureau, to wit, the Second Auditor in this particular case, could, by expending five minutes or ten minutes of his time, ascertain whether this appropriation was necessary or not?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have no question that the heads of Departments are acting in good faith.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to ask the Senator——

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to get through with my sentence. I have no doubt that the heads of Departments make no estimates but what they believe are necessary; but everybody knows that the head of every bureau wants ample force. He wants as little trouble in the management of his bureau as possible, and he wants ample force to do the work. All of us who ever pass through these Departments know that there are a great many men there on the pay-rolls who have no work to do one-half of their time. A great deal of the time they are in the corridors, or frequently reading papers, with their feet on the desks. I have no question that there are bureaus connected with the Executive Departments of the Government in which there is not more than half the force required that is at present given. I have no doubt about that, and I have no doubt that some of the bureaus are deficient in help.

What I suggested was that the Senate and the House upon their own responsibility, for their own information, in order that they may make the proper appropriations from the public Treasury to carry on the Executive Departments of the Government, should institute their own inquiry and ascertain for themselves by a joint committee of the two Houses what are the necessities of the various Departments and the various bureaus connected with the Government, so that when the Appropriations Committee come in here and recommend an appropriation for a certain number of clerks for the Second Auditor's Office, for instance, we may know authoritatively from a responsible committee of our own body that that is the absolute number of clerks required and that the compensation proposed to be paid to them is the proper compensation to be given.

But everybody knows that to-day, acting upon the estimates of the heads of Departments who are informed by the heads of bureaus and chiefs of divisions, we are voting blindly, and do not know whether we are voting proper amounts of money or the proper number of clerks or not. Everybody sees it.

Mr. BECK and Mr. DAWES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. DAWES. I have been on all sorts of committees of this kind—commmittees to adjust the work of the bureaus——

Mr. BECK. I do not understand that the Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. DAWES. I beg pardon.

Mr. BECK. "The Senator from Kentucky" was called by the Chair, but the Senator from Massachusetts kept on speaking.

Mr. DAWES. I beg the Senator's pardon, I asked the Senator from Delaware to yield to me, and he said he would as soon as he got through with his sentence, and he seems to have gotten through.

Mr. BECK. I only wanted to know. Go on.

Mr. DAWES. I beg pardon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not hear the colloquy between the Senators.

Mr. DAWES. I would not interrupt the Senator from Kentucky for the world, but I was saying when I found myself interrupting the Senator from Kentucky that I had been on all sorts of committees, on the Committee on Appropriations for a good many years in both branches of Congress and on committees that have undertaken to do for the Committee on Appropriations its work. I never could understand, and I wanted to ask the Senator from Delaware for his views on it, to whom such a committee could go for the information as to the need and necessities of the Government but to the heads of its bureaus who have the work to discharge. They can get no other information unless they sit down in the place of the head of the bureau and go through for a year or more the duties of that head of bureau before they can tell what are the needs of the bureau itself.

A committee appointed independent of the Committee on Appropriations can go nowhere else for its information except to the bureau itself, and examine the work to be done, and the character of the officers who are to do the work, and adapt the one to the other; and they can do that in no other way but by ascertaining from experience what is necessary for the bureau.

I take it that the Senator from Delaware has just as much confidence in the present heads of the bureaus and in the present management of each bureau down to the minutest detail of each bureau as anybody could have had in the heads of its bureaus in the past. I am not drawing any distinction.

If the Senator should be put at the head of such a committee he could not draw upon his own experience and could not draw from books what is necessary to-day in the bureaus. He would go directly to the head of each bureau, and the head of the bureau now under the system presents his estimate of the necessities of his bureau to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury only transmits that estimate.

When the time shall come that each head of a bureau shall be individually held responsible by the law for what is done in his bureau, both in the character of the work and the cost of the work, then, and not until then, will the civil service of this country be reformed. Give to each head of a bureau the power to employ such service as he needs, and hold him responsible for two things and two things only, the character of his work and the cost of it, and you will have accomplished all that the civil service of the country can be reformed by statute.

But I am curious to know how an independent joint committee of the two Houses of Congress can throw any light upon this subject other than the light which would come from the committees of the Senate and the House, whose duty it is now to examine the estimates and judge for themselves through every source of information, which is as freely open to them as it would be to any select committee specially charged with the examination.

The committee of the other branch have had six months to do that thing in, and so has the committee of this branch, as to that matter, anticipating the work that should come up here. What more time is there for a select committee to go about reorganizing?

The Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Iowa have some recollection of an ambitious committee of this kind that some ten years ago reorganized the Treasury Department under an idea that they could themselves establish, without experience and without knowledge of the work, a better system. They will agree with me that it entailed upon the Government very many thousands of dollars in excess of the old system and in excess of the present system, so far as from time to time the two Houses of Congress have found it in their power to undo the work of that joint committee.

I trust that the Senator from Delaware, if he desires to have economy in this and future administrations, will never set a select committee at work for these two committees to prepare for them a new and broader and more ambitious plan of service than the present one.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of discussing this particular item. The Senator from Iowa has explained it so thoroughly that there can be no dispute about its propriety and necessity.

In the Second Auditor's Office at least $21,000 are needed for the purpose of restoring and repairing the worn out and defaced rolls. If that is not done and done very soon many very poor and deserving people who have just claims will not be able to obtain payment at all by reason of the destruction of the needed proofs.

It was believed by the committee that the proper way to do this work was to give the Auditor $21,000 to apply to that purpose and let him get the best service he could for the least money, so that when the work was done he could let the employés go, as they would understand that they were employed for that special purpose and for that purpose only. We deemed that preferable to placing new people upon the regular pay-roll who when once there either at $900, $1,000, $1,200, or $1,400 a year would of course complain that they were improperly discharged or dismissed, and claim that they have a hold on the Government and ought to be kept in the Department. It is better to appropriate a fixed amount of money and get the service as it can best be obtained, and then the persons who do the work will understand that when it is done they will not be needed and that they are not employés of the Government in any sense except for that special purpose. That the money is needed and that much more is needed for this purpose I think no one will dispute.

What I rose to say to the Senator from Delaware, who is usually very careful, and whose ideas upon these subjects are always in the line not only of economy but of good government and fair dealing, is that he will find that the Committee on Appropriations, especially in the Senate, can only deal with substantial accuracy in regard to matters coming under its jurisdiction to which attention is called, but I regret to say we have absolutely no power or jurisdiction over many questions in which the largest and most important leaks occur in the management of the fiscal affairs of the Government. For example, section 3687 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides, under the head of "permanent annual appropriations:"

There is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,750,000, for the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs for each half year, in addition to such sums as may be received from fines, penalties, and forfeitures connected with the customs, and from fees paid into the Treasury by customs officers, and from storage, cartage, drayage, labor, and services.

There are $5,500,000 in money and an indefinite sum arising from all sorts of outside things given in a lump for the collection of customs. While this conversation was going on I turned to the Blue Book, and counting as well as I could I find in volume 1 of the last Official Register or Blue Book, as it is called, that at the port of New York alone there are over sixteen hundred people employed in the custom-house with salaries ranging from the collector at $12,000, auditor and cashiers at $5,000 to $3,000, $3,000, $2,500, $2,000 and down, all of them paid out of the general permanent fund under the provision I have read and paid just as the Secretary of the Treasury and the collector may please without coming to Congress and saying "By your leave, gentlemen." The wages of employés are increased or diminished, put up or down, without asking our advice and only accounted for in an Auditor's report at the end of the year. We are not even asked in regard to the character or qualifications of the persons employed, while we are investigating in executive session for weeks the standing of every little postmaster whose salary exceeds $1,000.

Mr. President, we are sitting here day by day nibbling away about some clerk, some charwomen, some trifle, even down to a piece of soap, as though we were seriously watching to see that every dollar taken from taxes collected is accounted for to us; yet, as I have shown, there are five and a half million dollars thrown in bulk into the hands of the Secretary and his customs officers under permanent appropriations, allowing them to collect all they can from drayage, storage, cartage, fines, penalties and forfeitures, in addition to the $5,500,000 we give them, and distribute it as they please, and all of it is spent without saying a word to Congress or without any of us knowing anything about it or having any supervision over it. I only give that as a specimen. I have tried for years without success to bring them under the jurisdiction of Congress, so that some sort of restriction might be imposed. The idea of a Committee on Appropriations being able to do more than keep a general check upon such things as are committed to our supervision is absolutely absurd. We do the best we can; we hold expenditures in check whenever we can and are allowed to do, and yet leaks are going on all round. The stream is flowing through the bung-hole too frequently while we are stopping the spigot to see that not a drop gets away among the little things that come under our jurisdiction.

I thought of saying some other things, but I believe I will not. As far as this bill is concerned it has received all the care that the gentlemen on the Appropriations Committee who have had long service could give it. I agree, and I am sorry to have to agree to much of the criticism of Republican Senators, that there are very many items inserted by the Senate committee in the bill that ought to have been inserted in the House of Representatives. After holding the bill back for six months and sending it to the Senate the last days of the fiscal year, so that we can hardly consider it and inform ourselves so as to answer questions intelligently, we have a resolution sent here to-day to extend the appropriations of the expiring fiscal year into the next year, whether they are in accordance with the needs of the service for the next year or not, in order to prevent the wheels of government from being stopped by reason of the delay that has occurred in the passage in proper time of those appropriation bills.

A Republican Senate, it is alleged, with much show of justice, is compelled to make many additions to carry on the Government decently, because gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol are withholding what is absolutely needed, as stated in their official communications and personal interviews by the Democratic officers of the Government, as necessary to carry on the Government properly. I sit in that committee with a certain sense of mortification at the delay, which I think needless, and I confess I feel humiliated when I hear Republican gentlemen say, what I have heard stated on this floor more than once in the last day or two, that very likely many of the appropriations are diminished so that gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol can go before the country and tell how economical they were and how extravagant this end of the Capitol was, when this and many other items have to be inserted as amendments for the very purpose of enabling the Government to be carried on at all. I can make no excuse for the delay. We know that for the fiscal year 1888, when this Congress expires by its own limitation on the 4th day of March, 1887, every one of these appropriation bills has to be passed before that time, and when the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives had their labor lightened this year by placing in the hands of other committees the consular and diplomatic bill, the Indian bill, the Post-Office and other important bills which formerly encumbered them, and now on the last day of the fiscal year the sundry civil bill is not even here. The legislative, executive, and judicial bill passed the House almost in the closing week of the fiscal year, and is in the condition in which we have it before us. The naval bill is not even considered, the deficiency bill is not looked at, while the fortification bill has not been touched. I am not proud of the record. I do not propose to defend it.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I was a little bit disturbed by the position which my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] took upon the question of civil-service reform, as I understood him. I agree with him in regard to that which is necessary for good administration, but if I understand what civil-service reform is he is about as far away from it as I am, and I never was close enough to get into any danger from the contact.

If we are to have an administration of the various Departments of the Government in which the head shall be responsible for what is done, for the personnel, those persons in the office which he administers, and if he is to be made responsible for the result, it logically and necessarily follows that he must select the instrumentalities with which he will do the work. He can not do that if we are to have a totally irresponsible body outside to certify to him the number of persons whom they think will come in and fill the bill, and who he may think will not fill it at all.

So, as I have had occasion to say heretofore, and I only say it again in order to keep my hand in, so to speak, we are getting away all the time from any kind of responsibility for executive administration. Every man in the service now, except a few chiefs of bureaus, is not there on account of any merit that he has, not on account of anybody's desire that he shall be in the service at all, but made to order by a machine after the fashion of the procrustean bed, which cut off a man if he was too long and stretched him out if he was too short. In other words, all these men are substantially alike, with no inducement and no incentive to any extra effort, to the exhibition of any great intelligence or zeal in behalf of the Government, but simply the ability to get through six hours and a half out of the twenty-four, and with a regularity which was commended in George Washington by John Phœnix, his biographer, as being that of his greatest merit. That is what we are coming to.

So we commence at the beginning by paying men salaries as the heads of bureaus and as the heads of Departments, and then in order to make that apparently logical and proper we shave the responsibility down through assistants and chief clerks, and fourth-class clerks, and third-class clerks, and second-class clerks, and first-class clerks, and on down to the charwomen, a regular descending scale like a series of steps going down from an upper story, each one having a responsibility according to the amount of his salary, a responsibility to his chief, not a responsibility to the public, and of course the responsibility of the chief being at the minimum. If anything goes wrong he says one of these people who was put under me here, and to whom you gave a salary in proportion to what you assumed to be his responsibility, is responsible and not I; and then to cap it all there has been set up a totally irresponsible body, in no wise interested in the faithful administration of public affairs, that is to name all the persons who are to perform all these various services and draw the respective salaries.

I am glad to see that the Senator from Massachusetts draws back from that system himself and that he is fundamentally opposed to it and believes it to be subversive of that proper system of responsibility which we ought to have. I do not mean to say by that, that I think there ought to be a restoration of any system which was heretofore in existence; but what I do mean to say is that any system which comes between the individual and the proper performance of his duties, of the responsibilities which ought to attach to him for that performance, is a wrong to the public.

In place of dividing this responsibility among all these different persons, I think we ought to employ gentlemen of sufficient ability to fill these high offices and then give them help in order that the work may be done, holding them responsible for the manner in which the business is done and giving them the proper agency for the transaction of that business.

I was glad to see the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] put the responsibility in regard to the lack of consideration that this bill has had upon the House of Representatives. Substantially all the people who are employed in the United States Government, omitting those who are in the customs service, are provided for in this bill.

The House of Representatives, as the Senator from Kentucky well said, had this bill under consideration for nearly seven months, and yet a member of that House on the floor of this Chamber a few days ago was complaining that the Senate was delaying the adjournment of Congress because we had not passed this bill already. It will not do to say, if we are to maintain the equal authority of the Senate in regard to matters of public concern, that if the House passes a bill the Senate is to hold it or take it without suggestion and without consideration. That is not a proper exercise of the functions which are delegated to us here. If it takes three months for the House to formulate and to pass this bill, the Senate ought to have an equal time because the responsibility is upon us as much as it is upon them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Six months.

Mr. PLUMB. I say it took them six months; but we ought to have as much time as they, although I am willing to say that the Senate committee, I have no doubt, and the Senate could get along with this bill very well if we had even a clean month to consider it and give it all the consideration it deserves. It is one thing to consider it in a month and another thing to consider it altogether in fifteen days, with other bills at the same time to consider and other important duties pressing not only upon the committee but upon members of the Senate.

So it comes finally under the system which is in vogue and which is compulsory upon the Senate practically that the House takes all the time it needs, lands its provisions crude or perfect as they may be upon the Senate, giving the Senate no time to consider them, upon the peril of keeping Congress in session in the dog days or beyond the proper time. We ought to have the opportunity for a proper consideration of this bill. It has had the consideration which the similar bill has had for the last few years since I have known anything about the matter in the committee, and still there was a lack of a great deal of the consideration it ought to have had, and we are taking many things blindly.

The necessities of the public service have not been thoroughly ascertained by the Senate committee and are not known by the Senate, because there has not been the opportunity in the way of time to give the necessary investigation. And yet we are tied not by the Constitution I think, but by the construction of the Constitution which the House has put upon that instrument, so as to prevent us from introducing appropriation bills, and we sit here to take simply what the House finally gives us.

Mr. President, I think it would be a good idea for the House and Senate to sit here until September, or October, or November until every single item of these bills could be scrutinized in such a way that every Senator could say that he understood exactly what the appropriations were for, the necessities as they actually are, or are claimed to be in each given case, and that if they did not meet his wishes he at least had had the opportunity to express his dissent and to have the vote of the Senate thereupon. It is not a proper regard for the public interests which we observe in taking these measures thus from the House, and are then crowded by their importunity to make up for their own delay heretofore.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that there is no question before the Senate. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent to submit the report of the conference committee on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You have a right without unanimous consent.

P. B. PLUMB,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WM. L. WILSON,
JNO. J. ADAMS,
D. B. HENDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course it is perfectly impossible to understand this report as read in regard to these various items, but I noticed, standing at the desk, on amendment No. 32, I think it was, that a recommendation was made which appeared, as I heard it read, to go beyond what either the House or the Senate had provided, and I should like to have the report of the conference on amendment 32 again read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$266,000."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have read the House provision to which amendment 32 applies, and the Senate amendment thereto.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the House bill the words are "$256,000." In the Senate amendment it is proposed to strike out "fifty-six" and insert "seventy-six;" so as to read "$276,000." In the report of the committee of conference in lieu of the sum proposed "$366,000" is inserted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is all right then.

Mr. PLUMB. I will state for the information of the Senate, and in view of the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, that in no case was the amount which was raised by the Senate increased by the committee of conference. It was either left as the Senate put it or it was diminished.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If there were time I should be glad, not in respect of this particular bill but as to all these things to have the conference report go over for a day and be printed so that every Senator might have a chance to understand it; but I do not ask that now, because I have entire confidence in my friend from Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. I can state in five minutes just what changes were made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to have that done.

Mr. PLUMB. The first amendment involving any sum of money or anything else except a mere formality was amendment numbered 2, in which the Senate gave to the District commissioners an additional clerk at $1,200 and a stenographer at $1,200. A compromise was reached whereby the House acceded to so much of the Senate amendment as gave the clerk, and the Senate receded from that part which gave the stenographer.

Mr. CHACE. Is not the result of that that they lose both?

Mr. PLUMB. No, the result of that is that they get the clerk but do not get the stenographer.

The next amendment was one giving an additional clerk to the assessor's office. From that the Senate has receded, leaving the force as the bill came from the House.

Mr. CHACE. Will the Senator from Kansas state whether it is a Senate or House amendment when he reads it?

Mr. PLUMB. Of course the House did not amend the bill because we got the bill from the House complete without any amendment.

The next amendment was one in which the Senate gave to the collector's office $2,000 for the purpose of preparing an exhibit of outstanding arrears of taxes, in place of $800. To that the House conferees have acceded. So the amount is as fixed by the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am glad of it, and I hope he will do it.

Mr. PLUMB. The next was an amendment in which the Senate had increased the compensation for the special assistant attorney of the District, the gentleman who tries the cases in the magistrates' courts, from $960 to $1,200. The amount is fixed by the conferees at $1,100.

The next amendment was fixing the compensation of the law clerk at $1,000 in place of $960 and the House has receded from its disagreement to that, leaving the compensation at $1,000.

The next was an amendment fixing the pay of a messenger in that office at $240 instead of $192. The House contending against that, the amount is finally fixed at $200, precisely what was estimated for.

The next amendment was one giving to that office $500 in place of $300 for stationery, printing, &c. The Senate has receded in that case, leaving the amount at $300.

The next amendment was giving the coroner $700 for contingent expenses, including jurors' fees, stationery, books, blanks, removal of bodies of deceased persons, making autopsies, and holding inquests, in place of $500 given by the House. The House has receded. The amount which the Senate inserted in that case was the amount provided for in the appropriation bill of last year.

The next two items were increasing the number of rodmen and axmen from three to four.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What are they?

Mr. PLUMB. They are for the use of the engineers of the District in laying out streets, and so on. The Senate recedes from this amendment.

The next item was for the repairs of concrete pavements. I beg the Senate to understand that I have left out some amendments in which the House concurred, which are mere matters of phraseology, and am taking up those which involve the appropriation of sums of money.

In regard to the concrete pavements, the bill as it came from the House gave $55,000 for repairs, being $5,000 more than the appropriation of last year. The Senate, on what it conceived to be a proper consideration of the case, made the sum $75,000. It is compromised so as to leave it $65,000.

The next item was an increase of the appropriation for materials for permit work from $50,000 to $70,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is permit work?

Mr. PLUMB. Permit work is a class of improvement like the paving of streets and walks where the party who desires the work to be done, it not being within the power of the District government to do it because of the lack of appropriations, pays one-half of the expense; that is to say he pays for all the labor while the commissioners furnish the material. So, if the Senator from Vermont or anybody else desires a walk in front of his house, which the commissioners do not feel themselves warranted in putting down out of the general fund, on a proper application the commissioners will give him the material, he furnishing the labor, the whole being done under the direction of the commissioners, they spending the money of the applicant and accounting to him for the same. It is estimated in that way that the District saves one-half the cost of improvements made in this manner. That amount was increased by the Senate from $50,000 to $70,000, and in conference it has been reduced to $60,000, an even division of the amount in controversy.

The next item was the one about which the Senator from Vermont has just spoken, in which the Senate increased the amount for street improvements from $256,000 to $276,000. The conferees have agreed upon $266,000.

The next amendments are all together. They put the control of Benning's and Anacostia Bridges under the District commissioners and added a sum of $5,000 for the purpose of repairing Anacostia Bridge, which, according to the testimony, is in an unsafe condition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Under what control are they now?

Mr. PLUMB. Anacostia and Benning's Bridges are under the control of the Secretary of War. They alone of all the bridges in the District are under the control of the War Department.

Mr. CHACE. Have those bridges always been under the control of the War Department?

Mr. PLUMB. These two bridges, since I have known of them, have been under the control of the War Department, making a divided control over the highways of the District of Columbia, and the committee adopted the language in such a way as to give control to the District commissioners and gave $5,000 for the purpose of repairing the two bridges, it being estimated that about that amount will be necessary to repair Anacostia Bridge alone. The House agree to that.

There are some other items. We increased the number of watchmen at the Washington Asylum by one and finally recede from it, the House declining to yield.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the Washington Asylum?

Mr. PLUMB. That is the poor-house of the District.

We increased the pay of a female keeper at the work-house from $180 to $240. We have given that up on the demand of the House.

We diminished the pay of a teacher from $300 to $240, and have given that up on the demand of the House.

We increased the sum appropriated for the purpose of the purchase of supplies, &c., for that establishment from $39,000 to $40,000, and have given that up on the demand of the House.

We inserted an item for the purchase of a dummy engine for a tramway at $2,000; which the House has finally agreed to, and that is incorporated in the report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is that tramway?

Mr. PLUMB. It is a tramway which has been built by the commissioners for the purpose of carrying earth, the result of excavation, to a causeway designed to make an approach to the East Branch, where it is expected that ultimately a new means of crossing will be provided.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You mean street excavation?

Mr. PLUMB. Street excavation, and excavations are made in the city by the inmates of the work-house. The earth is to be taken to that place where the causeway is to be constructed just above the navy-yard.

Mr. INGALLS. At the foot of Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. PLUMB. It was simply designed to furnish additional means of enabling the District commissioners to make use of this force and in a work which does not displace at any time the labor which otherwise they would employ, but anticipating the public convenience in the future.

We increased the item for the engineer at the Reform School from $336 to $396, which the House has agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is on account of the reform administration, I suppose.

Mr. PLUMB. We increased the item for certain contingent expenses of the Reform School from $600 to $900, and the House has agreed to that.

The Senate inserted a provision "for the erection of a new building for the Industrial Home School, $3,500." The House has agreed to that.

The Senate also inserted an amendment providing for steam-heating apparatus, $1,000, for that building, and the Senate recedes from that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is that school located?

Mr. PLUMB. Beyond Georgetown. We recede from so much of the amendment as provided for steam-heating apparatus for the building.

Mr. CONGER. I suppose that the Senate committee receded from it without knowing that twenty-five or thirty children in that school slept there through the nights of last winter when the thermometer was almost at zero, in a room that had no fire and no possible means of building a fire.

Mr. PLUMB. We did not sin without knowledge; we did it with our eyes open, and we had that statement before us. I confess it did not impress me, and it did not impress other persons, as being a very strong case, having myself slept during all my adolescent days in a room that was not warmed artificially. I did not see the necessity for that. However, I wanted to say that we contended for the amendment; it was in conference twice, and was taken before the committee in the House by the House conferees, we declining to yield anything of it, and they came back with a demand that we should yield it all, and after a contention that lasted for a long time, longer than on any other item in the bill, and after it became certain that unless we conceded in part we should finally lose all this as far as the present conference was concerned, we concluded to save the larger item and lose the smaller one. We had accepted the statement of the Senator from Michigan on that subject as conclusive.

I want to say further that it was stated by the chairman of the House conferees that Mr. Foster, the president of the institution, had stated to him in substance that no necessity existed for the building, or at all events if the necessity did exist it was chiefly because of the fact that the Library building was to be built here east of the Capitol, necessitating the destruction of a large number of brick houses, and enabling them to buy brick cheaper at this time than otherwise. In view of that statement coming from a source that we could not dispute, we thought we should do best by acting as we have done.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the best reason I have heard for putting the Library over that way.

Mr. PLUMB. The only one I ever heard.

Mr. CONGER. The children to whom I have alluded are from four to seven and eight years of age. I do not know but that the Senator may think it convenient for little children, boys and girls, to sleep in a garret of a building without any fire or any means of heating it at all during the winter. It is shocking to all my ideas of humanity and fairness that children should be brought up in that way.

Mr. PLUMB. I can not of course put myself quite in the position of the Senator from Michigan, but I am sure that no one could have been more impressed with the statement than the members of the committee were, and no one could have done more I think, not even the Senator himself, for the purpose of saving this item exactly as he put it in. We certainly did not lack in the sympathetic direction, although, as I said in the committee, and as I say now, the fact that children had to sleep in a room where the thermometer went down to zero and below, somehow or other did not seem to me to be a very strong argument. In addition to that, the Senator will bear in mind that this institution has been pretty liberally provided for heretofore.

Mr. CONGER. I can not agree with the Senator.

Mr. PLUMB. When I say pretty well provided for, I speak comparatively.

Mr. CONGER. I say there are institutions around this city not half as humane and not half as useful in protecting the little waifs from a life of crime that have been furnished large amounts of money, more than was necessary, for reasons which I do not wish to explain.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator need not withhold any statement of reasons on my account.

Mr. CONGER. Not at all on your account; but this institution, which I believe to be one of the means of preventing hundreds of children from falling into the paths of crime and vice and following the drunkenness and debauchery of their parents, one of the most benevolent and desirable in the District, has been, in my judgment, very niggardly treated in the matter of appropriations. I have urged for years appropriations for this institution, and they have been given somewhat slowly. This has gone so far that the children more advanced in years, from twelve to sixteen, the limit of time they remained there, have earned by making tree-boxes for the city of Washington between $900 and $1,100 a year for the last two or three years, and by the law the money which those children earned, which that institution has earned in its attempt at a little industry for little children, is by law turned into the Treasury. They are not even allowed the credit and the use of the proceeds of their own labor. If any other institution has been treated so niggardly as that, I have been unable to find it.

Mr. PLUMB. As I am not the Government, of course I do not take that to myself; but I beg the Senator's attention to this fact: We commenced in 1883 with an appropriation of $5,000 for current expenses; that has been doubled since that time. In addition to that we gave them $13,000 to pay their debts. In the next place we gave them $12,000 last year to build a stable and a laundry, and inasmuch as——

Mr. CONGER. Not a laundry.

Mr. PLUMB. It is so stated in the appropriation.

Mr. CONGER. A laundry ten by seven; a dirty room in which washing would not be done if they had any other place to do it.

Mr. PLUMB. The fact that we gave the appropriation for that purpose rather discredited to some extent the statement which we found among the papers in the case; but the fact that the laundry is in the condition the Senator from Michigan has now described it does not change the case. If we gave them $12,000 for a stable and a laundry they ought not to have built a laundry for $20 and spent $11,980 on a stable. I do not now question the management of the institution or its value to the young people of this District who otherwise would go into the streets. I do not, however, yield to the criticism of the Senator from Michigan when he speaks of a mean Government which takes $1,100 out of an institution of that kind which the inmates have earned, and gives them $10,000 back for their support.

So I think on the whole it has been tolerably fairly treated. I do not say that as a final judgment, but the Senator knows very well that the contention that grows up about these things frequently necessitates a compromise; and there is this other thing to be borne in mind, that this institution, while a recognized one for a long time, did not send down a formal estimate for this purpose, and the committee acted upon an unsigned paper presented by the Senator from Michigan. So the institution itself was not there asking for anything, the District authorities did not ask for anything in this regard, and the national authorities did not ask for anything. While I do not speak of that as qualifying in any respect what the Senator has said, it lacks that formal presentation which usually accompanies appropriations of this kind.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator will remember that the committee discounted $500 out of the $5,000 which is in this estimate, which at the request of the committee I procured from the trustees and the officers of the institution, who thought $5,000 was desirable to begin with, making it $4,500 instead of $5,000, which was the lowest estimate. I do not find any fault with the committee. I have no interest in the institution more than any other gentleman, but I wish the committee in the gilding of the statue of Liberty on top of the Capitol, with the helmet and so on, had struck off $2,000 from that, and could have left off some of the ornamental things that are so pleasant to the eye and given a little to these poor children.

Mr. PLUMB. I am as much of a Gradgrind as the Senator is. I am not in favor of gilding any monuments or anything of that kind; and, as far as I know it, I mean that the money which I assist in appropriating shall go to some practical purpose. So that has no approach to me. There has been no appropriation yet made for gilding a monument so far as I know. I am not in favor of building monuments to dead people until we have got a pretty fair sort of homes for living ones. So, if that gets through it will not be with my vote, unless I change my mind.

The Senate amended the provision in regard to the support of indigent insane in the District of Columbia, reducing the amount which the District was to pay from $75,000 to $70,000. The House insisted that they had put in the proper proportion, and the Senate yielded, leaving the amount at $75,132.

In the item of the National Association for Destitute Colored Women and Children, the House inserted $2,000 for furniture and heating apparatus for the building; the Senate added $500 for the purpose of improvement of grounds, grading, &c., and the House has agreed to that.

The Senate inserted an item of $3,500 to enable the trustees of the Washington Hospital for Foundlings to complete the building being erected for the use of the institution; $5,000 to aid in the erection of additional accommodations for the use of the Saint Rose Industrial School; $5,000 to aid in the erection of additional accommodations for the use of the House of the Good Shepherd; $5,000 to enable the board of managers of the Association for Works of Mercy to discharge that much of the indebtedness of the association; for the repair and completion of the building for the National Homeopathic Hospital Association of Washington, D. C., $5,000; and all these items the House has agreed to.

The Senate increased the item for current work on county roads and suburban streets from $40,000 to $50,000, and in conference the increase has been yielded, leaving the amount $40,000 as provided by the House bill.

The Senate inserted a new item for opening and extending suburban streets $40,000, and it has yielded $10,000 of that, leaving the amount $30,000 as finally agreed upon.

The Senate diminished the amount appropriated for the purpose of illuminating the city from $107,000 to $100,000, and reduced the price to be paid by the Government from $22 a lamp to $20 a lamp. The House had inserted an item of $5,000 for the use of electric lighting in the city, to be taken out of the sum of $107,000 appropriated for illuminating purposes generally. The Senate increased that to $10,000, and the House has agreed to it.

Mr. CHACE. Ten thousand is deducted?

Mr. PLUMB. The $10,000 is to be deducted from the $100,000.

The Senate increased the number of privates on the police force of class 1 from one hundred and five to one hundred and ten. The House objecting, the Senate has receded.

The Senate added to the pay of the drivers of patrol-wagons $60 a year, to which the House has agreed.

The Senate added $1,000 to the $10,000 provided by the House for the miscellaneous expenses in regard to the prevention and detection of crime, and the House has agreed to that.

One pumping-engine inserted by the Senate in the item under the fire department was disagreed to by the House, and the Senate conferees have yielded that.

The Senate added an item of $7,500 for the purpose of laying under ground the wires of the telegraph and telephone service. The House objecting, the Senate has receded from that. I was very sorry myself to recede, but it seemed to be necessary in order to save the bill.

The Senate added $500 to the item for the teachers of night schools. The House has agreed to that.

The Senate added $5,000 to the item for repairs and improvements of school buildings and grounds. The House refused to consent, and the Senate has receded. The Senate added $25,000 to the item for buildings for schools, and it was finally compromised at $50,000, upon the ground that a bill which is pending in the House, and will pass it is stated next week, will provide for the sale of about $90,000 worth of the property of the District, the proceeds of which are to be applied in the construction of school-houses.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is that property?

Mr. PLUMB. It is property located in various parts of the city, for which the District has no use and which is of no value except in a commercial way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there authority to the District commissioners to sell this property?

Mr. PLUMB. The District commissioners have no such authority; but a bill is pending in the House which is expected to pass next week and has already passed the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only call attention to it because I have observed in the course of some years back that the United States and the District have frequently been disposing of a great deal of property, and then turning around and buying at great rates other property to be devoted to public uses, and therefore the disposition of any property the District now has ought to be very carefully guarded in respect of the selling anything that can be used for the purpose, because it is a loss every time.

Mr. PLUMB. That is a matter which will come before the Committee on the District of Columbia, which I have no doubt is well advised as to everything that is material.

The Senate added $15,000 to the item of $65,000 for laying the new water-mains, &c. The amount is agreed upon in conference at $75,000.

That, Mr. President, embraces all the items covering an appropriation of money that are of any account contained in this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). The question is, Will the Senate agree to the report of the committee on the bill making appropriations for the District of Columbia.

The report was concurred in.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

Mr. McMILLAN (in behalf of Mr. SABIN) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Fisheries, and ordered to be printed.

RECESS.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that at 6 o'clock the Senate take a recess until 8.

Mr. PLUMB. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion for the present.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that I shall not ask the Senate to complete the legislative appropriation bill to-night. I hope that by a night session we can get through the bill in Committee of the Whole so as to report it to the Senate, and then proceed with it to-morrow in the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. Before that motion is acted on, I should be very glad to have a brief executive session for the purpose of the reference of some nominations which have been received to-day.

Mr. ALLISON. We can have an executive session ten minutes before the recess. I shall not object to it at ten minutes before 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Iowa state his motion again?

Mr. ALLISON. I move that at 6 o'clock the Senate take a recess until 8 p. m.

The question being put, a division was called for.

Mr. HALE. We have been two days on this bill and have only got through thirty pages of the bill. Nobody can tell how long it will take.

Mr. ALLISON. I think we can go through the bill in Committee of the Whole by having a night session.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 31, noes 8.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriations for the office of "Treasurer," in line 818, before the word "clerks," to strike out "five," and insert "ten;" so as to read:

Ten clerks, at $1,000 each.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether these one-thousand-dollar clerks, which do not fall within the four regular classes of clerks, are to be appointed according to the provisions of existing law under the civil-service statute, or whether they fall outside of it.

Mr. ALLISON. These ten clerks and the fifty-five at $900 in the next line fall within the civil-service rules.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no mistake about that?

Mr. ALLISON. No mistake about it. I will say to the Senator that these ten clerks are now employed there and so are the fifty-five clerks. The Treasurer of the United States desires that they shall continue to be employed. It is not in accord with the scheme suggested by the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 819, before the word "clerks," to strike out "sixty" and insert "fifty-five;" so as to read:

Fifty-five clerks, at $900 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 821, after the word "each," to insert:

One mail-messenger, $1,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that a new officer?

Mr. ALLISON. No; it is simply to designate one messenger in the Treasurer's office as a confidential mail-messenger for money packages.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 822, before the word "messengers," to strike out "seven" and insert "six;" so as to read:

Six messengers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 825, after the word "each," to insert:

One compositor and pressman, at $3.20 per day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What are these pressmen? Have they a printing office in the Treasurer's office?

Mr. ALLISON. They have a small press there. When bonds come in to be redeemed, for example, they print upon them the fact of their redemption or the fact of their transfer, and it is done by a printing press. Then under the old rule the greenbacks were entirely finished in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, but the new Treasurer has established a rule that the seal shall be put on in the Treasurer's office, which I think is a good check.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was recommended by a committee of investigation many years ago.

Mr. ALLISON. But it was never adopted until the present Treasurer came in, I believe. The last print of the United States notes is made in the Treasurer's Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 829, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for compensation of the Treasurer of the United States, assistant treasurer, cashiers, and clerks and employés in the Treasurer's Office from $271,200 to $272,861.60.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Bureau of Statistics," in line 897, after the word "each," to insert "two copyists at $900 each."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that an increase of force, or a restoration of what has been heretofore the number?

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment in lines 897 and 898 to insert "two copyists at $900 each" was put in on the urgent request of the head of the Bureau of Statistics and of the Secretary of the Treasury, and it is exactly the existing force.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is to say the House bill has undertaken to reach a measure of economy which the administration can not stand.

Mr. ALLISON. So they inform us in the letters which will be found on pages 22 and 23 of the report of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is what I wanted to get at.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the letter of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics and the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection the letters will be so inserted.

The letters are as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STATISTICS,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1886.

To the Senate Subcommittee on Appropriations:

Learning you would hold a session to-day at 11 o'clock, and also that you did not desire your deliberations interrupted by personal calls from anybody, I write to say that at your earliest convenience I desire to be heard for a few moments in regard to the section of the House appropriation bill which relates to this bureau.

It is quite important, I think, that I have the opportunity to suggest two or three amendments which by inadvertence, perhaps, were not adopted by the House committee.

Respectfully,

WM. F. SWITZLER,
Chief of Bureau.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to ask that your committee will make the following amendments in the appropriation for the Bureau of Statistics of this Department in House bill 8974, which has just passed the House of Representatives, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government, &c., for the next fiscal year, to wit:

Strike out all after the word "each," in line 866, to the end of line 870 and insert the following:

"Two copyists, at $900 each; three copyists, at $840 each; one messenger; one assistant messenger; one laborer; one female laborer, at $480; in all $46,420."

This will leave the appropriation substantially as for the current fiscal year. The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics informs me that he has found that the present force is required to properly perform the work devolving upon the bureau.

Very respectfully,

C. S. FAIRCHILD,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman Senate Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "messenger," at the end of line 899, to strike out "two laborers" and insert "one assistant messenger; one laborer."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. Going back a little way, without reference to an amendment, I should like an explanation of why it is that additional employés in the office of the Light-House Board are required to the amount of $19,700, and whether those are really additional employés, or whether it is some different way of paying the employés that have been in the light-house service?

Mr. ALLISON. Until two or three years ago the entire expense of the service of the Light-House Board was paid from the appropriations made for light-houses; but in 1882, for the first time I believe, all these appropriations were drawn in and made specific. It was found, however, that the enactment of laws providing for new light-houses made it absolutely impossible to have a fixed force, so that we were obliged to provide an additional force to cover the new light-houses that might be erected from time to time; and that is the intention of this provision.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "all," at the end of line 901, to strike out "forty-four thousand two hundred" and insert "forty-six thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Bureau of Statistics: For the officer in charge of the Bureau of Statistics, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; four clerks of class 4; four clerks of class 3; five clerks of class 2; nine clerks of class 1; three clerks, at $1,000 each; two copyists, at $900 each; three copyists, at $720 each; one messenger; one assistant messenger; one laborer; one female laborer, at $480; in all, $46,060.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "office of construction of standard weights and measures," in line 974, after the word "adjuster," to strike out "and mechanician;" in line 975, after the word "day," to insert "one mechanician, at $4 per day;" in line 976, after the word "one," to strike out "laborer" and insert "watchman;" and in the same line, after the word "all," to strike out "two thousand two hundred and twenty-five" and insert "three thousand five hundred and thirty-seven;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of construction of standard weights and measures: For construction and verification of standard weights and measures, including metric standards, for the custom-houses, other offices of the United States, and for the several States, and mural standards of length in Washington, D. C., the following, while actually employed, namely: One adjuster, at $5 per day; one mechanician, at $4 per day; and one watchman; in all $3,537.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 985, before the word "six," to strike out "the sum of;" and in line 986, after the word "necessary," to strike out:

Appropriated by the act of March 3, 1885, for this object for the fiscal year 1886, is hereby reappropriated and made available for like purpose for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

So as to make the clause read:

For expenses of the attendance of the American member of the international committee on weights and measures at the general conference provided for in the convention signed May 20, 1875, $600, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations "for contingent expenses of the Treasury Department," in line 1052, after the word "telegrams," to insert "and;" and in line 1053, after the word "service," to strike out "and car tickets;" so as to read:

For freight, expressage, telegrams, and telephone service, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "collecting internal revenue," in line 1097, after the word "increased," to strike out "in the aggregate;" and in line 1098, after the word "year," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided further, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be paid to collectors of internal revenue except the allowances provided for in section 12 of the act of February 8, 1875, as amended by section 2 of the act of March 1, 1879.

So as to make the clause read:

For salaries and expenses of collectors and deputy collectors, $1,800,000: Provided, That the number of deputy collectors, gaugers, storekeepers, and clerks employed in the collection of internal revenue shall not be increased, nor shall the salary of said officers and employés be increased beyond the salaries paid during the last fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1107, to strike out "one million nine hundred" and insert "two million and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

For salaries and expenses of agents and surveyors, for fees and expenses of gaugers, for salaries of storekeepers, and for miscellaneous expenses, $2,050,000.

Mr. VANCE. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee the reasons for increasing this item over and above that which the House provided.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that the reasons will be found stated in detail in the report of the committee, being embodied in a letter addressed to the committee by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in which he states that this sum is necessary in order to enable him to collect the revenue from whisky, tobacco, &c. If the Senator will turn to page 24 of the report he will see the statement of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. VANCE. I have not the report before me, but I have a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in which he makes the figures entirely different, and that letter as I am informed was not before the committee of the House. It was written and addressed to the chairman of that committee after the bill had been reported by that committee and was in the House. I gather fram the official reports that the amount appropriated for this item of expenditure for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, was the same that is now asked for, to wit, $2,100,000, and that the amount expended under that appropriation of $2,100,000 during that fiscal year was $1,963,000 and a fraction, leaving a clear unexpended balance of $136,472; and the Commissioner reports that in the overhauling of this Department he has managed to dispense with the services of nine hundred and twenty-six officials, which would make the expenditure necessarily still less, and the excess of the appropriation still greater over the expenditure.

For the year ending the 30th June, 1886, which is to-day, the expenditures for the first three quarters that have been computed in the Commissioner's department amounted to $1,359,000, and the estimate made but a few days ago for the remaining quarter, which ends to-day, is $490,000, making the total expenditure $1,849,000—$201,000 less than the appropriation for this fiscal year, and $251,000 less than the appropriation for the last fiscal year, which was not spent by $136,000 and a fraction.

Now, sir, what is the use of increasing in this body an appropriation to the extent of two hundred and odd thousand dollars more than the Commissioner of Internal Revenue will in all probability want?

Mr. ALLISON. Now, will the Senator allow me to have the Commissioner himself answer that query? I read now from his letter to the Senate Committee on Appropriations:

The amount appropriated for the said year ending the 30th instant was $2,100,000. While the amount thus expended during the present fiscal year has by economy been kept down to the sum of $1,849,098 above stated, and while I propose to use my best endeavor to further economize during the coming year as far as the true interests of the service will permit, yet it is desirable that the enforcement of the law should not be obstructed by a want of funds for that purpose; and as the moral effect upon those inclined to violate the law of a belief on their part that the office has been crippled by a failure to appropriate sufficient moneys to carry out its provisions is bad, I respectfully beg you to urge upon the Senate Committee on Appropriations the restoration in the above item of the sum of $150,000 at least, this making it the same sum reported by the House committee.

Mr. VANCE. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. ALLISON. This is of very recent date, "Washington, June 21, 1886." It is a later date, I will say to the Senator, than the letter from which he read.

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir; this is dated the 14th; but I respectfully submit that the reason assigned by the Commissioner and adopted by the committee is not a good one. The idea that the Bureau of Internal Revenue is going to be crippled by failing to give it $250,000 more than it ever had spent heretofore is something that I can not conceive of as entering into the mind of any person inclined to violate the law, for heretofore it has failed, as these figures show, by $136,000 to spend all that was then appropriated, and I suppose in the mean time that no efforts to repress frauds upon the revenue were spared for want of funds. I can not see the propriety of the policy of putting this great amount of money into the hands of any officer of the Government to spend in his discretion.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me ask the Senator, does he not find that the present Commissioner of Internal Revenue has wisely exercised this discretion during the present fiscal year?

Mr. VANCE. With reasonable wisdom, yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. Now is the Senator unwilling to intrust him and the Secretary of the Treasury for another year?

Mr. VANCE. I am willing to trust him for another year by giving him the amount of money that experience has demonstrated is necessary. I am not willing to give him or any other man control of more money than he needs and more money than his legitimate purposes require. It is for the Senate to say whether they will voluntarily come forward and give an officer of the Government $250,000 more than he would require if his bureau were run upon the same scale of expenditures as heretofore; and for a still stronger reason I am unwilling to do it in the face of the declaration that he has diminished nine hundred and twenty-six of his officials, and therefore lowered the expenses of his Department.

I do not wish to see intrusted into the hands of any man this vast amount of money which he can spend at his discretion unrestrained by law, for the purpose of paying spies and informers and that kind of cattle to worry the people of this country; and that is the real object of this whole business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be considered as agreed to unless there is objection.

Mr. VANCE. There is objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the amendment will be agreed to notwithstanding the objection. There is an absolute necessity for the honest administration of the Office of Internal Revenue that this appropriation shall be made. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue is conducting, in my judgment, his bureau with energy and success and honestly and economically, and I think will make it very successful; and it will not do to deprive him of the legitimate, necessary, and proper means for administering his office.

Mr. VANCE. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not possible for the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to execute his office faithfully and honestly and successfully without giving him more money than is called for and without giving him more money than he can spend according to what experience has shown in the past.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is an evasion of the question. The Senator from Iowa has read to the Senator from North Carolina a plain and unequivocal statement of the Commissioner that this increase is necessary.

Mr. VANCE. He has not read any such statement. He said the moral effect of it would be very good, but he did not say that it was necessary to enable him to run the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should suppose the Senator would want the moral effect.

Mr. VANCE. I want the simple moral effect produced by an officer performing his duty within the limits and at the expense prescribed by law, and nothing else, and I suppose, however good the present Commissioner of Internal Revenue is, he can as successfully operate his bureau within the limits prescribed and defined by law as any other officer of the Government who is limited.

Mr. DAWES. Suppose that another whisky rebellion should unexpectedly spring up in Massachusetts and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has no money in the world beyond his current expenses to undertake to enforce the law in Massachusetts, what would be the condition of things?

Mr. VANCE. I do not understand that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is the chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, who would have command of the force to suppress a rebellion in Massachusetts. Perhaps he would; but I do not so understand the Constitution of the United States. I supposed it to be the President's business to put down rebellion; and it would give me great pleasure to volunteer to go there and return the compliments that have been paid to my section of the country, if the necessity should ever arise. I think in the eloquent language of the Senator from Missouri that that is an evasion of the question. The question is simply whether this officer shall have more money than he shows that he needs, that he shall have a surplus at all times lying at his disposal to be used at his discretion, or whether he shall run his office like all other officers of the Government, run theirs upon the amount given to him by law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to have the letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue inserted in the RECORD in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Reporter will see to that.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, June 21, 1886.

SIR: With regard to that portion of the legislative, &c., appropriation relating to internal revenue, to which you referred this morning, the bill as passed by the House and referred to the Senate committee (see page 44) provides "for salaries and expenses of agents, &c., $1,900,000."

This is a reduction made on the floor of the House of $150,000 from the amount as reported by the House Appropriations Committee, which was $2,050,000. The amounnt which was recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury for this item was $2,100,000.

The reduction from the amount reported by the committee was based chiefly upon a statement from this office, showing that the expenditures in that behalf for the year ending June 30, instant, were—

For the first three quarters of the same	$1,359,098
And for the last quarter (estimated)	490,000
Total	1,849,098

The amount appropriated for the said year ending the 30th instant was $2,100,000. While the amount thus expended during the present fiscal year has by economy been kept down to the sum of $1,849,098 above stated, and while I propose to use my best endeavor to further economize during the coming year, as far as the true interests of the service will permit, yet it is desirable that the enforcement of the law should not be obstructed by a want of funds for that purpose; and as the moral effect upon those inclined to violate the law of a belief on their part that the office has been crippled by a failure to appropriate sufficient moneys to carry out its provisions is bad, I respectfully beg you to urge upon the Senate Committee on Appropriations the restoration in the above item of the sum of $150,000 at least, this making it the same sum reported by the House committee.

I desire to say further that the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury was based upon the expenditure for the year ending June 30, 1885, which was $1,963,527.41. You will see by this that the sum as appropriated by the House would fall short over $63,000 should the expenses of the coming year be as great as for the fiscal year 1885.

The law compels the appointment and assignment of officers of the class of gaugers and storekeepers sufficient in number to enable the distillers to carry on their business in accordance with the provisions of law. The number of distillers, especially of fruit brandies, and their production fluctuate considerably, and under the requirements of the law a deficiency would occur in case the coming year should bring a large increase of distillation, which is highly probable.

The encouragement of lawful distillation and the suppression of frauds against the internal-revenue are sufficient reasons in my mind why the sum allowed in the above-mentioned item should not be limited to the amount appropriated by the bill as it passed the House.

Let me add that if the bill taxing oleomargarine should pass, it would add an expense that would greatly enhance the necessity for a larger margin in this item.

Very respectfully,

JOS. S. MILLER,
Commissioner.

CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Independent Treasury," in line 1111, after the word "thousand," to insert "five hundred;" so as to read:

Office of assistant treasurer at Baltimore: For assistant treasurer, $4,500.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee to explain the increase in this item; and while he is about that I might as well call his attention to other items of increase in the case of assistant treasurers.

Mr. HARRISON. I was just going to make a suggestion. This is only one of several cases where the House has fixed salaries in the bill and the Appropriations Committee have reported an increase. These provisions will give rise to perhaps quite extended debate, and I was going to ask unanimous consent that this and the others of like kind be passed over for the present to be considered when the Senate is fuller.

Mr. PLUMB. Until to-morrow morning?

Mr. HALE. Until to-morrow morning.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to say before that is done that I notice what I do not understand, that the House leaves the salary of the assistant treasurer at Philadelphia at $4,500, the same as the Senate committee proposes to have the assistant treasurers at Baltimore and Boston and Saint Louis and San Francisco. They do not seem to have put that at $4,000 as they did the others.

Mr. HALE. The committee left it just as it was before.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senate that all these salaries as here provided for, I believe, are below the salaries authorized by law.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us understand that. Does the Senator mean below the amount fixed in the statute defining their salaries or below the amount that has been fixed in the appropriation bills enacted since the adoption of that statute?

Mr. ALLISON. I mean to say that the statutory compensation outside the appropriation bills is more than is provided in this bill as amended by the Senate committee; but the amendments with reference to these assistant treasurers cover the salary provided for in the appropriation bill for the current fiscal year, and the House provisions are below the salaries of the current year. The salary at Philadelphia to which the Senator from Connecticut calls attention is precisely in this bill as it came from the House as provided for the current year.

Mr. HALE. That is one of the cases that the House did not cut down.

Mr. ALLISON. The House did not cut down the Philadelphia assistant treasurer for some reason, I do not know what. I suppose the Philadelphia assistant treasurer is a pretty important officer, and was regarded by the committee of the House as more important than the assistant treasurer at Boston.

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to its being passed over.

Mr. ALLISON. I agreed with the Senator from South Carolina that at ten minutes before 6 I would move an executive session, in order that there might be some references made. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the appropriation bill be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. Let the cases of salaries of assistant treasurers be passed over. That was the understanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and that will be done.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1118, to increase the total appropriation for "office of assistant treasurer at Baltimore" from $21,100 to $21,600.

Mr. HALE. That is the same thing. It goes over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is that to be passed over?

Mr. ALLISON. It was decided that all these amendments relating to subtreasuries should be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in lines 1121 and 1122, to increase the salary of the assistant treasurer at Boston from $4,500 to $5,000.

Mr. HALE. That is to be passed over the same as the preceding amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1130, to correct the spelling of the word "coupon."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to increase the total appropriation for the "office of the assistant treasurer at Boston" from $35,560 to $36,060.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the total, and it had better be passed over.

Mr. HARRIS. The total will go with the items necessarily.

Mr. ALLISON. We shall come back to these amendments.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriation for "office of assistant treasurer at New York," in line 1175, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Assistant cashier and vault-clerk, $3,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1205, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for "office of the assistant treasurer at New York" from $165,290 to $168,490.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1227, to increase the appropriation for the salary of the assistant treasurer at Saint Louis from $4,000 to $4,500.

Mr. HALE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1234, to increase the total appropriations for "office of assistant treasurer at Saint Louis" from $15,360 to $15,860.

Mr. ALLISON. That will go over, being a total.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 1237 to increase the appropriation for salary of the assistant treasurer at San Francisco from $4,500 to $5,000.

Mr. ALLISON. That is to be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment goes over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1246, to increase the total appropriation for the "office of assistant treasurer at San Francisco" from $27,120 to $27,620.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This amendment, being a total, goes over with the others.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read lines 1272 and 1273, under the appropriations for the mint at Philadelphia, as follows:

For wages of workmen and adjusters, $293,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Secretary has just read on page 52, lines 1272 and 1273, "for wages of workmen and adjusters, $293,000," at the mint in Philadelphia, and there is an additional item for incidental expenses, &c. I should like to have that explained a little. What does that mean? What is the money appropriated for, what do these people do, how many are there, and so on?

Mr. ALLISON. I can not give in a moment the number of persons employed.

Mr. HALE. The number is 231. I have a memorandum on my copy of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. There are 231 persons employed in all. These are the people who are engaged in the coinage of gold and silver. The amount appropriated here is what was appropriated last year for the present fiscal year. The Secretary of the Treasury, however, recommended in the estimates $360,000, as he recommended additional sums at the various mints.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Can the chairman refer us to the page of the estimates?

Mr. ALLISON. Page 33.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the chairman would restate how much increase of salary is proposed.

Mr. ALLISON. The amount appropriated during the present year is $293,000. The Secretary of the Treasury estimates for the next fiscal year $360,000, as I remember.

Mr. TELLER. You mean for the fiscal year 1887?

Mr. ALLISON. For the fiscal year 1887 he recommends an increase of this appropriation. The reason for that seems to be that the cost of coinage at Philadelphia is in excess of the amount appropriated for the current year. But the House Committee on Appropriations and the House of Representatives, if I may be permitted to speak of the House in this matter, knowing that the silver-coinage fund known as the seigniorage fund under the law of 1878 could be brought in to supplement whatever deficiency there might be, fixed the appropriation in this particular item at the amount appropriated last year. So I will say to my friend the Senator from Vermont that the amount expended for wages of the workmen will far exceed the amount appropriated in this bill, as is perfectly well known to us all, and the Secretary of the Treasury estimated I have no doubt very nearly the actual amount needed at the Philadelphia mint.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I see in the estimates submitted by the executive authority of the United States according to law that the coin hitherto devoted to those objects, which would appear to have been very thoroughly carried out, by piling up in the basement of the Treasury here and elsewhere an immense ballast of silver, which will, I hope, keep the Treasury from tumbling over——

Mr. ALLISON. I hope so, and think it will.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should think so. It never will go anywhere else, for nobody wants it.

Mr. TELLER. It will not injure the Government, whatever the amount.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will not injure it! It is a good thing, and will not rust; a most excellent ballast.

Mr. TELLER. And we always know where it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We always know where it is; we are absolutely sure of that. Two hundred and ninety-three thousand dollars was given under the previous administration. Now, this economic and reform administration, and so on, submits a provision to give them on this thirty-third page of their estimates $67,000 more, which is an increase of about 25 per cent. over the previous appropriations and expenditures.

So, as the chairman has said, the appropriation is to be increased from $293,000, heretofore appropriated and expended, to $360,000; and the explanation of the chairman, so lucid and clear, as it always is, seems to show simply that the Secretary of the Treasury wants the means of employing more workmen and more adjusters at the same old prices that were paid to them, which are supposed to be fair, in order to do what? And that "what" I have not been able to understand from the explanation of the chairman or from these estimates. Is it to put more coin into the basements of the buildings, or what is it for?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; it is to coin the gold and silver coins of the United States authorized by law, which have been coined and which will of course continue to be coined, the gold coin as it is presented at the mint, and the silver in accordance with the law of 1878.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has there been any failure hitherto in respect of that coinage?

Mr. ALLISON. There has been no failure hitherto, although the appropriation of last year and of previous years has fallen short of the actual amount expended in the coinage of gold and silver; but wherever there has been a deficiency it has been drawn from the silver fund, so called, under the act of 1878.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is, the seigniorage?

Mr. ALLISON. The seigniorage, being the difference between the price of silver bullion and the silver coin.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is to become of the seigniorage now? That will be used in the same way, of course.

Mr. ALLISON. It will be used in the same way, undoubtedly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So that this makes a real increase of the appropriation for these objects that have been hitherto carried on well.

Mr. ALLISON. I would not say that it makes an increase of appropriation. The Secretary of the Treasury recommended $360,000——

Mr. EDMUNDS. And that is what you give him.

Mr. ALLISON. We give him $293,000 and the balance, of course, he will take from the permanent appropriation, and he receives what he estimates for except that it will not appear as a part of the expenditures of the year in the statements that will be made here and there about the cost of the Government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So that when we get to the end of it it will appear that this $360,000 that he wants will have been expended out of one fund or another.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether the Treasury authorities are at liberty to take any amount they choose out of the seigniorage fund? If so, what is the object of making any appropriation at all?

Mr. ALLISON. They are not at liberty to take any amount they choose. Of course the law requires, as I understand it, that $24,000,000 shall be coined each year, that $2,000,000 worth of silver shall be coined each month. We make annual appropriations for the payment of adjusters and workmen. If that appropriation falls short in any way in sustaining the coinage of gold and silver together, whatever shortage there is is taken from year to year out of the seigniorage, or the difference between the price of silver bullion and the value of coin.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that done according to law or without law?

Mr. TELLER. By virtue of law.

Mr. ALLISON. That I think is in accordance with law, as I construe it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Ah, yes.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the law of 1878 makes a permanent appropriation.

Mr. TELLER. Of the total seigniorage?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; of whatever is necessary. The law of 1878 makes a permanent appropriation of whatever is necessary to coin twenty-four million dollars' worth of bullion per annum, and if there was not a dollar appropriated for the expense of the silver coinage that expense could be taken out of the difference between the cost of the bullion and the value of the silver dollars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You say that is the act of 1878?

Mr. ALLISON. That is the act of 1878. I have no doubt of that. I understand that in some directions it has been claimed that unless we made a specific and special appropriation for this coinage it could not be made from year to year. I do not so understand the law.

Mr. TELLER. The claim was that we should make a specific appropriation to buy the silver. That is the claim as I understand it which was made last year.

Mr. ALLISON. This was several years ago.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that that is an extremely loose way of doing business. If the Treasury Department may take whatever they may see fit, if they may supplement what is appropriated by any amount they may choose, provided they make it out of the seigniorage, Congress has no control whatever over the expenditures of that Department. If that is the law of course I have nothing to say about it; but it seems to me unless it is a very plain provision of the statute that it ought not to be allowed.

I find in this little statement by the committee that the estimate of the requirements of the mint at Philadelphia was $531,550, and that the appropriation is $434,550, being nearly $100,000 short, and of course they may take the whole of that $100,000 if they see fit to do so from the seigniorage of silver.

Mr. ALLISON. They may if they coin silver dollars.

Mr. TELLER. They do coin them.

Mr. ALLISON. They have got to coin them somewhere, and I think it is perfectly clear that under the act of 1878 whatever sum of money is necessary to coin $24,000,000 worth of silver per annum is appropriated by that act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The language of the act of 28th February, 1878, to be found in the twentieth volume of the statutes, page 25, is this on this topic:

> And the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase, from time to time, silver bullion, at the market price thereof, not less than $2,000,000 worth per month, nor more than $4,000,000 worth per month, and cause the same to be coined monthly, as fast as so purchased, into such dollars; and a sum sufficient to carry out the foregoing provision of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Now that relates solely to the silver dollar; it has nothing to do with the gold coinage nor anything else, and how therefore my friend from Iowa can maintain that the profit got from the seigniorage, which appears in a later paragraph in the act, as follows:

> And any gain or seigniorage arising from this coinage shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury, as provided under existing laws relative to the subsidiary coinage—

Can be used to supply any deficiency in the steady appropriation bills of sums like the one in the paragraph we have now under consideration I can not understand. The seigniorage is by this act expressly required to be paid into the Treasury. Being paid into the Treasury, it can not be paid out under the Constitution without an appropriation made by law.

So I do not see exactly how the people who administer this law are taking from the seigniorage fund a sum of money to make up a deficiency in what Congress has failed to appropriate to carry out the first part of the provision about the silver coinage, which has nothing at all to do with gold.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether as a matter of fact hitherto any deficiencies in this appropriation have been supplemented by draft upon the seigniorage fund in the Treasury of the United States, and if so, to what extent.

Mr. ALLISON. I will answer the Senator from Kansas by saying that the committee considered this question of appropriating for the Mint. They sent to the Director of the Mint for a statement and I have it before me.

Mr. INGALLS. Have it read.

Mr. ALLISON. I will send it to the desk and have it read, as I omitted to insert it in the report of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF THE MINT,
Washington, D. C., June 15, 1886.

SIR: In compliance with the request contained in your letter of the 14th instant I inclose herewith a statement exhibiting by fiscal years the expenditures made from the appropriation for the coinage of standard silver dollars, contained in the act of February 28, 1878.

Very respectfully,

JAMES P. KIMBALL,
Director of the Mint.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

Statement showing, by fiscal years, the expenditures on account of the coinage of standard silver dollars, made from the appropriation contained in the act of February 28, 1878.

Fiscal year 1880	$92,033 46
Fiscal year 1881	97,311 60
Fiscal year 1882	137,559 61
Fiscal year 1883	161,507 21
Fiscal year 1884	136,054 78
Fiscal year 1885	156,942 22
Fiscal year 1886 (to May 31, 1886)	68,341 44
Total	849,750 32

Mr. INGALLS. That is the entire amount of drafts on this seigniorage fund to supplement deficiencies in the appropriations. Now, can the Senator state what the entire amount of profit accruing to the United States at the present time in the Treasury is from the purchase and coinage of silver?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is just what I want to know.

Mr. BECK. Here is the report of the Director of the Mint, where it will be found in a very few words.

Mr. TELLER. Read it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Condense it.

Mr. BECK. If the Senator will turn to pages 9 and 10 of the report of the Director of the Mint he will see it stated.

Mr. ALLISON. I find by the report of the Director of the Mint that "the seigniorage since that date up to June 30, 1885, on the coinage of silver has amounted to $25,338,389.97."

Mr. EDMUNDS. For how long a time?

Mr. ALLISON. Since July 1, 1878, when the act went into effect.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do you mean to say that from 1878 to 1885 the seigniorage amounted to over $25,000,000?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly; that was one year ago.

Mr. BECK. Read the whole of it.

Mr. ALLISON. The report of the Director of the Mint proceeds:

Adding the sum of $9,237.54, refunded by Adams Express Company for overcharges, and $4,560.30, surplus bullion and adjustment of silver values carried to the credit of the "silver-profit fund," makes a total of silver profits to be accounted for of $25,776,913.28.

Mr. CALL. Do I understand that to be the profits of seigniorage?

Mr. ALLISON. That is the profit of seigniorage up to June 30, 1885, from July 1, 1878. Of course we have not the statement for the present fiscal year, because that expires to-day. We shall know to-morrow, I suppose. On page 11 of his report the Director says:

APPROPRIATIONS, EARNINGS, AND EXPENDITURES.

The amount specially appropriated for the support of the mints and assay offices of the United States for the service of the year 1885 was $1,194,610, of which $1,104,659.07 was expended. In addition there was expended from the general appropriation for the coinage of the standard silver dollar $157,860.22, as follows, namely: At the mints, $156,942.22, and at the Department for daily quotations by telegraph of the price of silver at London, the sum of $918.

I will say that I do not quite understand how the expenditure of $918 to show the daily quotations of the price of silver at London is important.

Mr. SHERMAN (Mr. PALMER in the chair). Mr. President, I wish simply to say that there is no doubt about the law. The Senator from Vermont, I believe, has read the law. There is no doubt in regard to the appropriations, and without that provision in the law two or three times in history since the act of 1878 the coinage of the silver dollar would have been stopped for the want of appropriations, and it could not have been done but that the law itself provided for the means of carrying it on.

The actual amount of seigniorage according to my recollection at the date here given instead of $25,338,389.97 was I think $28,000,000, but the real amount of silver profit, which is stated somewhere in the report of the Director of the Mint, has been impaired by the necessity of paying expenses. The cost of coining the silver dollar has been a trifle over 1½ cents each; 1.57 I think is the exact cost.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Ohio tell us plainly, so that our constituents may know how this seigniorage profit arises and the common understanding of men may know what it means.

Mr. SHERMAN. We buy bullion at so much an ounce. We coin it at a dollar for 412½ grains. We pay a dollar for 480 grains. The seigniorage is the difference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is to say, we make a dollar out of that proportion of silver that we buy?

Mr. SHERMAN. We pay in round terms now $1 for 480 grains of standard silver. We pay out as $1 412½ grains, and the difference is the seigniorage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We stamp it, and we charge the cost of putting it into the form of a silver dollar and put it out at 412½ grains.

Mr. SHERMAN. It costs us a little over 1½ cents on each coin.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So that we make on each dollar about how much?

Mr. SHERMAN. It varies with the price of silver. We make now about 20 cents.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do you call that an honest dollar?

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not debating that question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is what I was trying to find out.

Mr. ALLISON. I am glad the Senator from Vermont understands the question now.

Mr. SHERMAN. So far as any difficulty about the disbursement of this money is concerned, there is no question but that the money is all properly disbursed. If there is any Department of this Government that is run without a possibility of fraud or wrong it is the mint and assay offices of the United States. There may be extravagance in the way of salaries, but there can not be any fraud in the management of the mints. It is probably as exact a science as can be established anywhere in any branch of the Government. The accounts are the most exact, probably, in that branch of the Government.

If the Senator from Vermont is looking for any peculation or wrong or fraud on the part of this reform administration that he speaks of, it certainly will not be found in the management of the mints, because they are scientific institutions, conducted with the utmost care and with the closest economy, and, so far as I know, without any criticism at any time from the beginning. There have been some defalcations, but there have never been any losses in the management of the mints. Even what is called wastage is so trifling as to be almost imperceptible to enter into the account. It is swept up and saved, so that nothing is lost.

But still the anomaly is presented of our buying silver bullion at a dollar for an ounce and coining it at $1.20 an ounce; but that has been debated and understood by all, and it is not the fault of those who manage the mints.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Vermont does not seem to understand the method by which the Government gets hold of this silver and pays it out. In the first place, the Treasury Department telegraphs over to London to find out what the price is in London. Great Britain does not produce a dollar of silver. You can not buy to-day in London a million dollars of silver probably if you should try, and yet London is the lowest place for silver in the eastern world. The Department telegraphs there for the price. It is lower at London than it is at Hamburg and other places; and then they find the price in London and if it is $1.03 an ounce they then deduct the price of transportation from the American producer of silver, whatever that may be, and offer him a little less than the market price for his silver.

In other words, the Government becomes the depreciator of silver, first by telegraphing to a market where there is not any silver and which is not a silver market; secondly, by adding the cost of transportation to that market which is not an actual market for silver, and then compelling the American producer to sell his silver a little below that. When he has sold it at a dollar an ounce, we will say, the Government coins it and then puts it out to its citizens for $1.29 cents or thereabouts.

I do not think it is an honest transaction myself and I never did, but the dishonesty consists in the fact that the Government denies to the producer and owner of silver the right to go to the Mint and coin it as the Constitution intended that every man should who had it.

It is disgraceful, and it is a dishonest dollar, made so by the Government of the United States by its financial course. The dollar when it is coined is an honest dollar. The filching comes from the man who owns the silver and not from the man who takes it, because it buys everywhere just as much as a gold dollar. It buys 13 per cent. more to-day than it did ten years ago in every market in the world of everything that can be required; and then you say it is a dishonest dollar. It is the robbery of the men who produce it and who own it and not the robbery of the men who take it, who get value received and get a dollar that enables them to buy everywhere on God's green earth as well as they could with a gold dollar, and 13 per cent. more than they could with a gold dollar ten years ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 1278 and continued to line 1378, when the following paragraph was read:

Assay office at Charlotte, N. C.: For assayer and melter, $1,500; and assistant assayer, $1,250; in all, $2,750.

For incidental and contingent expenses, including labor, $2,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like the chairman to explain that; how much gold or silver is coined there, and how much is the cost of that establishment from year to year, and what is the outcome of the operations of the Government at that place.

Mr. ALLISON. The report of the Director of the Mint will show. I do not see the Senator from North Carolina in his seat. The appropriation for this office is the same as last year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And the year before?

Mr. TELLER. It is the same as the estimates?

Mr. ALLISON. It is the same as the estimates. I do not remember the details.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Can the chairman tell us if there is really any amount of gold or silver coined in North Carolina?

Mr. ALLISON. There is a considerable amount of gold coined there, brought from the mines of North Carolina and Georgia and that neighborhood.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But how much is coined or assayed alone in that place?

Mr. RANSOM. I was about to make a statement, but I see that the Senator from Iowa is finding the statement in reference to the amount of gold that is minted, if I may use that expression, in Charlotte.

Mr. ALLISON. In 1885 the amount of gold coined at the Charlotte assay office was $187,876.83; in 1884 it was $133,544.27, and a very small amount of silver. It is chiefly gold.

Mr. CHACE. It costs 4 per cent. then to assay it.

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose the assay office at Charlotte is like a number of assay offices provided for in this bill and other bills, a convenience to the producers of gold and silver who are in the neighborhood.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator mean to say that the $190,000, or whatever the sum, $200,000 in round numbers, that is assayed there is all the product of the mines of that neighborhood, or has it been sent around from other parts of the country to be turned into coin there?

Mr. ALLISON. I would not state that that is the total amount of gold produced in Georgia and North Carolina. The Senator from North Carolina can state more definitely than I can.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But is all the assaying that is done there—the $190,000—done from the metal that is got out of the earth, or is it sent from somewhere else?

Mr. ALLISON. I think most of it is from the earth in the neighborhood, in Georgia and North Carolina.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So we expend 4 per cent. instead of sending it to Philadelphia or wherever, and assaying it there.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that is not protection of American industries I do not understand what can be.

Mr. ALLISON. In view of the appropriation for this assay office having continued from year to year, and inasmuch as it is provided for by law, the committee did not feel that they could strike out this provision.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator if it is provided for by any other law than an appropriation act?

Mr. ALLISON. It is.

Mr. TELLER. It was established many years ago.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then, if so, of course we can not reach it here.

Mr. ALLISON. It is provided for by a specific statute.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am content, if not satisfied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "government in the Territories," after the word "governor," at the end of line 1387, to strike out "two thousand six hundred" and insert "three thousand;" in line 1389, after the word "judge," to strike out "two thousand five hundred" and insert "three thousand;" and in line 1393, after the word "all," to strike out "ninteen thousand six" and insert "twenty thousand five;" so as to make the clause read:

Territory of Alaska: For salary of governor, $3,000; judge, $3,000; attorney, marshal, and clerk, $2,500 each; four commissioners, $1,000 each; four deputy marshals, $750 each; in all, $20,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that an increase of the salary of the governor of the Territory?

Mr. ALLISON. The act organizing the Territory of Alaska is one of the recent acts of Congress. The Committee on Territories provided a salary there of $3,000 per annum.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator from Iowa will allow me, the Committee on Territories reported a bill with a lower salary and it was increased in the Senate and put at $3,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator for correcting me, and regret that I did the Committee on Territories the injustice of suggesting that they reported this salary. The judge was provided for also at $3,000. I understand that recently there has been a very acceptable person appointed to the position of governor in the Territory of Alaska, and also an exceptionally good lawyer appointed to the position of judge in that Territory, and in view of its remoteness and the expense of getting to the Territory from the States it was thought wise to suggest at least to the Senate that the salary provided for in the law should be appropriated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is just what I wish to get at. I wish to know whether the existing law establishing these offices fixes the salary at $2,600 or $3,000.

Mr. ALLISON. It fixes the salary of the governor at $3,000 and the salary of the judge at $3,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So that the committee amendment appropriates the money that the law entitles these people to have?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; if that is so I have nothing to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further objection the amendment will be considered agreed to. It is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the following clause was read from line 1398 to line 1403:

Territory of Arizona: For salary of governor, $2,600; chief-justice and two associate judges, at $3,000 each; secretary, $1,800; interpreter and translator in the executive office, $500; in all, $13,900.

Mr. TELLER. If the committee because of a statute fixing the salary of the governor of Alaska at $3,000 felt compelled to change the House bill on that item from $2,600 to $3,000, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee why they did not make the same change as to other Territories? I find that the Revised Statutes provide in section 1845:

From and after the 1st day of July, 1873, the annual salaries of the governors of the several Territories shall be $3,500, and the salaries of the secretaries shall be $2,500 each.

I understand that to be the law now, and that all the governors of the Territories except the Territory of Alaska are entitled by statute to $3,500, and I find that in the bill as it came from the House the governor of Arizona is given $2,600. It strikes me that if they interfered in one case the committee ought to have interfered in all cases. The honorable chairman says that he understands there has been a very capable and proper man appointed governor of Alaska.

Mr. ALLISON. I was informed so by some gentleman on the Democratic side.

Mr. TELLER. I understand the same is true of several other Territories. For instance, recently we confirmed what was said to be a very able and deserving man for Utah, the most important Territory in the United States considered with reference to its relations to the General Government. We sent a man out there at $2,600 a year quite as capable probably as the man who has gone to Alaska, quite as deserving, and with much greater obligations and duties upon him than the governor of Alaska can have.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have been referred by the chairman of the committee to the Alaska act of the 17th of May, 1884, creating this office, and I do not see in the section that provides for the establishment of the office any salary. My friend from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] calls my attention to the ninth section, which says, "they shall severally receive the fees of office established by law," &c., and the governor $3,000, the attorney $2,500, the marshal $2,500, and the judge $3,000. Now, let us see if the bill conforms to that.

Mr. CHACE. It does conform exactly as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend from Rhode Island says it does conform exactly. In that case I think the committee has done right, because here is a standing law which provides for that thing, and if we reduce it on this appropriation bill it would only involve the United States in expense.

Mr. TELLER. What do you say of Arizona?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I say the same thing.

Mr. ALLISON. In response to the suggestion made by the Senator from Colorado, I will state that since 1877 the salary of the governors of all the Territories has been $2,600 instead of the statutory salary provided for in the Revised Statutes and read by the Senator from Vermont. It may be that we ought at this distance of time and after a change of all the governors increase the compensation to the sum proposed and suggested by the Senator from Colorado; but I submit that if these governors have been able to conduct the operations of the Territories during all of the intervening years from 1877 to 1886, the new governors recently appointed can afford to serve the country at the salary provided for by existing appropriation acts.

Mr. TELLER. I did not suggest that the salaries of these governors should be raised. The inquiry I made was whether it was not necessary to raise the salary if the statute provided that he should have it, and I wanted to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the statute provided that every Territorial governor, except of Alaska, should have $3,500, and they had left those alone. I did not suggest that we should increase it, although I would be entirely in favor myself of increasing this salary to what the statute provides.

I think it is out of character to send a man who is fit to manage affairs in a Territory like Utah and ask him to live upon a salary of $2,600. I will venture to say that we have in the Treasury Department more than twenty men living here at Washington with no such obligations and duties to discharge as these men have in the Territories who are getting their $2,500 a year and even getting $3,500 a year, living here in Washington, who do not begin to assume the obligations that these men do, and do not have the responsibilities that they have in the Territories.

Mr. CULLOM. Or the labor to perform.

Mr. TELLER. I am not going to make any motion to increase the salaries of these Democratic governors; but if any Democrat here has the courage to do it he will always find me voting for it, because I believe in giving to a man who goes out into the Territories to represent the Government of the United States a respectable sum. I submit that $2,600 is such a contemptible sum that nobody ought to be asked to go out and serve as governor for $2,600, and I wonder that any man can be got to do it who is fit to go.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator kindly show us the law?

Mr. DAWES. I think if the Senator from Colorado will examine some of the appropriation acts since 1877 he will find in the beginning of the first section where the phrase is inserted, "and the salary shall be hereafter as fixed in this act."

Mr. TELLER. I think not.

Mr. DAWES. I think he will find it so. I do not know that it has any reference to these particular salaries, but I know that that phrase was put into some of the appropriation acts, and has been since 1877. I suggest that possibly that might affect some of these salaries.

I do not differ from the Senator in the propriety of cutting down these salaries, and I would vote with him to put any salary up to a reasonable point, whether it be under this administration or any other. But the Senator will find in some of the appropriation acts that device by which salaries were cut down in an appropriation act not only for the year that the appropriation was made but for all time.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, what is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no question before the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. Then why do we not proceed with the reading of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a discursive discussion on the merits of the salaries of Territorial governors. The Chief Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the proviso to the clause appropriating $22,000 for "legislative expenses of Territory of Montana," in line 1473, after the word "clerk," to insert "hereinbefore provided for;" so as to read:

Provided, That the sum of $900 of said amount is hereby specifically appropriated for salary of clerk hereinbefore provided for in secretary's office.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like the chairman to explain that. Is that a new office?

Mr. ALLISON. We found in the bill as it came to us "the sum of $900 of said amount," that is the legislative expenses, "is hereby specifically appropriated for salary of clerk." Included in the legislative expenses is a clerk. The bill as it came from the House stated "for salary of clerk in secretary's office." We concluded that if this sum of $900 was to be taken for a clerk from the legislative expenses it should be provided that the clerk appropriated for should have this fund.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is this clerk?

Mr. ALLISON. I am not able to state precisely. I suppose he is the usual clerk that they have in a Territorial Legislative Assembly, having the duties and performing the services that are usually performed by a clerk in a Legislative Assembly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I do not see in regard to the other Territories that precise provision. I merely ask for information. The amendment is undoubtedly correct, but I do not see it in other places.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not myself see it in regard to Idaho. I have no doubt that a clerk is necessary to every Legislative Assembly, and I have no doubt he would be appointed and paid out of these appropriations whether specifically mentioned or not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Only this bill might give an additional one.

Mr. ALLISON. We especially provided against it by the insertion of the words which we proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, inserting the words "hereinbefore provided for."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 1492, when the following paragraph was read:

Territory of Utah: For salary of governor, $2,600; chief-justice and two associate judges, at $3,000 each; and secretary, at $1,800, $13,400.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether the salary allowed the chief-justice of Utah is the salary prescribed by the statute as it stands now. I make that inquiry for the reason that I personally know that the gentleman occupying the position of chief-justice there is a man who ought to have more than a three-thousand-dollar salary. He is a poor man, and the position of chief-justice of that Territory is one of the most laborious positions there is anywhere in the country. I think that the salary ought to be increased if the law will allow it.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Illinois that the amount here provided is the statutory salary.

Mr. CULLOM. Is it in order for me to move to increase the amount?

Mr. ALLISON. I should hardly think so.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand that I should call upon the Chair to decide the question; I would like exceedingly if that officer could be given more salary than is allowed by the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. What officer is it?

Mr. CULLOM. Chief-justice of the Territory of Utah; and I think the governor also ought to have more salary.

Mr. BUTLER. Of course he ought.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Illinois moves such an amendment the Chair will be happy to entertain it.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to have the consent of the Senate that the governor have the statutory salary given him instead of twenty-six hundred dollars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You have a right to move that if the statute authorizes it.

Mr. CULLOM. But I want to include in that a motion to increase the salary of the chief-justice $500 as well.

Mr. ALLISON. For the present I hope the Senator will not suggest that amendment, as we have agreed, I believe, that the committee amendments should be first considered, and then it will be in order to go back.

Mr. CULLOM. If it is understood that I can have that opportunity in the future, I shall not press the matter now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois submit an amendment?

Mr. CULLOM. I will not make the motion to amend now, but wait until the committee amendments are concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 1528, when the following paragraph was read:

Territory of Wyoming: For salary of governor, $2,600; chief justice and two associate judges, at $3,000 each; and secretary, at $1,800, $13,400.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is $400 for the judges above what has been stated.

Mr. HARRISON. It is the same as the others.

Mr. ALLISON. All the judges of the Territories are entitled by law to $3,000 and all are appropriated for at that rate.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, under the head of "War Department," in the appropriations for the Signal Office, in line 1595, after the words "military telegraph lines," to strike out "forty" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the clause read:

For the services of scientific experts, clerks, draughtsmen, copyists, messengers, mechanics, laborers, and such other services as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, in the office of the Chief Signal Officer, to carry into effect the appropriations for observation and report of storms, and for the construction, maintenance, and repairs of military telegraph lines, $30,000.

Mr. CHACE. I ask the chairman why the committee reduced that item of $40,000 to $30,000?

Mr. HAWLEY. What is the reason for the reduction? I suppose the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] made that inquiry, but I could not hear him.

Mr. ALLISON. This reduction of $10,000 is supposed to leave matters in such form as to allow a sufficient sum to the Chief Signal Officer to discharge the duties which are required to be performed by the men provided for in this clause.

Mr. CHACE. What was the appropriation for that purpose last year?

Mr. ALLISON. The appropriation last year was $40,000.

Mr. CHACE. Was there anything left to be covered into the Treasury?

Mr. ALLISON. I should think not. I have no recollection of anything being covered into the Treasury from the Signal Office on account of any appropriation.

Mr. CHACE. Is there any evidence that this money was injudiciously expended?

Mr. BECK. I ask the chairman of the committee to pass the amendment over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to passing it over, but I should be glad to call attention to the Book of Estimates, page 267, which shows how this money is to be expended. I will not take the time of the Senate to do so this evening if the item is to be passed over.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to know how the money is expended.

Mr. ALLISON. The method by which it is expended is by employing a civilian assistant at $4,500, one professor of electrical science at $3,500, and so on.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is in the discretion of the Chief Signal Officer?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; it is a lump appropriation of so many dollars.

Mr. CHACE. I am satisfied; I do not want to hear any more.

Mr. SEWELL. I want to know of the chairman of the committee what proportion of that appropriation is for military telegraph lines?

Mr. ALLISON. Not a dollar.

Mr. SEWELL. After providing for the services of experts, clerks, &c., the clause making the appropriation reads, "and for the construction, maintenance, and repairs of military telegraph lines," before the statement of the amount.

Mr. ALLISON. I say not a dollar. I do not think one dollar of this appropriation is expended for military telegraph lines.

Mr. SEWELL. We have military telegraph lines and signal stations along the coast—I speak particularly of New Jersey—at the exposed beaches some miles out at sea, by which they have been enabled to report to the mainland vessels going ashore, and boats have lain at the beach forty-eight hours in consequence of the cable being out of order. When I called the attention of the Chief Signal Officer to it he stated that if he could get appropriation enough he would keep the cable in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that I did not exactly comprehend the scope of his inquiry at first. This is simply a lump appropriation to cover the expenditures made for the Signal Service, and the phraseology used here is to designate the general character of the office in reference to its meteorological observations.

Mr. SEWELL. Here is a decrease in the appropriation of $10,000. What I want to get at is how much of that decrease applies to the repairs of those lines?

Mr. ALLISON. Not a dollar, as I stated before.

Mr. SEWELL. How much is appropriated to those military telegraph lines?

Mr. ALLISON. Nothing of this gross sum. This is a general appropriation for the purposes of the Signal Office which is described here as being an office "to carry into effect the appropriations for observation and report of storms, and for the construction, maintenance, and repairs of military telegraph lines."

In the sundry civil bill we make a large appropriation for these purposes, and this is a little appropriation drawn into this bill in a quiet way to enable the Chief Signal Officer to employ certain clerks and professors and scientific experts to carry on the various duties of the office of the Chief Signal Officer. I have here and was proceeding to read the exact method of expending this $40,000 which was appropriated last year and which is reappropriated by the House provision in this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But why should this "military telegraph" be in here at all if there is another bill covering a large sum for that?

Mr. ALLISON. This presumably is to cover what is called the office force as distinguished from that great range and multitude of men who are employed upon the various stations of the Signal Service.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But this clause says "and for the construction, maintenance, and repairs of military telegraph lines." If in another bill there is a general provision for this sort of thing, why is that very elastic clause put in here at all? If the object is for scientific experts, &c., why do you not strike out this about telegraph lines entirely, in order to leave it in its proper place on the other bill?

Mr. ALLISON. The appropriations in the sundry civil bill for the maintenance of this meteorological bureau are appropriations of a specific character for men, so many sergeants, so many corporals, so many privates of the first class and privates of the second class, &c. The Chief Signal Officer seems to require, and I have no doubt does require, a certain civilian force in his office outside of and independent of the military or quasi military force which is appropriated for in the sundry civil bill now, and which until the last year or two has been appropriated for in the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, but this clause is for things and not for men.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senater will see that it is not only for things, but for men also.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; the part of the clause in lines 1594 and 1595, that I called attention to, applies to the military telegraph lines.

Mr. ALLISON. But those words are merely descriptive. They are merely descriptive of the character of the office.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Descriptive of the character of the work for which the money is appropriated.

Mr. ALLISON. That is to say:

> For the services of scientific experts, clerks, draughtsmen, copyists, messengers, mechanics, laborers, and such other services as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, in the office of the Chief Signal Officer.

It might stop there, but it goes on to designate what these people are doing, namely, the Chief Signal Officer has to "carry into effect the appropriation for observation and report of storms, and for the construction, maintenance, and repairs of military telegraph lines."

Mr. CHACE. That sentence is a description of what this is for.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a mere description. I, of course, yield to the superior judgment of the Senator from Vermont; but this language has stood the test of criticism for the last five years, because it is the exact language that has been incorporated in these bills for certainly that long, and I think for seven or eight years. It has stood the test of expenditure, which is very certain, because there is residuum. Any Senator who desires to know how this money is expended annually can turn to page 276 of the Book of Estimates and see the method of expenditure. I will not stop to read it.

Mr. CONGER. The last clause, about which the complaint and comment has been made, has been in the appropriation bills ever since the appropriations were made for this Signal Service, and necessarily so. The great value of the Signal Service is in its stations for observation. It is the extension of these stations over large regions of country. Now, in order to get reports of coming storms from as far off as possible, it has been necessary from the beginning to build telegraph lines by this department, and they have been built to remote places where there are no existing telegraphs and where there are no means of communication, as there must be if the observations are to be of any value.

Mr. ALLISON. My friend from Michigan does not suppose that any portion of this money is used for building or repairing military telegraph lines. If he does he is entirely mistaken. Not a cent of it is ever used for that purpose.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator is entirely mistaken.

Mr. ALLISON. I may be, but I happen to know about it.

Mr. CONGER. I am sorry the Senator does not understand what this means. There is a telegraph line at Fort Myer across the river which conneets with the Signal Office here in the city. There is a military telegraph line for this little distance of 2 or 3 miles that is put up by this office and kept in repair by it. Wherever there is a station away from a regular telegraph line, by virtue of this appropriation the Signal Office has connected it with some one station by telegraph. There are cautionary stations, there are places where there are signal stations on the coast of the lakes and on the ocean far removed from towns and from places where there are telegraph lines, where cautionary signals are kept up for the benefit of navigation to give warning of the approach of storms. It has been found necessary at many places to connect with telegraph lines 3 miles, 10 miles, or 100 miles off, it may be, to make valuable for the navigation of the country, the storm signals at remote points where sailors may see them passing by. That is the object of this appropriation, and that is the use to which it has been put.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not desire to occupy the Senator's time, but I want to assure him that if he will turn to page 267 of the Book of Estimates, which must lie upon his desk, he will see that not one cent of this money ever has been or is proposed to be expended for the purpose which he states. There has never been a remote suggestion of the kind. Nobody would think of it and nobody would talk about it.

This is an appropriation that has been in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for many years, and relates entirely to the office force which is sitting here in the city of Washington recording and registering the arrangements and books and accounts of the Signal Service Bureau; and the idea that any dollar of this is expended in enlarging or expanding or promoting the diffusion of this system of the Signal Service is, to my mind, a thing which ought not to be suggested in this Chamber in the face of the absolute fact that must rest within the knowledge of every Senator.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Senator if there is not in that an estimate for this very purpose in the language used here?

Mr. ALLISON. Not an estimate for this purpose at all in this connection.

Mr. CONGER. Then how did it get into this bill at all?

Mr. ALLISON. I endeavored once to explain that, to show that these words here are merely descriptive of the office force that is used for the purpose of gathering together the accounts of the Signal Service Bureau, the work of which is appropriated for in another bill, formerly in the Army bill, and now in the sundry civil bill, which has been under debate for a week in the House and which will probably reach us in the course of four or five days.

Mr. CONGER. Now, I will make a remark on that before I forget it. I have been in the Signal Office to which the gentleman alludes when he says all this appropriation is for what is to be done in the Signal Office in the city of Washington. I have seen while there vast clouds, tumuli, as the Senator has, and I do not know all the queer names of the clouds—nimbus is one, I believe—and I have seen all kinds of machinery there. But I submit to the Senator from Iowa—and I wish he would give me his attention for a moment.

Mr. ALLISON. I am so doing.

Mr. CONGER. I want it given more intensely than he is giving it now. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLISON. I will endeavor to give my eye and ear to the Senator.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Senator how many miles of telegraph line he has seen in that little office in the city of Washington to be repaired or maintained or kept up?

Mr. ALLISON. As I go to the Signal Office during the daytime, I do not think I have ever seen a mile of it. I do not claim that this is used for repairing wires in the Signal Office. It is a clerical force, an expert force. I should be glad to read, if it would not take too much time, the exact mode of expenditure, showing how it was done this last year. Would the Senator like to hear it?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, in a moment. What I have to say will be more interesting just now. The Senator has made a great mistake in his statement, and I certainly am not going on to make a personal allusion of this kind unless I have his attention. Neither the Senator from Tennessee nor any other Senator shall attract his attention so that I shall not have access to him on this occasion.

The Senator, I say, must have made a great error in his statement or he must rise in his place and confess that he was very wrong in his conclusion. The Senator did say that this whole appropriation related to things that were going on inside. Now, the Senator from Rhode Island is taking the attention of the Senator from Iowa. I do not attribute this interruption to any unkindness to me personally, but I suppose through sympathy the Senator from Rhode Island wants to take the part of the weaker Senator from Iowa. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHACE. I was just suggesting that it was getting to be rather cloudy on account of the tumuli.

Mr. CONGER. I do not care which way the Senator from Iowa talks about it. He is generally accurate, but he is mistaken in my opinion and rather confused on this question. The Senator did say that all the appropriation in this whole paragraph was for office-work inside a single office here.

Mr. ALLISON. So I stated.

Mr. CONGER. Now, I ask the Senator how many miles of military telegraph line, for the construction, maintenance, and repairs of which this appropriation is made, he supposes could, without incommoding the other duties and management of the office, be constructed in the little building where the Signal Office is? Any explanation of that kind will be perfectly satisfactory to me, and I will withdraw from this contest if it can be made handsomely and satisfactorily.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the suggestions of the Senator from Michigan are rather in the nature of hypercriticism. If he will add on line 1594 a few words, so as to read, "and to carry into effect the appropriations for the construction, maintenance, and repairs of military telegraph lines," he will then see to what this appropriation applies. It has been supposed hitherto for a good many years that it was not necessary to repeat those words, but the Senator from Michigan has waked up after five or six years of slumber on this appropriation and suddenly discovered that it applied to the repairs of military telegraph lines. All I have to say respecting that is that if the Senator will again look at page 267 of the Book of Estimates he will see how this money is expended. As to the phraseology employed I should be glad to be aided by the Senator from Michigan, and I would be glad to insert any language which he will suggest looking to perfecting the phraseology of this provision.

Mr. CONGER. Will the Senator give me the page?

Mr. ALLISON. Page 267 of the Book of Estimates, Appendix K. He will there not only see the amount, but he will see the character of the expenditure.

Mr. HAWLEY. I see on page 267 the list of employés, and I should like to know which quarter of them is to be discharged if the appropriation is reduced from $40,000 to $30,000. Who is to be discharged on that list—the civilian assistant, the professor of electrical science, or this other professor? You will save about $10,000 and will probably take out of the bureau five or six of these gentlemen, and leave the office altogether useless. If you are to take out $10,000 worth of laborers and messengers and clerks, I do not see how the professors can work. Where is the $10,000 to be taken out?

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations believe that by a careful and prudent and economical administration of the civilian portion of this bureau it can be conducted with an annual expenditure of $30,000; and whether it dispenses with a translator and bibliographer, or a professor, or what not, or a writer upon storms or cyclones, or a particular expert with reference to any special matter relating to meteorology, the Committee on Appropriations would not undertake to direct. They have absolute faith, at least I have, in the intelligence and fidelity and zeal of the Chief Signal Officer, and have a belief that if we give him $30,000 per annum he will so expend it as to make his office efficient and at the same time discharge whatever surplus of employés he may have there above such amount.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut and the Senate to the appropriation found in the last sundry civil bill. The first item is:

SIGNAL SERVICE.

To be expended by the Secretary of War:

For the observation and report of storms: For expenses of the meteorological observation and report of storms by telegraph and signal, or otherwise announcing the probable approach and force of storms, for the benefit of the commerce and agriculture throughout the United States as follows:

Then comes the enumeration:

For the manufacture, purchase, and repair of instruments, $10,000.

For telegraphic reports, $138,000.

For expenses of storm, cautionary, off-shore, and other signals on the sea and lake coasts of the United States, announcing the probable approach and force of storms, including the pay of observers, services of operators (where not otherwise provided for), lanterns, and flags, $11,000.

For continuing the connections of signal stations at life-saving stations and light-houses, including services of operators, repairmen, materials (such as cable, wire, poles, and insulators), and general service connected therewith, —— thousand five hundred dollars: Provided, That such connections, in the opinion of the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service and the Light-House Board, shall be deemed necessary.

For manufacture, purchase, and repair of instrument shelters. $2,000.

For rent, hire of civilian employés, furniture, light, heating supplies, stationery, ice, repairs, and other expenses of offices maintained for public use in cities and ports receiving reports, outside of Washington, D. C., $41,500.

For river and flood reports, and expenses incidental thereto, $10,000.

For maps and bulletins to be displayed in chambers of commerce and boards of trade rooms, and for distribution, $25,000.

For cotton-belt reports, $7,000: Provided, That hereafter the work of no other Department, bureau, or commission authorized by law shall be duplicated by this bureau.

For maintenance and repair of military-telegraph lines, $24,000.

Amounting in all, I think, to about $600,000. I call the attention of the Senator from New Jersey to the fact that a specific sum was appropriated in this act for the repair and maintenance of military-telegraph lines. Now follows a statement of the military force connected with the office:

Pay: For pay of one brigadier-general and sixteen second lieutenants, $29,500; for longevity pay to officers of the Signal Corps, to be paid with current monthly pay, $4,250; for pay of one hundred and fifty sergeants, thirty corporals, and three hundred and twenty privates, including payment due on discharge, $200,-151.51; for mileage to officers when traveling on duty under orders, $5,000; for pay of contract surgeon, $1,200; for commutation of quarters to commissioned officers at places where there are no public quarters, $7,200; in all, $247,301.51.

Then follow the subsistence and the regular supplies, fuel, and all that sort of thing, altogether amounting to a very large sum of money and covering very largely a class of expenditures that are provided for by name, and not the class of expenditures which are made according to the Book of Estimates under the provisions now under consideration in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why are they not all brought together.

Mr. PLUMB. I was about thinking of that and suggesting that they ought to be so brought together; but in point of fact that has not been done heretofore. In the beginning this was a military establishment. It was provided for then in the Army appropriation bill. Finally this civil duty was ingrafted upon this quasi-military establishment, and the personnel of the force was provided for in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, as the personnel of the force in substantially all the other Departments of the Government is provided for. Then it grew a little further and got into the sundry civil bill, where it floated away from all bounds and became an enormous establishment. There ought to be a combination; all these appropriations ought to be combined in one.

We are duplicating by description at least the appropriations for various objects, civilian employés, repair of military telegraph lines, and so on, and consequently almost inevitably the appropriations are more extravagant than they would be if they were brought together in such a way that the entire scope of the transactions of this important and expensive establishment of the Government could be considered at one time and in one place and in one connection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is also true as to some other appropriations.

Mr. PLUMB. It is very true, I have no doubt, in regard to some other appropriations; but this has grown up from time to time, perhaps on the whole wisely, but at all events it has been enlarged. There has been no disposition in any way to diminish the value of the service to the country, whatever that might be, but certainly there ought not to be this duplication of important objects in different bills. There is an appropriation of about $5,000 in the Army appropriation bill besides for aanunciators and various things, as I had occasion to find, and there are a mass of articles purchased there that I had no idea had any existence. That is provided for in the Army bill. Then the legislative bill further provides for certain other classes of expenses; and then comes the sundry civil bill with wide grasp covering the whole situation both as in the Army bill and in the legislative bill.

It seems to me it would be the part of economy and of proper administration to take this provision entirely out of the legislative appropriation bill and put the whole thing in the sundry civil bill, where it can be brought under a scrutiny which will be comprehensive enough to embrace all the features of the administration and all the expense attending on this important bureau.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why did not the committee so report?

Mr. PLUMB. That I can not say. One thing, of course, the Senate will understand about this matter. These bills go to different subcommittees. The chairman knows more about that than I do. I can say for myself that I have not had my attention specially called to this matter, though I have thought about it.

Besides, the theory has been that the personnel of the office should be provided for under the legislative bill; but, as the Senator from Iowa has well said, this provision, while embracing by description the construction and maintenance and repair of military telegraph lines, has been used exclusively for the pay of the civil force. That language was put in originally, and probably some of the money was so applied until they succeeded in getting an appropriation in the sundry civil bill which covered everything, and then it was used for the other purpose. I can not say definitely as to that, but that is probably a fair construction from the known facts. But certainly, inasmuch as we have a provision for the military employés in and for the repair of military telegraphs in the sundry civil bill and pretty much all the other items of this great establishment, they certainly all ought to be combined together.

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not ask these questions because I desired to make any unnecessary criticism, but because I am impressed with the very great value of the Signal Service. I doubt not that there might be reforms in the arrangement, the formation, the management of it. That is quite possible. It has been a matter of a great deal of controversy within a few years past. It was brought up in the Committee on Military Affairs and discussed again and again, and a subcommittee of that committee undertook to reorganize the service in some shape.

Now, I will assent to almost anything in the way of a proper and economical arrangement of this matter that does not interfere with the essential usefulness of the Signal Service. It has won its place among the scientific men and among the practical men of the country as an institution of very great value. It is acknowledged by scientists abroad to be a great credit to the country. It keeps up its constant correspondence with the scientific societies of other countries and constant comparison of observations, and is extending the area of science in this respect very largely and very honorably and creditably.

I am not sure but that we shall have to come by and by to make an entirely civil institution of it. That is quite possible; and yet when I have heard the argument in favor of having these civil-service men under military discipline and subject to the laws governing military enlistment I am impressed by that view. I only want to be assured as we are passing over this bill and reducing this $40,000 to $30,000 that we are not impairing the essential scientific usefulness of the bureau. I could understand the discharging of a dozen of these lieutenants or their transfer from the Signal Service to the line of the Army; but I think there are about four officers in the list on page 267 of the estimates that are essential to the very existence of the bureau. There are scientific students, observers, two or three professors there, who get the essence of all this multitude of returns from all parts of the country and from all parts of the world, and I do not want them discharged. I do not care what you do with the rest of the personnel, except what is necessary to the working of the bureau.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether, in his own judgment, this paragraph ought not to go out of the bill and be inserted, if it is needed at all, in the bill where this subject is legislated for, so as to bring it all together. In other words, I am impressed with the remarks of the Senator from Kansas that it is not good legislation to scatter items of appropriation through different bills upon one subject, so that when a man comes to look at the law to ascertain what is appropriated he has got to go through a number of different bills in order to ascertain the facts. It seems to me it would be very much better, if the money appropriated in this section is needed at all, that it should go out of this bill and take its place in connection with the appropriation that is made for that service. If the Senator has no good reason to offer why it should not be done, I propose to make a motion to strike it out of this bill entirely.

Mr. ALLISON. This is a matter that has been carefully considered by the Committee on Appropriations, and it is only a part of the general system of this bill.

Now, what is this legislative, executive, and judicial bill? It is, first, an appropriation for the House and Senate and all their employés, and then for all the Departments of the Government situated in Washington. That is the theory of it. It covers all the clerical force, and there are carried in this bill probably nine thousand employés in all. The theory of the bill is that it shall carry the clerical force in this city as distinguished from that multitude of people who are employed in various ways elsewhere. Of course this bill also carries certain employés of the Secretary of the Treasury in the great cities.

Mr. CULLOM. I believe I heard the Senator from South Carolina make the same suggestion, that this bill is appropriating money for governors and secretaries and judges all over the country.

Mr. ALLISON. It is to cover the civil employés of the Government having a fixed separate salary or having fixed and definite duties. Prior to 1882 this whole Signal Service was swallowed up and embodied in the Army appropriation bill, and no Senator could tell, no man could tell, not even the Secretary of War, without the most minute examination and figuring of various accounts, what the cost of the Signal Service was.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Can he now?

Mr. ALLISON. He can now for the reason that the late Secretary of War, Mr. Lincoln, expressly insisted that the expenses of this meteorological service should be segregated from the expenses of the War Department proper, and for the first time in 1882 there was a segregation of these expenses, and then it was that this lump appropriation of $40,000 was first inserted in the legislative bill and it was required because it was supposed that you could not tell exactly how many people would be required in the Signal Office. They publish bulletins every day, a specimen of which is to be seen in our rear hall here. These are sent all over the country. A certain amount of printing must be done in this office; a certain amount of employés of that character must be employed in the office. So it was not practicable to draw into the classified service the people who were thus employed, and therefore in 1882 there was a lump sum of $40,000 appropriated.

The Chief Signal Officer has used up that sum in assigning to his office certain definite employés which are stated year by year in the Book of Estimates.

The Committee on Appropriations believe that he has too many employés, that he can cut down at the rate at least of $10,000, and some of them believe that he could cut down to $20,000; but we were not prepared to bring in a schedule of definite and distinct salaries and numbers that could be so employed, and we said to him in this bill, "You must regulate your civilian force under this rule so as to expend only $30,000 instead of $40,000."

In response to the suggestion made by the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Kansas, I have a word to say. This bureau is in some sense in a transition state, as the Senators know, in reference to some other matters connected with it, for it has been my fortune for the last year and a half to expend a great deal of my time in the investigation of the details of the Signal Service Office; and I will state to the Senate that to my knowedge there are to-day one hundred and forty-three men employed in civilian employment in the Signal Office in this city that are registered and recorded as men in the military service of our Government under the appropriations in the sundry civil bill. These men are performing here mere clerical duty. They comprise part of the five hundred enlisted men who are provided for annually in the sundry civil bill.

It is the object of the Committee on Appropriations not to cripple or impair or in any wise affect injuriously the Signal Service with reference to its usefulness to the country, but we believe that there can be economies introduced there which have not yet been introduced; and I will say to the Senator from Kansas who mentioned that these expenses had increased that since the time we have segregated these expenses from the ordinary expenditures of the War Department, according to the best estimates, these expenditures have been reduced rather than increased, so that the expenditures of the last fiscal year and the present fiscal year are considerably below the expenses of 1882, 1883, and 1884.

I believe they can be reduced still further, and we propose here to reduce them $10,000 in reference to these employés. The chief of them are scientific experts who are employed in various ways in the office of the Chief Signal Officer; and I do not care, for one, to dispense with a single one of the men who are thus employed; but there is a vast number of smaller employés here who we think are unnecessary, and therefore we propose to cut down $10,000 in this bill in order to see if we can not introduce at least that small economy with reference to the office force.

That is all I have to say about it, and I do not care what the Senate determine in regard to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the point is not as to the propriety of doing all that can be done to support the Signal Service as it is properly understood; but the point seems to be whether we can not in an appropriation bill that is to pay for that service know that all that is to be paid for that service is brought into that bill, so that we and the executive officers of the Government and the people of the United States in turning to a statute may know how much this Signal Service, as it is called, costs the Government. That is it.

It is not now a Signal Service at all except as to training some people for a time of war, but it is simply a service for observing the weather and reporting it. First we have an army organization, and the pay of the Army is applied to sundry people in this service, certainly the Chief Signal Officer and probably a good many others.

Mr. ALLISON. Three others only.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is three times as many as one. There the Army bill comes in. Then you come to the legislative bill, and here we have got I do not know how many thousand dollars and how many officers. But that is not my point; I want to find the way of trying to bring them together. Then we are told that when the sundry civil bill comes on we shall have another group of expenditures provided for relative to this same service, and lapping over not only in this instance but I am afraid in a great many others, and duplicating and exaggerating the total amount of expenditures far above what they would be if in the common sense way, as you in your business house or I in mine, if I had any other than being attorney of a railroad corporation—and I am sorry I have not a client of that kind just now—would do in carrying on private business. The whole thing is spread out so that nobody can tell anything about it.

Now, why will not the committee agree that whatever has been done, aside from the strict Army pay of these four Army gentlemen, and all there is about the Signal Service, shall be put into one bill so that we and our constituents can see in one place what the whole thing means and so that the Department in executing it will have one single guide and one single law for what they are to do, how they are to do it, and what they are to pay?

Mr. ALLISON. The suggestion made by the Senator from Vermont would require us to take out of this bill all appropriations for surveyors-general, because the surveyors-general execute the appropriations for the survey of the public lands, and yet we do not appropriate in the same bill the money to pay the surveyors-general and the money to survey the public lands. In other words, the appropriations for this Government of ours for the convenience of those who administer the Government have been divided up into what are known as thirteen great appropriation bills, and that has proved to be by long experience of the executive offices and of Congress to be the most careful and expedient way of dividing up the moneys appropriated from year to year.

The argument made by the Senator from Vermont with reference to the collection of all these expenditures into one appropriation bill would apply to the office of the Adjutant-General and almost every other office of the Government. We have here large appropriations for the Adjutant-General's Office. Why not put them in the Army bill? Why should we not know exactly what the Army costs in a single bill, and not have two appropriations for the Adjutant-General's Office?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why?

Mr. ALLISON. So the Senator says, and I agree that his argument goes to the absolute destruction of this bill that we call the legislative, executive, and judicial bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Give us an opinion whether the argument is good or bad.

Mr. ALLISON. I have great modesty in expressing my opinion in the presence of the Senator, but I do not think it ought to be so; and I hope the Senator will not ask, although I think it is a very immaterial matter, that this appropriation be struck out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to. The reading will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "office of the Quartermaster-General," in line 1602, before the words "clerks of class three," to strike out "twelve" and insert "eleven;" in line 1603, before the words "clerks of class one," to strike out "thirty-nine" and insert "forty;" in line 1614, after the word "dollars," to strike out "and one assistant draughtsman, $1,600;" and in line 1615, after the words "one hundred and," to strike out "fifty-nine thousand six" and insert "fifty-six thousand eight;" so as to make the clause read:

In the office of the Quartermaster-General: One chief clerk, at $2,000; nine clerks of class 4; eleven clerks of class 3; twenty-three clerks of class 2; forty clerks of class 1; ten clerks at $1,000 each; fifteen copyists at $900 each; one female messenger at $480; four messengers; six assistant messengers; superintendent of building, $250; two laborers at $480 each; one laborer, $225; two charwomen at $240 each; one engineer at $1,200; one fireman; five watchmen; one draughtsman at $1,800; in all, $156,895.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1622, before the word "clerks of class one," to strike out "ten" and insert "eight;" in line 1623, after the words "class one," to insert "one clerk at one thousand dollars; one copyist;" and in line 1626, after the word "thousand," to strike out "five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For the following clerks and others to be employed by the Quartermaster-General in the investigation of claims for settlement by the Treasury Department under the act of July 4, 1864: One clerk of class 4; one clerk of class 3; eight clerks of class 1; one clerk at $1,000; one copyist; three assistant messengers; and ten agents, at $1,400 each; in all, $31,060.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "office of the Surgeon-General," in line 1642, before the words "clerks of class four," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twenty-two."

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to say a few words about the series of amendments in this paragraph relating to the office of the Surgeon-General. In the estimates the Surgeon-General's Office said it could dispense with twenty of the clerks who were employed in the distinctive pension branch; that is to say, three hundred clerks are there employed whose business it is to expedite the examination of pension claims. The Surgeon-General's Office said it could dispense with twenty of the present force of clerks, reducing the number devoted to pension business exclusively from three hundred to two hundred and eighty. That reduction is made by the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Connecticut will excuse me. I think the action of the committee in reference to these high-class clerks perhaps was taken without that thorough examination which ought to have been made. They acted upon the papers that were before them and the action of the House, and they misapprehended to some extent what the Surgeon-General himself had stated to us in writing. So the Senator will pardon me, as I was consulting with my associates of the committee in reference to really what ought to be done in this office. Of course we all desire that this office should be conducted in the most efficient way, and from the evidence before the committee in writing we thought these clerks could be dispensed with; but afterward—as far as I am concerned, at least, and I think it is so with other members of the committee—we believe it is perhaps necessary that the clerks the number of which we propose to reduce in line 1641, &c., should be restored.

Mr. HAWLEY. It needs simply to reject the amendments. The chairman assents to rejecting the amendments on page 67.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then there is an alteration of figures required in lines 1653 and 1654.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no authority in any way from the committee to suggest any changes here. I only express my own view.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is a mere arithmetical calculation. If the clerks are left in the sum appropriated must be changed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make a motion to disagree to all the amendments in that clause?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have no motion to make. The question is on the amendment in line 1642.

Mr. ALLISON. There are only four amendments in that clause on page 67.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are the four amendments on page 67 agreed to?

Several SENATORS. No, no.

Mr. HAWLEY. The chairman of the committee gives a half-way willing assent that the Senate may reject these amendments.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senate will with great dispatch disagree to these amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations, and I hope the chairman of the committee will take warning from this, and so far as he is concerned will not in the committee hereafter seek in any way to reduce the force in any of these Departments. It can not be done.

Here is the Surgeon-General's Office, the principal service of which ought to be and is attending to the pension part of its duties, keeping up the great mass of pension cases by furnishing information from the records on file in that Department. All the other work in the Surgeon-General's Office is comparatively small and unimportant to the public. It is a good and useful office and it need not be an expensive office. The real work in that office that touches the public needs is the work upon the pension business, furnishing information that aids in the passing of deserving and meritorious pension cases. But there is an old force there that has been for years intrenched and consolidated that does not mean to be disturbed and never will be disturbed.

When this subject came up before the House and before the Committee on Appropriations it was thought that there could be a reduction of this great force. The House thought so; the committee thought so; but the gentleman in charge of the office when he was referred to for information as to what he could cut off said that if twenty clerks were to be reduced he did not want the old force engaged in the general duties applying to the office touched, but that he could get along with the pension force reduced twenty, although there is constant complaint. There is not a Senator here that every week does not have letters saying that cases are delayed and detained because they can not get information from the Surgeon-General's Office. But the Surgeon-General says, or it is said from his office, that if there is to be a reduction the force can be reduced, but the old intrenched force shall not be touched. Give him what he wants then, and let the pension affairs go; let the pensioners be delayed.

The Committee on Appropriations, under the charge of the chairman, in that rash and unguarded manner which characterizes their proceedings, concluded that on the whole if he could get along, as he said, with a reduced force of twenty in the pension work, he might get along with a reduced force of ten. It was a rash proceeding. My friend from Iowa is too impetuous in these things. He did not consider that if he or the committee undertakes to touch one of these departments somebody or other comes in and appeals to some Senator in its favor, and gets him interested, that there shall not be a thing done, there shall not be any reduction.

I hope the Senator from Iowa hereafter will not be engaged in leading the committee on in such a frantic crusade as this. Let us leave these departments alone; let us not molest them, but leave the clerks that they have got to-day, and when they want more give them more, but do not take such a course as will result in their coming in and besieging and beleaguring every Senator in order to prevent these reductions. It is a waste of time, and I hope the Senate will proceed at once to disagree with these amendments. The sooner the better. Then we can go on with the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless some motion is made including all these amendments the Chair will feel it his duty to take up each individual amendment separately.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is the proper order I suppose. I have had the misfortune to talk with two very capable scientific gentlemen at the head of this bureau. They say that they could better spare, if they are obliged to spare clerks, some of lower grade who have not been so long trained and are not so useful to them, but the committee takes two out of the highest class, two out of the next class, and two out of the next, making six, and four out of the lower grade. Those men who have been there many years have come to have a special value by reason of their experience and their judgment. They are trained men, of sense and character. The Surgeon-General thought that twenty out of the three hundred who are engaged in the examination of pension records could be spared. The committee have taken him at his word.

He has some work, however, besides that and the mere routine business of the Army, but even that is no inconsiderable amount when you consider all that is done by the Surgeon-General, from the inspection of the raw recruit up to the care of the various hospitals. It is a misfortune to the Army that though it is small it has a vast number of posts to take care of and has to distribute a large force of surgeons all over the country, and distribute its supplies to all these different posts and small detachments of the Army.

It has also a very valuable Army and Medical Museum, for which we have given a building costing $200,000. It is necessary to take care of that, to add to its supplies, and to care for those already there. It has the best medical library in the world. If it be best to discontinue that museum and library they could both be sold for a very large sum of money. But they require an intelligent supervision and require the care of numerous attendants and scientific officers.

I have only to say that if it be thought necessary to make any radical changes in the management of that office it would be far better to send for those two or three leading officers whose word may be taken as that of gentlemen as well as physicians and surgeons, who can be carefully examined upon all the details of the office, and an inspection will show whether their clerks work or not.

Mr. ALLISON. I accept the kindly reproof of my associate on the Committee on Appropriations in the spirit in which it was given, and in the future I shall endeavor to check my impetuosity, which, of course, is in the direction of economy in this service.

I confess that when I found a reduction of twenty clerks in the Surgeon-General's Office provided for in this bill, and no change with reference to the number that should be employed on pension work, it occurred to me that this reduction of twenty was in the number of clerks outside of those engaged in the pension work. So when I received that letter from the Surgeon-General saying that if there was to be a reduction of twenty there ought to be also a limitation of two hundred and eighty in the bill instead of the number three hundred describing those who work on pension cases, the committee taking for granted, as the Senator from Maine says, that the House had fully investigated this matter and knew that a reduction of twenty could be had in the regular force, we reduced the number on pension cases to two hundred and eighty, and thought we would venture on a reduction of ten in the regular force, only one-half what had been reduced by the House; and that was done very properly I think, on the letters and papers that were before us and the estimates of the Surgeon-General.

I confess that I am obliged for one in my dealing with these appropriation bills to consult the persons who are naturally supposed to know about these things. The Surgeon-General came before the committee or such of them as he could gather together. I asked my friend the Senator from Maine to give ear to him, but he was occupied otherwise at the moment.

Mr. HALE. I have no sensitiveness on the subject because I was not invited.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator knows that he was invited. When we came to have a communication verbally with the Surgeon-General he said to us, "Why, I can not reduce any of the clerks in my office."

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator does he think that sitting up late and getting up early he could find a single branch of the Government anywhere where if a reduction was attempted the head of the Department or the bureau or division would not come in and declare that he could not get along?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not believe I could.

Mr. HALE. I do not believe you could either.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not in any of the Departments I have observed in Washington. The Surgeon-General said: "I said to the House committee that I could reduce twenty." "Why?" "Because for a year and a half twenty of my clerks have been employed in the Adjutant-General's Office, and not in my office at all;" "and," he said, "every single clerk I could spare has been drawn for by the Adjutant-General in order to bring up the pension cases in the Adjutant-General's Office, because the Surgeon-General was ahead of the Adjutant-General." He said, "I have spared to the Adjutant-General every clerk I could, and therefore I have said to the committee of the House of Representatives that I could spare twenty clerks, but they are clerks I have already spared." He said, "It is impossible for me to get on and keep up the current business of the Surgeon-General's Office in reference to pensions and other things unless I have this number of clerks." I confess after that statement of a bureau officer, who is a general in the Army and who is supposed to be above and beyond the ordinary motives and impulses that govern what are called the political bureaus of the Government, I did not feel myself like insisting upon this amendment; and so I frankly said in the presence of the Senate that I thought possibly this amendment had been suggested rather improvidently.

I wish to say one thing at this point, because I may not have another opportunity, and that is that in my judgment if the Second Auditor of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Pensions and the Adjutant-General and the Surgeon-General were to tell the truth and the whole truth about these cases, there are not in any single one of those offices as many men as ought to be employed for the purpose of facilitating the just and honest claims of the soldiers of the Republic and those who are entitled to pensions at its hands.

I hold in my hand a letter from a constituent of mine, in which he says that four or five months ago he wrote the Second Auditor a letter with reference to a claim that he has pending in the Treasury Department for back-pay which he is entitled to under a law passed by Congress some three or four years ago, and he inclosed to me the indorsement of the Second Auditor upon this paper, and he asks me in this letter—I may not take time now to read it—but he asks me in the letter which he addressed to me to call personally upon the Surgeon-General of the United States Army, the Third Auditor of the Treasury, the Adjutant-General of the United States Army, and the Paymaster-General of the United States Army with regard to this claim. It seems that each one of these officers is required to be consulted, and the books and accounts of these officers are required to be examined before this poor soldier in my State can have his claim allowed; and after sitting silently for four months without receiving any answer from any of these officers, from either the Second Auditor, the Surgeon-General, the Adjutant-General, or any one of them, he writes to me, one of the Senators from his State, to call personally upon these men to see why it is that his claim, which has thus been resting so long, is not adjusted.

So when these officers come to me and say that for the current work of the department they need the clerical force they have now, I am inclined to believe them, when by repeated letters from my State I am requested to go with personal importunities and ask them to hurry up the claims of these poor soldiers who served their country more than twenty years ago and are entitled to have their claims paid.

Sir, but for the politics there is in this legislative bill there is not a Department in this Government connected with the administration of the affairs of the soldiers of the Republic but what would ask for an increase of an efficient clerical force.

The Second Auditor, in his personal interview with the Committee on Appropriations, stated to us as plainly as a man could state that the business of the office of the Second Auditor was behind more than one year, and yet when we asked him to put that in writing he did not put it in the exact form. I might state, what every member of the committee knows, that he did not put it in the exact form in which he put it personally before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What was the difference?

Mr. ALLISON. The difference was that he stated the number of claims that were undisposed of and the number of claims that were coming in month by month. The evident inference from that is that the business of the office is at least one year behind time; yet he did not say in writing to the Committee on Appropriations that such was the fact, although he did say it personally to us.

I am in favor of giving to every Department and bureau of this Government whose business it is to adjust and liquidate claims of the soldiers of the Republic, every clerk that they ask, and then I want to demand of them as one of the representatives of the people interested in these claims and one of the representatives of the Government that they shall with vigilance, with industry, with integrity, and with zeal adjust the claims which have now been pending here in many forms for more than twenty years.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me just to read a little extract from the committee's report right in that line?

Mr. ALLISON. I will, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. I read from the Auditor's memoranda sent to the Committee on Appropriations:

> It will be seen by the statistics presented in this report that the number of accounts and claims of all kinds remaining unsettled at the close of the fiscal year 1885 was 44,395, and that the number disposed of during the same period was 29,088, or 2,424 per month. At this rate it would take the present force eighteen months to clear off accumulated work, even if the presentation of accounts and claims were to cease entirely. But the number presented is actually increasing, as the following figures show: In 1881, 18,917 accounts and claims were filed; in 1882, 24,000; in 1883, 27,592; in 1884, 25,741; and in 1885, 30,802.

Mr. HALE. Nothing could better sustain the position which I think I am fortunate enough to have taken on this matter than the eloquent remarks of the Senator from Iowa.

One of the things that ought to be seen to first and foremost is that sufficient force is given in all the Departments of the Government to attend promptly, with dispatch and with discrimination, to the great mass of business that comes from the soldiers and the representatives of the armies of the Union. Nobody on this floor will be found seeking to curtail expenditure in that direction; and precisely that is just what now is sought to be done so far as I can see by anybody.

The result of the deliberations of the Committee on Appropriations and of the debate here, if I may judge, notwithstanding the Senator from Iowa has a letter from his constituent and many such letters probably as all of us have, to the effect that their cases are delayed in the Surgeon-General's Office as well as in other offices, is not going to be that that force is either increased or kept up, but the force is to be reduced in the Surgeon-General's Office that attends to the pension business. The Surgeon-General himself says that he can get along with two hundred and eighty men instead of three hundred; that that force can be reduced, but that the other old intrenched force shall not be reduced. I beg leave under the light of all the information that I have got to disagree with the Surgeon-General. It is an act of temerity on the part of a Senator to do that, but I beg to disagree with him.

I do not believe that is the condition of his office. When men are writing such letters as the Senator from Iowa has referred to here, and when men are getting letters as I am every day that their cases are delayed in the Surgeon-General's Office, I do not believe if his force is to be reduced twenty clerks that the place to take them off is the pension-clerk-roll of that bureau. I disagree wholly with him. I believe that if his force is to be reduced it ought to be reduced in the other direction.

But the force that is employed upon the pension work in that office undoubtedly is not as old a force; it is not so thoroughly intrenched, it has not been there so long, it is not so near perhaps to the head of the bureau, to the Surgeon-General. I do not charge him with anything purposely wrong. I have no prejudice whatever against the Surgeon-General; I know nothing whatever against him except that I believe he is wrong here, that he is following the traditions of these bureaus and these Departments too much, and is overruled by men about him who do not want to be disturbed. I think he is wrong.

I think if you are to reduce the Surgeon-General's Office twenty clerks, not one of them ought to be taken off from the work that attends a pension application; and I would be glad now in the light of all the information we have either for the Senate to determine that there shall not be any reduction, or if there is to be a reduction of ten or fifteen or twenty clerks, that they shall be taken off from the force that is not engaged upon the plain, it may be dull and uninteresting but most useful, work that is performed by that office in working up the arrears-of-pension cases, so that the men who are waiting and importuning and stretching out supplicating hands to the Government may have their needs attended to. I do not agree with the Surgeon-General.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know very much about the Surgeon-General's Office from any communication with the Surgeon-General or any of the officers there, but it has not been my experience of late to find that the business of answering calls from the Pension Office is delayed to any great extent in the Surgeon-General's Office.

A few years ago it is true that the Surgeon-General's Office was very much behind in answering these calls and there was very great complaint, and it was brought to Congress and the force was increased very much; but as I have understood (and from anything that I receive in the way of letters I have no reason to suppose otherwise), that increase of force enabled the Surgeon-General to bring up the work practically as far as it can be brought up under the conditions of the business. So I understand now from this discussion that for some time past he has been loaning clerks to the Adjutant-General's Office. I think the Senator from Maine must be mistaken in supposing that the Surgeon-General's Office is badly behind, to say the least, in answering the calls of the Pension Office at the present time.

Mr. HALE. I do not know what the experience of the Senator from Connecticut is, but not a week of my life passes that I do not get letters from soldiers calling my attention to communications which they have received from the Pension Office in which it is said they are waiting for information from the Surgeon-General's Office. If we are alone, the Senator from Iowa and I, in that position, then our experience is not of much value to the Senate, but I venture to say that other Senators, aside from the Senator from Connecticut, are in the same boat.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I may interrupt my friend from Maine——

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will suggest to him that in such replies as I get, as we all do, if he will look at the dates he will find that in nine cases in ten in the letters from the Commissioner of Pensions they say they are awaiting information that was called for from the Surgeon-General's Office, this day being the 30th of June, we will say on the 20th instant, and so on, and the fault has been chiefly in the Pension Office in just shelving and pigeon-holing these matters until some Senator or somebody stirred them, when year after year the thing would be waiting in the Pension Office. When you stir them up they say, "Oh, yes, we have sent for the information to the Surgeon-General's Office and as soon as we can get it we will send it;" but if you will look at the dates in nine cases in ten you will see that it has been a very recent call.

Mr. HALE. That may be in some cases but it is not my experience.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understood the complaint referred to by the Senator from Iowa was about delays in the Second Auditor's Office.

Mr. HALE. No, the Surgeon-General's Office.

Mr. HAWLEY. It was the Second Auditor's Office, I am quite sure.

Mr. HALE. He referred to the Surgeon-General's Office.

Mr. ALLISON. I referred to the Surgeon-General's Office.

Mr. HALE. I was not speaking without having listened to the letter referred to by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HAWLEY. My experience concurs with that of the Senator from Vermont. I do not think the pension department of the Surgeon-General's Office is behindhand.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Maine assumes that there is some reason why the force of the several Departments of the Government should be reduced, and he brings it as a sort of accusation against the Senate that there is a disposition not to reduce it. I venture to say that the Senator from Maine can not put his hand upon a single bureau in any Department of the Government and intelligently show where there can be a single reduction.

Why should there be any reduction? I will venture here to-night to say that in every Department of the Government everywhere there is an increase of business over five years ago. Why should you decrease the force? Do you expect to conduct this Government, with its increasing millions every year, with a less number of employés than you had last year? It can not be done. Claims are increasing, pensions are increasing, public-land work is increasing fourfold to-day over what it was five years ago. There is four times as much work to-day in the Land Office as there was five years ago by the record. Why, then, should you decrease?

Mr. HALE. How much does the Senator think, then, it will increase when the public domain is entirely exhausted?

Mr. TELLER. It does not make any difference. Within five years 75,000,000 acres of the public domain have passed from the category of public lands to segregated lands at least. I state the fact when I say that to-day there is five times the work in the office that there was five years ago, as the record will show. It is no guess of mine.

Mr. HALE. I suppose, then, that the Land Office will attain its zenith of usefulness and its extent of force when the last acre of public land disappears; that when the Indians are blotted out from existence the country will first realize the necessity of a large Indian Bureau, and that when we have run away forty or fifty years from the war, then it will be seen that we need to increase the pension force. Still that is a line of reasoning that I have not been pursuing myself.

Mr. TELLER. That is a line of reasoning that nobody has pursued except the Senator from Maine. Nobody has suggested that. The fact he does not deny that claims are being put now in greater numbers than last year, greater last year than the year before, greater then than the year preceding. I am not speaking now of the Land Office, but claims that go into the Treasury Department, and pension cases that are coming in. But take the Land Office; there are more pre-emption entries, more homestead filings, more contests, more controversies of every kind going on there; and it is no answer to say a time will come when there will not be any of them. That is no answer at all.

The Senator assumes that now the time has been reached, when I repeat he has not a single fact to justify him, his committee, or the Senate in reducing a single employé of the Government to-day.

The executive officers of the Government are as apt to look after the welfare of the Government as the members of this body. The men who preside over the Treasury Department, over the War Department, over the Navy and the Interior Departments have the same claims to confidence that the Senator from Maine has or anybody else. Some of them have sat in this body, and are presumed to be as earnest in desiring to save the public funds and in getting from the persons who are employed under them full compensation for the money they receive as Senators are; and if they find they have unemployed men it is their duty, and one they will recognize, to dismiss them from the service. They are not compelled by law to keep them. They can turn them out whenever they find that they have not work for them, unless, as it happens in the case of the Surgeon-General, another bureau of that Department is demanding additional force, and then they may transfer them to that bureau.

I have had some little experience; not much. I have seen the officers of the Government coming to this committee and demanding increased force and demonstrating to the committee that they had the work to do, that the necessity existed, and they have had doled out to them a few extra officers as if it was a favor they were extending to the executive branch of the Government.

If the Senator can come here and show that in any bureau there are more clerks than can be employed, it is a proper charge against the officer who has such men on his rolls if he does not dismiss them. But when a Department officer comes before the committee with his reports, with his estimates, as the Surgeon-General did here, saying, "I think I can dispense with twenty clerks of a certain class;" then when the committee say in addition to that he shall dispense with ten more, they have not a single fact to base it on.

Ninety-nine per cent. of all attempted reductions since I have been acquainted with the executive branch of the Government have been made just as these were made, in utter and entire ignorance of the necessities of the service, but from an inordinate desire to appear to be economizing, to appear to be saving money to the people.

The people of the United States demand that their service shall be performed. They are not asking that it shall be performed by an undue number of persons. They are demanding first celerity in the public service, and that they can not have unless the executive officers can be trusted to make their estimates and unless the legislative department of the Government will carry out their requests.

We have heard a good deal about economy in the last few years. There has been a cry made all over the country for a reduction of public expenses. There are many places where there can be a reduction in the expenditure of public money. There has been no demand from the people that the Surgeon-General's Office shall be deprived of a single employé. There has been no demand that the Pension Office shall not have every man that the head of that office says he needs to execute the law. The same may be said of every other Department of the Government; and I do not think it can be brought as a charge against the Senate when they are willing to take the report of the executive officers sent here under oath, presumed to be as honest and a great deal more intelligent upon that subject than the Senator from Maine can be, no matter how zealous or how industrious he may be, because he has not the opportunity, with the other duties that are thrust upon him, to determine whether the Surgeon-General can or can not dispense with these clerks.

That is a matter of opinion of his, and it is of no earthly value when he has not had the opportunity to know whether the Surgeon-General is correct or whether he is not. A man's opinion depends first upon his knowledge, and second upon his ability to apply the knowledge that he has got. Without the information nobody is prepared to say here that the officers who have put these estimates in the Book of Estimates have not put them in correctly. My experience and my observation are that an executive officer puts himself to the utmost limit; he asks as little as possible.

That is the case here, and you can see that it would be the case. Here is a new administration coming into power, with every incentive to cut down the force even at the expense of the public service; and when they come in and say they want more men it ought to be conclusive upon the legislative body that they need those men or they would not ask for them, when as I say every inducement on their part is offered to say they can transact the business to-day with less money than their predecessors did. So when they say here frankly and honestly that they can not do it, I think the Senate is derelict in its duty if it does not stand up and give them every man that they say they are entitled to have. I am prepared to do it, and I am prepared to defend that everywhere in the United States if defense is necessary; but I can assure the Senate that I do not believe there is any considerable portion of the country where anybody needs to defend appropriations made fully up to the estimate that is made by the executive officers of the Government.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I wish to say only a few words in reference to this provision.

So far as the higher class of clerks is concerned I do not know anything about whether they ought to be retained or not; but from my investigation of the question of the necessity of clerical force pertaining to the history of soldiers in the Surgeon-General's Office and in the Adjutant-General's Office I am very certain, from the information I have been able to obtain as the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures of Public Money, that there should not be a single clerk dispensed with in either of those bureaus. The investigation I have made has led me to the conclusion that the Adjutant-General's Office proper ought to be very largely increased in the clerical force engaged in ferreting out and working out the history of the soldiers who are calling for bounties and pensions.

I have received a letter which I am sorry to say I have not in my possession to-night from the Adjutant-General upon this subject, and it is very evident to my mind, from my investigation in the office as well as from conversations with the Adjutant-General and from his letter, that the Congress of the United States will be compelled to give to that office a very largely increased force within a year or two in order to preserve the records.

The fact is that the records in the Adjutant-General's Office to-day are in such a condition that it is almost impossible to ascertain the true history of a volunteer soldier through the different bureaus where it has to be followed so as to get at correct information. I am informed by persons who know all about the facts that there have been examinations made in that office four and five times before they have been able to get a correct history of the soldier so as to give him what he is entitled to either in the way of bounty or to enable him to procure his pension through the Pension Office. I hope the last thing that will be done by the Congress of the United States in the way of economy will be to cut down the force which is charged with that particular branch of the public service.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] a while ago indicated that the Surgeon-General's Office is so well up with its work that there is no particular stress upon it. I think myself that the Surgeon-General's Office is better equipped for furnishing the information than other bureaus in the War Department that have charge of the history of the soldiers; but we all know that in that Department we wait for weeks and months to get replies so that we may be able to follow up the application of a claimant for a pension in the Pension Bureau.

So far as I am concerned, without taking the time to discuss the amendment any further, whatever may be done with the higher class of clerks in the Surgeon-General's Office and in the Adjutant-General's Office proper, I hope that Congress will not reduce the force a single man in that portion of the service which has reference to the work upon the history of soldiers, so that the slow progress which is now being made will not be made slower by the reduction of the force in that Department.

I think, as I said a while ago, we shall be forced to the necessity of giving to the Secretary of War a sufficient force within another year to enable that Department to copy nearly all the records containing the history of soldiers in the Department, or else almost the whole record will be destroyed, so that we shall never be able to find out the true history of anybody who was in the late war.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I was a good deal impressed with the statement made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] as to the growth of the country and the increase in the growth of business. While he was speaking I turned to the report of the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury in regard to the Post-Office Department. I suppose nothing illustrates the steady growth of the country and its constantly increasing wants more than the development shown in that Department.

In 1865—I see in the table before me, on page 37 of the report, that the revenue from the Post-Office Department in 1865 was $14,000,000, and its expenditures were about $13,000,000. In 1875 its revenue was $26,000,000 and its expenditures $33,000,000. In 1883 its expenditures were $43,000,000 and its receipts were $45,000,000. The reduction of postage to 2 cents of course brought down the figures somewhat. Last year its revenue was forty-two and a half million dollars and its expenditures $50,000,000. The entire table is as follows:

Comparative statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Post-Office Department from July 1, 1836, to June 30, 1885.

That table, I think, illustrates as much as anything else how rapidly we are developing, because that is a better test perhaps of the general development and growth than anything else, and so I have inserted it as a part of this debate.

Mr. BUTLER. It is very obvious we can not get through with the bill to-night, and I will move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 10 o'clock, so as to cut off a little of the debate.

Mr. ALLISON. We shall get through in a little time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We shall get out of committee in a little while now.

Mr. BUTLER. A little while! We have been getting out in a little while ever since we came here, and have been getting in deeper, it seems to me.

Mr. BROWN, There has been more and more discussion.

Mr. BUTLER. There has been more and more discussion all the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina make a motion?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir. ["No!" "No!"]

Mr. BECK. Give us fifteen minutes longer.

Mr. BUTLER. If we can get along with the bill I have no objection to going on; but it seems to me that we had an agreement to come here to-night to transact business, and there has been more talking done than has been done in three weeks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina withdraw his motion?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir; for the present. I shall renew it very quickly if we do not make progress with the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1641, in the appropriations for the office of the Surgeon-General, the Committee on Appropriations report to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twenty-two;" so as to read:

Twenty-two clerks of class 4.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, in line 1642, to strike out "thirty-two" and insert "thirty;" so as to read:

Thirty clerks of class 3.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, in line 1643, to strike out "sixty-two" and insert "sixty;" so as to read:

Sixty clerks of class 2.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, in line 1644, to strike out "seventy-two" and insert "sixty-eight;" so as to read:

Sixty-eight clerks of class 1.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed, as follows:

Eighty-nine clerks, at $1,000 each; one anatomist, at $1,600.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is this anatomist necessary for the investigation of pension cases that we have been disagreeing from the committee on in the items preceding?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is not an amendment, it is in the text of the bill. There is no amendment pertaining to the anatomist.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But, as we have disagreed with the committee in respect of reducing clerks before, I suppose this anatomist must be one of the people whom the Surgeon-General thought it necessary to have to get on with the pension cases.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that if he will go down to the Army Medical Museum, which is the most magnificent work of the kind in the world, and the first time that medical science has been systematically devoted to preserving the valuable records of a great war, he will there see whether he thinks in that wonderful collection one anatomist is of no use.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think he is of use, but we have been disagreeing with the committee on the ground that these officers were all necessary for the pension cases, and so I inquired with great humility to know whether this was one of the pension expenses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1652, to reduce the total amount of the appropriations for the Office of the Surgeon-General from $512,080 to $497,680.

Mr. BECK. That must be disagreed to now. It is the total of the appropriations there.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, after the word "than," at the end of line 1654, to strike out "three hundred" and insert "two hundred and eighty;" so as to read:

And not less than two hundred and eighty of the clerks in the Surgeon-General's Office shall be exclusively engaged in preparing and making reports to expedite the settlement of pension applications called for by the Commissioner of Pensions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it. The noes have it.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not stand upon this, but I think the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. HALE. Take the vote over again.

Mr. ALLISON. The Surgeon-General says that two hundred and eighty in that particular department are enough.

Mr. CULLOM. May I ask whether this surplus that he has, if he has any, has not been loaned to the Adjutant-General for other work pertaining to pensions, and whether if these were dropped the Adjutant-General would get an increased force?

Mr. ALLISON. The twenty clerks are already dropped out. In line 1645 there is an appropriation for eighty-nine clerks at $1,000 each. At present there is a force of one hundred and nine clerks, so that the Surgeon-General says that the words "three hundred" should be stricken out and "two hundred and eighty" inserted, as twenty clerks who are dropped out are now on that roll.

Mr. CULLOM. In the Adjutant-General's Office?

Mr. ALLISON. They have been detailed in the Adjutant-General's Office.

Mr. EDMUNDS. These are exclusively employed on a particular branch of business.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to know whether by this amendment the pension force is not going to be diminished in the aggregate in the different bureaus?

Mr. ALLISON. It would diminish it twenty, as I understand.

Mr. CULLOM. That is the point, and I think it ought not to be diminished.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But it does not apply in this case; it is merely what they shall do.

Mr. CULLOM. But I want all the force they have there, and more too.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that there is no question before the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. What has become of the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was disagreed to.

Mr. GRAY. I ask for a division on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not ask for a division. Does the Senator from Delaware wish a division?

Mr. HARRIS. Let the question be put again without a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state again the question.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1655 the committee report to strike out "three hundred" and insert "two hundred and eighty;" so as to read:

And not less than two hundred and eighty of the clerks in the Surgeon-General's Office shall be exclusively engaged in preparing and making reports, &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That does not throw out any clerks.

Mr. CULLOM. That is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to add to the clause making appropriations for the office of the Surgeon-General the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter no printing shall be done in the Surgeon-General's Office, and all printing for said office shall be done by the Public Printer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As a mere matter of providing for public expenditure, after the word "Printer" I move to strike out the period and insert a comma, and insert the words:

And charged to the appropriations made by law applicable to such service.

So as to have some fund out of which that is to be paid.

Mr. ALLISON. That will be the case, I will state to the Senator, without an amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope it will; but it is not very clear.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no doubt about it. The Senator will allow me to suggest that after the word "hereafter" the words "no printing shall be done in the Surgeon-General's Office" be stricken out. I think the object will be accomplished without those words. The language would then be, "that hereafter all printing for said office shall be done by the Public Printer." It seems to me that it is doubly stated now.

Mr. CULLOM. If you do not say where it shall be paid from it may not be provided for.

Mr. ALLISON. It is paid for out of the appropriation for public printing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That depends. If, as my friend says, what I propose does not change it, I wish for safety to add the words I have proposed, and I will read them again:

And charged to the appropriations made by law applicable to such service.

I dare say it may mean without it what the Senator says, but it will be certainly clear in case these words are added.

Mr. ALLISON. The appropriations for public printing are made for the several Departments, and in the appropriations for the War Department an item would be assigned to this bureau.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think so myself, but I wish to make it so clear that there can not be any difficulty about it.

Mr. MANDERSON. I certainly have no objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, although it seems to me that could be well reached in the sundry civil bill.

But I should like the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to state the necessity for this proviso. As I understand it there are printing presses and printers employed in the Surgeon-General's Office and a certain class of printing is done there. If it is advisable to adopt this proviso as to that office it seems to me that it is equally desirable that it should apply to the Adjutant-General's Office. A certain class of printing could be done at the Public Printing Office for both the office of the Surgeon-General and the Adjutant-General. There may be reasons for this that I know nothing about, and I would ask some explanation from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. The only reason that the committee had for making this amendment is that it has been the policy, so far as we can, to do all the public printing for the Departments at the Government Printing Office, and to endeavor as far as possible to gather in the Public Printing Office all the public printing.

As far as I know the printing being done at the Surgeon-General's Office is not printing that is authorized by law. I do not see exactly how they do this printing unless they do it out of their contingent fund. There is no authorized printing office in any Department of the Government, so far as I know, at this time. There is a branch printing office in the Treasury Department, but that is under the Public Printer.

Mr. MANDERSON. I presume the chairman is aware of the fact that there is printing done in the office of the Adjutant-General.

Mr. ALLISON. So I have been informed.

Mr. HAWLEY. And in several other places.

Mr. MANDERSON. There may be other bureaus that do so. I do not know that I object to the proviso, but it seems to me that it should go further and apply to all the bureaus.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to call attention to this provision in the Revised Statutes:

SEC. 3786. All printing, binding, and blank books for the Senate or House of Representatives and the executive and judicial departments shall be done at the Government Printing Office, except in cases otherwise provided by law.

That is the statute. They have no business to print anything.

Mr. MANDERSON. But they do print, and they print in other bureaus. My idea is that we should reach the evil wherever it exists.

Mr. TELLER. That is a fact, and in some of the Departments they have printed in violation of this statute, and they have usually paid it out of the contingent fund. That ought not to be allowed. Neither the Surgeon-General nor the Adjutant-General has a right to apply a dollar of their money for that purpose.

Mr. MANDERSON. I agree to that.

Mr. TELLER. Their accounts ought not to be settled if they do that, unless they can show a specific statute authorizing them to print. The practice has been discontinued in some of the Departments within the last three years, I know.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know whether there may or may not have been any statute passed since the statutes were revised that relieves these officers, but of course the letter of the statute does forbid any such printing. However, as a matter of fact, there are little printing-presses of small cost and consequence in four or five or six Departments of the Government.

I am willing to disagree to the amendment for this reason: The Surgeon-General's Office has a large variety of very small printing to be done for all its communications from all the medical posts in the Army, for the work in the Pension Department where slips are constantly prepared. In short, here is a specimen. [Exhibiting.] This book is a regular book, in which is filed a copy of each document that has been printed for them on their own little presses. They are of very small consequence apparently, little blanks necessary for various reports of different kinds, little blanks necessary to be used by the two hundred and eighty or three hundred clerks who are in the pension department of the Surgeon-General's Office.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why can they not be printed at the Public Printing Office?

Mr. HAWLEY. I was going on to state. Twenty years ago, I suppose before the statute probably, two presses were bought in the Surgeon-General's Office, together costing about $600. They are now worth as old iron about $25, perhaps, because the modern presses have superseded presses of that kind.

Mr. TELLER. The statute I have read was passed in 1860.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then it was before they began this practice. If they send one of these little orders up there of two hundred, two hundred and fifty, or five hundred little forms and blanks of various kinds, it takes its place at the tail of perhaps two hundred or five hundred orders for aught I know from all the executive branches of the Government, and it may come around in two or three weeks if they have good luck, it may be there in four weeks, it may be there in six weeks.

Now they go into a back room in the old Surgeon-General's Office, which used to be a kitchen, and with a cheap hand-press they strike off in an hour or two hours these blanks. That is the extent of the printing they can do. Senators can see if any desire to do so these little blanks and cards and slips.

I think it is a matter of economy and dispatch of business, as they have some clerks who are likewise printers, and when they are not required at this work they go on with their regular clerical work, and the type that they have there some of it is type they had in the beginning, and with the light use they give it it does not wear out very fast. I do not believe that the whole plant they have got there is worth $1,500.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think this amendment should be sanctioned. I think a very vicious practice has sprung up in the Surgeon-General's Office. I think that little printing is exceedingly expensive. They have, as the record shows, in charge of the printing in the Surgeon-General's Office, Mr. Joseph R. Rose, a clerk of class 4, at $1,800, his brother at $1,400, another clerk at $1,600, another clerk at $1,400, one at $1,200, and another one at $1,200. The brother, Henry L. Rose, is a partner in the firm of Joseph Bart & Co., and they have had printing out of the appropriation for supplying limbs and trusses to the soldiers done at this private printing office where the brother is a partner and paid for out of that fund. I submit that when that thing has grown up in this Department it is time to stop it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is true; you are right about it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I knew the facts before, but this occurred in the presence of the Senator from Connecticut and the Surgeon-General and his assistant out of the mouth of the chief of the division. I knew the facts before, and it was in consequence of my knowledge of these facts that this amendment was put in the bill. I do not say there has been any swindling or anything of that kind—I am not making those charges; but when that kind of a practice has grown up the thing ought to be stopped and you can only stop it in this way.

Mr. HAWLEY. I knew the Senator would bring forward that case. It is right he should. It is an abuse that did grow up in one bureau of the Surgeon-General's Department, and which the Surgeon-General and his assistant declare should be corrected. It grew up in this way: The officer in charge of the trusses and artificial arms and legs has a little appropriation for printing circulars, &c., for his particular bureau. He got much of that printing done, nevertheless, in the little printing-room of the Surgeon-General's Office, but some of it they could not do there; their presses and their forms are not adapted to the work.

Then, wholly without authority of law, he went and contracted with some persons in the city for doing it, and a partner is in one of those firms. The work is done in several firms, but the partner in one of them is a clerk in the office. It was done through no collusion or corruption so far as any officer of the department is concerned, but it was a violation of the law. The Surgeon-General was very sorry to hear of it, and for the first time in the interview stated by the Senator from Missouri appeared to understand what had been done there, and said it should be corrected.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator from Connecticut think from the showing that the safe thing for the Senate to do would be to enforce the law, and let the printing for the Surgeon-General's Office be done as it is done in other bureaus and other Departments generally, at the Government Printing Office? We have built up at an enormous expense and equipped it with a great force and have appropriated money without stint for the Government Printing Office. There is hardly any bureau but that if you will let it have its way will not run a little printing-press of its own.

That it is not needed is proved by the fact that the Pension Office, which deals more in these small circulars and in forms such as those shown by the Senator from Connecticut than any other Department or bureau of the Government, has no printing office, but looks out beforehand for its wants, and when it thinks it will need a set of blanks looks out long enough beforehand to get them and sends a requisition to the Public Printer and he furnishes them. We shall have the whole subject in our grasp then.

So long as we enforce that statute and have the printing done at the Public Printing Office no such abuse as we disclose here in the Surgeon-General's Office will grow up. If that law is not to be enforced let us repeal it, and let the old way go on of printing around broadcast here and at large. There are a few left, I think, as the Senator from Connecticut says, but wherever we find them I think we ought to uproot them.

Mr. HAWLEY. If this is to be enforced in all the Departments, and I am not about to say that it is not wise to do it, I would make no further objection, but I think this particular matter is a matter of economy and great convenience in that department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to the amendment of the committee. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the amendment:

And charged to the appropriations made by law applicable to such service.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk suggests that the Chair shall ask if the Senator from Iowa would like to have the words stricken out that he suggested.

Mr. ALLISON. I will let it go.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it go the way it is.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer no amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out the clause from line 1696 to 1707, inclusive, as follows:

Office of Publication of Records of the Rebellion: For one agent, $2,000; three clerks of class 4, one of whom shall be employed on the general index; two clerks of class 3; one clerk of class 2; three clerks of class 1; three copyists, at $900 each; one foreman of printing, at $1,600; one compositor and pressman, $1,200; one compositor, $1,000; two copy-holders, at $900 each; two assistant messengers; two watchmen; and one laborer, at $600; in all, $27,380.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that this amendment be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over if there be no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1708, after the word "for," to strike out "the superintendent of;" in line 1709, after the word "streets," to strike out "$250;" in line 1710, after the word "dollars," to insert "one fireman;" in line 1712, after the word "watchmen," to strike out "two laborers" and insert "three laborers, one of whom, when necessary, shall assist and relieve the conductor of the elevator;" in line 1714, before the words "one laborer," to strike out "and;" in line 1715, after the word "dollars," to insert "and four charwomen, at $240 each;" and in line 1716, after the word "all," to strike out "six thousand six hundred and fifty," and insert "eight thousand seven hundred and forty;" so as to make the clause read:

For the building at the corner of F and Seventeenth streets, one engineer, $1,000; one fireman; conductor of elevator, $720; four watchmen, three laborers, one of whom, when necessary, shall assist and relieve the conductor of the elevator; one laborer, at $480; and four charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $3,740.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is all that force for that one building at Seventeenth and F streets?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1732, after the words "necessary expenses," to strike out "fifty-eight" and insert "sixty;" so as to make the clause read:

For contingent expenses of the office of the Secretary of War and the bureaus, buildings (except the War Department building), and offices of the War Department; purchase of professional and scientific books, card catalogues, blank-books, pamphlets, newspapers, maps, furniture, carpets, matting, oil-cloth, file-cases, towels, ice, brooms, soap, sponges, fuel, gas, and heating apparatus; telegraphing; freight and express charges; repairs to buildings and furniture; and for other absolutely necessary expenses, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "public buildings and grounds," in line 1775, before the words "for Armory Square," to strike out "two" and insert "one;" after the words "Executive Mansion," at the end of line 1778, to strike out "eleven" and insert "ten;" and in line 1780, after the word "each," to strike out "seven thousand two hundred and sixty" and insert "six thousand six hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For one watchman for Iowa Circle; one watchman for Thomas Circle and neighboring reservations; one for Rawlins Square and Washington Circle; one for Dupont Circle and neighboring reservations; one for McPherson and Farragut Squares; one for Stanton Place and neighboring reservations; one for Armory Square and reservations east to Botanic Garden; one for Mount Vernon Square and adjacent reservations; one for greenhouse at the nursery; one for grounds south of Executive Mansion, ten in all, at $660 each, $6,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. It is now after 11 o'clock, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were—12.

Mr. COKE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALLISON. I appeal to Senators to let us get through with the appropriations for the Navy Department, and then I will myself move to adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us go to sea and get on shore again.

Mr. BROWN. We have been going on to-day for many hours; and I think we have sat long enough.

Mr. COKE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas moves that the Senate adjourn.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 15, noes 4.

So the motion was agreed to; and (at 11 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, July 1, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER. A resolution introduced on the 21st instant by the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY], directing the Attorney-General to institute certain legal proceedings against officers of the Union Pacific Railroad Company was improperly referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads; it should have gone to the Committee on the Judiciary. If there be no objection the change of reference will be made.

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 2148) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a building for the use of the United States circuit and district courts of the United States, the post-office, and other Government offices at Williamsport, Pa.," and making an additional appropriation therefor;

A bill (H. R. 5201) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 177) appointing managers for the National Home for Disabled Soldiers to fill vacancies in the board which occurred by expiration of terms on the 21st day of April, 1886.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 985) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to transfer the United States barracks at Baton Rouge, La., to the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College at said place for educational purposes, and granting to the city of Marquette, Mich., certain lands for park purposes.

JUDSON FEMALE COLLEGE.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8970) for the relief of the trustees of the Judson Female College, and that the bill be now taken up and passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to the trustees of Judson Female College, of Hendersonville, N. C., the sum of $1,132.29, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I should like to hear some explanation.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. The bill proposes to pay the trustees of this institution for the use and occupation of the college building by troops who were quartered there.

Mr. HOLMAN. Since the war?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Yes, sir; in May, June, and July, 1865.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has the bill been favorably acted upon by a committee?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Yes, sir; it has been unanimously reported by the Committee on War Claims.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, which was thereupon ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROMOTION IN MEDICAL DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY.

Mr. STEELE. I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill H. R. 7818. It proposes merely to fix the status of officers in the Medical Department of the Army. There is no objection to it anywhere.

The SPEAKER. Is this a private bill?

Mr. STEELE. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of a bill the title of which will be read and that the House proceed to consider the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7819) to establish the order of promotion in the Medical Department of the Army.

Mr. BEACH. Is this a public or a private bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana states that it is a private bill. The Chair has not examined it. If it relates to a class of persons it is a public bill; if it applies to certain individuals by name it is private.

Mr. BEACH. I shall call for the regular order.

Mr. STEELE. I hope the gentleman will allow me to make a statement. The bill merely fixes the status of certain officers without increasing their pay. Nominations are now hung up in the Senate because of the need of legislation of this kind, which does not increase the pay of any officer—does not involve the cost of one cent. I hope the gentleman will not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has demanded the regular order, which is the call of committees for reports.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 7481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Also that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 5887) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 150) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes, vetoed by the President (two-thirds of the Senate agreeing to the same); in which action concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. Under the Constitution is not the veto message of the President, which has been acted upon by the Senate and just received by the House, to be read for consideration?

The SPEAKER. Not at this time. Under the rules of the House, which the Constitution authorizes the House to adopt, the Chair does not lay before the House any message of this character until the morning of the next day after it is received. This message will therefore be laid before the House to-morrow morning, and will be then a subject for consideration, unless the House shall by a vote otherwise dispose of it by reference to a committee or by postponement.

Mr. PAYSON. Would a motion with reference to it be out of order now?

The SPEAKER. It would, except by unanimous consent?

There was no objection.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire on behalf of the Committee on Indian Affairs to report back the bill H. R. 7087, and am instructed by the committee to ask the House to non-concur in the Senate amendments and ask for a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. That would not be in order at this time.

Mr. PERKINS, I would like to ask, as a parliamentary inquiry, when this motion will be in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that such reports are not privileged under any rule of the House; but the Chair has been in the habit, as a matter of courtesy to the other branch of the legislative department, of receiving these reports when a committee recommends non-concurrence and agreement to the request for a conference. The gentleman can make the request some other time during the day.

PAN-ELECTRIC TELEPHONE INVESTIGATION.

Mr. BOYLE. Mr. Speaker, I present a report from the select committee on Pan-electric telephone stock. I desire to state that the views expressed in this report are those of four members of the committee, Mr. OATES, Mr. HALL, Mr. EDEN, and myself. I also report a resolution, which is concurred in by a majority of the committee.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I suppose that on the question of the propriety of that resolution a point of order can be reserved.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYLE] states that the resolution is concurred in by the majority of the committee, but that the report accompanying it is signed by only four members. All points of order can be reserved.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I desire to reserve all points of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Can we have the resolution read?

The SPEAKER. The resolution goes to the Calendar; but, if desired, it can be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a full, fair, and exhaustive investigation has failed to adduce any evidence which tends to show that Attorney-General Garland, Solicitor-General Goode, Secretary Lamar, Indian Commissioner Atkins, Railroad Commissioner Johnston, or Senator Harris—they being the officers named in the "Pan-electric" publications in the newspapers which gave rise to this investigation—did any act, officially or otherwise, connected with the matters investigated which was dishonest, dishonorable, or censurable.

The SPEAKER. The resolution goes to the House Calendar.

Mr. HALE. I desire to present a separate report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks leave, as the Chair understands, to present his individual views, to be printed with the report submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

Mr. RANNEY. That resolution which has been read has never been submitted or acted upon in committee. I wish to reserve that point of order.

The SPEAKER. All points of order are reserved.

Mr. RANNEY. I submit the views of four members of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY] asks leave to present the views of certain members of the committee, to be printed with the report. If there be no objection that order will be made.

Mr. BOYLE. In view of what has been stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts in regard to the submission of this resolution to the committee, I desire to say that if any question is to be made about that I will withdraw the report with the accompanying resolution. It has been presented at the request and with the consent of the gentleman from Massachusetts, expressly waiving a meeting of the committee for the purpose of considering any resolution. But if the gentleman makes that point, I will withdraw the report and call a meeting of the committee.

Mr. RANNEY. So far as the report is concerned, the gentleman's statement is correct; but the resolution I have never seen or heard of before.

Mr. BOYLE. I will withdraw it then.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, then all the papers will be withdrawn.

Mr. HALE. I object.

Mr. BOYLE. The gentleman did consent that the resolution might be reported without having been submitted to the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects to the withdrawal.

Mr. HAMMOND. Does it require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it does. The report has been made and referred to the Calendar.

Mr. HAMMOND. But if the fact is disclosed that it is not the report of the committee, made by its authority, it comes in by virtue of an error.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has made the report, and the Chair has referred it to the House Calendar. The gentleman has stated as a fact that the resolution embodies the views of a majority of the committee. Does the gentleman from Missouri object to the withdrawal of the report?

Mr. HALE. I object to the withdrawal of the report and resolution.

Mr. BOYLE. The gentleman from Missouri has signed the resolution.

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish to inquire whether the resolution of the committee was read.

The SPEAKER. It was.

Mr. DUNHAM. Then if the minority reports are accompanied by resolutions, ought not those resolutions to be read?

The SPEAKER. If anybody desires it, it can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask for the reading.

The SPEAKER. There is no such thing as a "minority report." What is so spoken of is merely a paper expressing the views of individual members of the committee.

Mr. RANNEY. There is no resolution attached to the minority report. I do not think that under the order of the House any resolution was allowable.

The SPEAKER continued and concluded the call of committees.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Chair will recognize, for the presentation of reports, gentlemen who were not in their seats when their committees were called.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Has the Senate requested a conference?

Mr. PERKINS. It has not.

Mr. MORRISON. I demand the regular order of business.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. REAGAN in the chair.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to go back to the paragraph touching the advertisement of sales of public property, commencing in line 851.

The Clerk read as follows:

No purchases shall be made on contracts executed in pursuance of appropriations made for the Navy Department or hereafter authorized by Congress, nor shall any property belonging to the Government be sold, until after publication of an advertisement calling attention in the briefest practicable form to the facts in each case and stating where detailed information may be had; such advertisement to be inserted in a daily newspaper published in the city of Washington, D. C., to be designated annually by the President.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Will the gentleman permit me to make a point of order on that paragraph?

Mr. RANDALL. Wait until I get through; I am not going to take any advantage.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask to have read a letter from the Secretary of the Navy touching this matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, D. C., June 29, 1886.

DEAR SIR: The suggestion which I made to you some time ago, the substance of which is included in lines 851 to 860 of the sundry civil appropriation bill, was that there should be some one place where short notices should be required by law to be put, calling attention to any contracts for which bids were being asked or to any sales about to be made by the Navy Department. Following the present law relating to this matter there is no way in which a dealer can make certain that he will see an advertisement of the Department; and soon after my accession to this office there were some cases in which, after bids had been opened, large dealers in the articles bid for complained of not having seen the advertisement or known of the letting, and offered considerably lower bids for the articles. I directed that circulars should be sent to leading houses in addition to advertising in each case. But this is a purely voluntary arrangement, and under the present system it is quite possible that if a bureau officer or Secretary should desire to favor any bidder by selecting obscure newspapers for the advertisement he could readily act in collusion with one or more bidders.

I called your attention to the system established in 1873 in New York city, under which not the full advertisement, but short notices calling attention to any contract about to be let, are required to be inserted in certain daily newspapers annually designated by the mayor and comptroller. The expense of the advertising of short notices in that way is very small, but the results from it are that any dealer, for instance in coal, who should desire to be a competitor for the Department contracts would know where he could look and be certain of knowing every coal contract that was advertised for by the Navy Department. On being notified by the advertisement he applies to the Department for the specifications and makes his bid.

Prior to the adoption of this system by New York city (it was one of the things introduced by the reform charter of 1873 after the break-up of the ring) the frauds that were practiced from collusive advertising and the expense in which the city was involved by the publication of the full advertisements were among the things which gave rise to the greatest scandals.

As to the language of this proviso, if it is not limited to the Navy Department, it can readily be so. I do not remember whether I wrote the language at the time we were talking about it or not. I had no idea of extending it beyond the Navy Department, because I have no information with regard to the applicability of it in other places.

Very respectfully,

W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
House of Representatives.

The total expense of these notices would not in my judgment be a thousand dollars a year for the Navy Department.

W. C. W.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the only change, which was a restrictive amendment to the original proposition. The gentleman from Maine now characterizes this as a job. I am not clear—because I want to hear further from the gentleman from Maine in that connection—exactly in what manner it may have that effect; but I do not want for myself or any member of the committee for a single instant to take advantage of what has been passed, if there be a scintilla of truth in the gentleman's statement. No member of the committee for a moment would want or wish, nor would they permit, to go into this bill anything which was susceptible of a doubtful or double construction, and least of all anything which would take from the Treasury money by indirect language. I therefore readily assent to the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine that we shall go back and fully consider the paragraph in question, and am willing that he shall exercise every parliamentary procedure touching this provision that his judgment may command.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I think I made it very clear the other day that the charge I made that there was a job in the bill did not implicate or intend to implicate any individual. My assertion meant that from the very nature of the language used in this provision there would be an expenditure of public money for an obviously inadequate purpose; that the language did cover an abuse which ought not to be sanctioned by law.

Of course what I say depends upon the language of the proposed amendment to the statute. If the language imports that, then it is the duty of this House not to pass the paragraph in that form. Now, what is the proposition before us?

This is a provision requiring that in some Washington newspaper, to be designated by the President of the United States, there shall be published all of the advertisements of the Government—not only relating to this bill but whatever bill may pass, the law remaining unchanged—in reference to any Government property that is to be sold, no matter where or in what quantities.

It requires that there shall be an advertisement in this paper to be so designated by the President, and without exception. Now, I ask any sensible man who listens to me what the inevitable effect of that provision will be? I say that it will be to cause a large number of advertisements to be put into some Washington paper, to be designated by the President, and it will result in the payment to that paper of large sums of money. Whether large sums will come the first year or the second year I do not pretend to know or assert; but I do say that the invariable experience of mankind upon this subject, and of this nation in particular, has been that abuses can creep in and do creep in from a much smaller opening of the door than that.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania with his long experience in public affairs knows how that will be on his attention being called to the terms of the provision. In the hurry and rush of public business here not only the House passes things which perhaps are not carefully scrutinized, but every individual, having before him merely the purpose which is presented by the measure under consideration, is likely to be misled by the language in the preparation of such legislation as this. Now, the debate itself on Saturday shows that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations did not fully appreciate the purport of the language used in this connection.

But I have called his attention to it, and my duty is done.

Mr. RANDALL. What does the gentleman desire?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think it should be stricken from the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman make the point of order against it?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Yes; I make the point of order against it.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the Chair decide.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the proposition is to change the mode of advertising.

Mr. RANDALL. I suppose a change in existing law is made in that respect.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Army and Navy hospital:

Army and Navy hospital, Hot Springs, Ark.: For labor and material for grading, constructing retaining-wall, inclosing with iron fence, and improving grounds of hospital, $27,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I have an amendment to offer in this connection, which is rendered necessary because the service therein required is not provided for in the Army appropriation bill. I desire to say that while I offer it with the concurrence of the subcommittee who had this matter in charge, it never was before the general committee; but I have no reason to believe that any member of the committee would dissent.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 1317 insert as a new paragraph:

"Service Army and Navy hospital: For one clerk, at $1,200; one chief steward, at $720; one assistant steward, at $480; two cooks, at $480 each; ten nurses, at $360 each; two ward-masters, at $420 each; one matron, at $480; five laundresses, at $180 each; one engineer, at $720; one superintendent of buildings, at $580; two laborers and watchmen, at $480 each; six bath-house attendants, at $300 each; six dining-room waiters, at $240 each; in all, $14,620. Said sum to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of War as a part of the appropriation for the Medical Department of the Army; and the estimates for this service shall hereafter be submitted as a part of the military establishment."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Military posts:

For the construction of buildings at and the enlargement of such military posts as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary, $178,856; $15,000 of which sum may be used for the purchase of additional land near Atlanta, Ga., for the ten-company post being erected there.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1325, after the word "there," insert the following:

"For the construction of two sets of barracks, administration building for offices, library, reading and school rooms, bakery, and guard-house, all of brick; and four double sets of officers' quarters, two double sets of non-commissioned staff officers' quarters, quartermaster and commissary store-houses, and stable and wagon shed, of frame, at Fort Porter, Buffalo, N. Y., $90,975."

Mr. BRAGG. I make the point of order on that amendment. The point of order I make is that the amendment changes existing law; that it is new law. It imposes a duty upon the Secretary of War by directing him to build a specific kind of quarters at a certain specific place, and makes an appropriation therefor. There is an appropriation in the bill of so much money for military posts, and that is the condition in which that class of appropriations stands in the appropriation bill. But when you make a further appropriation and direct its expenditure, that is imposing a duty upon the Secretary of War which it is necessary for him to perform and which is not now required of him by existing law. The amendment is therefore subject to the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. And it is not germane.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I will state to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that this appropriation did not come into the regular estimates which are met by the appropriation in the preceding paragraph for this reason, that originally General Sheridan had a six-company post planned at Fort Porter; and when a consultation was had with the Quartermaster-General and others it was found the expense was too great, and that possibly there was no particular need of a six-company post there. At the request of myself and other citizens of Buffalo a resurvey and new estimates were made to make this a two-company post. That survey and estimate came in too late to reach the Book of Estimates this year. Therefore this could not be provided for by the committee. That is the reason of the delay in the matter. If there is any mere technicality as to whether the amendment comes within the rule or not, I hope the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs will waive the matter. This has been reported for four years. General Sheridan two years ago made an elaborate report on this matter. The amendment meets a public necessity. The condition of Fort Porter at Buffalo to-day is certainly one of the most disgraceful in the United States of America in respect to the barracks and public buildings.

Mr. BRAGG. I must insist on the point of order.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I think the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will allow me a few moments more to complete my statement.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to have the point of order decided before the merits are entered upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Do I understand the Chair rules out the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. This is one of those things which if they could be done under any existing law would require no legislation. As this requires a change of existing law, the Chair must sustain the point of order.

Mr. WHEELER addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. RANDALL. I must insist upon the point of order. We have no estimate in relation to this matter. Then, too, there is no law authorizing us to go upon the territory of even a friendly nation for the purpose of establishing these stations, and the matter would involve international procedure which ought to be had in some other way before we put a provision of this kind into an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WHEELER. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. WHEELER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after "dollars," in line 1344, the following: "and $4,000 for signal stations in the West India Islands."

Mr. RANDALL. That is subject to the same point of order.

Mr. WHEELER. The point of order which the gentleman makes does not apply to this amendment. The law already provides for the Signal Corps. It does not say where the signal officers shall put their stations, and this simply makes an appropriation of $4,000 and designates the West Indies as the place where certain stations may be located. The gentleman makes the point also that we have no right to go upon the territory of a foreign country and put up signal stations. Suppose a Spaniard should come here, rent a building, and go upon the roof and put up a flag, would anybody stop him? And if we go to the West Indies and rent a building and put up a signal flag and establish a telegraph office, will anybody stop us? Never.

Does any gentleman suppose that any of the governments which control the West India Islands would interpose any objection to our establishing upon their territory these stations designed to diffuse information for the protection of the commerce of all the world?

COURTESY OF NATIONS.

No nation has ever objected to the presence of military attachés to legations; all countries permit military visitors to their forts and fortifications, and invite the criticisms of military men upon their army drill, maneuvers, and administration, and no civilized Government objects to the presence of military parties prosecuting scientific investigations—to which latter class the officers in charge of the stations would distinctively belong.

But if there were objection to the presence of any officers or men of our military force, the difficulty might still be obviated, for the stations could be placed in charge of civilians.

During the investigation of the Signal Service Bureau by one of the committees to which I have the honor to belong, I became very much impressed with the value and importance of the service, not only to our shipping, but also to our farming interests. And in the further prosecution of my investigations I was convinced of the necessity of having such stations in the West India Islands, as it is to the east of these islands that the cyclones originate which are most destructive to our shipping.

ORIGIN OF CYCLONES.

Within the tropics there is a belt of calms which extends from the West India Islands eastward, nearly to the African coast. The width of this belt varies from 60 to 200 miles, and its confines vary according to the season, in midwinter being only about 100 miles north of the equator, and in midsummer 650 to 700 miles farther north. This brings the belt of calms to that part of the Atlantic Ocean which lies between the group of islands, Trinidad, Martinique, and Gaudaloupe, on the west, and the African coast on the east. This belt of calms is due to the heat of the sun near the equator, which expands the atmosphere near the surface of the earth and causes it to rise. As it rises this heated atmosphere cools, the moisture it contains is condensed, and forms clouds from which formation there results a rain belt somewhat wider than the belt of calms.

The trade winds blowing in at each side of this calm belt supply air and moisture sufficient to cause this process to be constantly repeated. The calm belt is always north of the equator because the general circulation of the atmosphere is stronger in the southern than in the northern hemisphere; there being a smaller land service in the former, and consequently less resistance from friction than in the latter.

The ascension of the atmosphere in the calm belt and the consequent condensation of its moisture into clouds and rain, continued as it is with ceaseless activity, present nearly all the necessary conditions for the formation of a cyclone or hurricane. All that remains is for something to give an initial gyratory movement to any portion of the warm moist ascending column of atmosphere to start a hurricane that may develop into an atmospheric disturbance so violent as to endanger life and property in its path; while on the other hand the causes which combine to produce this gyratory movement may be overcome by, or swallowed up in, the general equilibrium of the atmosphere and no storm result.

These hurricanes have for years been observed and studied and a very large number have been traced to a starting point in this belt of calms, and meteorologists all agree that these storms that sweep in a parabolic course over the West Indies, Southern United States, or along its Atlantic coast, have their origin in this belt of calms. They are, when forming, seldom less than 100 miles in diameter and rapidly increase to three and four hundred miles and rarely exceed 500 miles in diameter while moving westward, and, in fact, until they reach the coast of the United States; but in crossing the United States, or following the Gulf Stream, they often exceed 500 miles, and many times reach a width of 1,000 miles. From a comparison of records of these storms, extending back at least two centuries, it has been found that by far the greater number of them occurred during the summer and autumn, 75 per cent. of them occurring in August, September, and October.

COURSE OF THE CYCLONES.

These hurricanes commence moving westward, or rather northwestward, sometimes over the Carribean Sea and Gulf of Mexico, but sometimes they are developed sufficiently far north to sweep northwesterly along the northern edge of the Bahama Islands and the eastern coast of the United States. Their movement at first is not rapid, seldom exceeding 12 to 17 miles an hour.

Many of the cyclones are generated and developed at some point east of the Island of Trinidad, and as the distance from Trinidad to New Orleans is 2,200 miles it will be readily seen that although the velocity may be somewhat increased the cyclone must be four or five days in reaching New Orleans. If the cyclone should move northwesterly at least three days would elapse before it could reach the eastern coast of the United States.

It is therefore apparent to any one that with these signal stations in the West Indies we should in all cases receive warning of the approach of these cyclones from three to five days before they burst upon us.

The cyclones which move over the Caribbean Sea and the Gulf of Mexico, after striking our Southern coast, are frequently deflected to the north, and finally to the east and northeast, and traverse the States of Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, the Carolinas, &c., leaving devastation, death, and despair in their path ere they finally pass beyond our boundaries.

BENEFITS OF THE STATIONS.

These stations could give the people of these States fully five days' notice of the approach of these destructive visitors.

While these cyclones are passing over the country their gyratory motion throws off smaller cyclones which acquire great velocity and are very destructive to both property and life. If these warnings could be given our people, much could be done to avert or mitigate the danger and loss occasioned by these storms. I was so impressed with the importance of securing this service that I introduced a separate bill designed to accomplish this object. The report which I made on the bill is in these words:

Meteorological reports from stations located in the West Indies are of especial value to the Signal Service, as they frequently contain information upon which warnings are issued to the ports of the United States informing the shipping interests of the approach of dangerous storms. The study of West India hurricanes during the past century has shown that these islands are located in the path of the violent storms which, after leaving the West Indies, pass along the coast of the United States, attended by the most dangerous and destructive gales to which our shipping is exposed. Weather reports from these islands are therefore necessary for the protection of our shipping during the hurricane season, and they are as necessary for the successful management of the Signal Service as an outpost or picket-guard is to the active operations of an army in the field.

In some instances these cyclones have penetrated inland far to the West, circling over a considerable extent of territory, carrying devastation and destruction in their path, and it is hoped that with warning of their approach much can be done to save life and property.

In many cases these storms have passed from the West Indies northward along the Gulf Stream, beyond the limits of the stations in the United States, but sufficiently near the coast to endanger all shipping leaving ports on the Atlantic coast. In such cases reports from the West Indies would furnish the Signal Office with the necessary information, which would be communicated to all ports of the United States, and vessels would thus be detained in port, thereby avoiding the dangerous storms. These storms are also likely to occur south of the Island of Cuba, then passing northward over the Gulf of Mexico, endangering the shipping in the Gulf, after which they turn to the north or northeast and move over the Gulf States, or move along the Atlantic coast. In such cases reports from the Island of Cuba would enable this service to give from one to two days warning before the occurrence of the storm on the Atlantic coast.

As to the value of these storm-warnings to the shipping interests of the country, the following letter from the secretary of the Maritime Exchange, New York city, is cited:

[The Maritime Association of the port of New York, Produce Exchange Building, Beaver street.]

NEW YORK, November 10, 1885.

DEAR SIR: Highly appreciating as we do the invaluable service you are rendering the commerce of the country by advanced reports of approaching storms, we may venture, now that the stormy season is upon us, to suggest that these reports be telegraphed to us at the earliest possible moment.

Thanking you for the promptitude with which they have hitherto been sent us, we merely suggest that any improvement in that direction, if any be possible, will further add to their usefulness.

Instantly upon their receipt, if in time, we conspicuously bulletin the message at the Maritime Exchange, and notify the steamers about leaving port. As an illustration of their usefulness I would say that Captain Garvin, of the steamer Orinoco, which cleared for Bermuda on the 29th ultimo, on receiving from us the advanced reports you kindly sent us on that day, came to anchor in the harbor, together with a number of other outward-bound vessels. He is enthusiastic in praise of the service rendered, and to-day informed me that the report referred to probably saved a large amount, especially in the cost of cattle being shipped abroad, which would probably have suffered heavy loss had the vessels encountered the storm of which you gave warning.

Very respectfully, yours,

F. W. HOUGHTON, Superintendent.

General W. B. HAZEN, U. S. A.,
Chief Signal Officer, Washington, D. C.

From the above letter it will be seen that vessels bound south from New York or any Northern port may be enabled to avoid the destructive storms, through warnings received from the Signal Service, based upon West India reports.

An examination of the chart exhibiting the course pursued by these West India hurricanes will show that while these storms do not occur at regular intervals, they are likely to occur every year. Two such storms swept over the Gulf and Atlantic coasts during the fall of 1882, one in September and one in October. Warnings of the approach of these storms were fortunately received from the West Indies, so that this service was enabled to give at least two days' notice to every port on the Atlantic coast; the result was an immense saving of valuable property. Immediately after the occurrence of these severe storms reports were received showing the names of vessels and their value, and the value of their cargoes, which remained in port in obedience to the storm warnings issued by this office, and these reports show that over $12,000,000 worth of property remained in harbor which but for the warnings would have been exposed to the dangers of the storms.

The small sum asked for, if granted, might not only result in the saving of life, but also supply reports which would enable the Signal Service to save from destruction a fleet of vessels the value of which would support the Signal Service for ten years.

These storms do not occur every year, but they are likely to occur in any hurricane season, and the service and the country should be prepared for them.

Your committee therefore report back H. R. bill No. 7656, and recommend that it do pass with the following amendments:

After the word "War," in line 3, insert the words "by and with the consent of the proper authorities;" and after the word "establish," in line 4, insert the words "and maintain;" and after the word "their," in line 7, insert the words "character and."

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill as amended, which will read as follows:

A bill to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to establish signal stations on the West India Islands.

Whereas investigations have developed the fact that nearly all the destructive cyclones which have occurred during the past hundred years, which have passed along the eastern coast of the United States, have originated in the vicinity of the West India Islands, or at points east and South of said islands; and

Whereas early tidings of the same can always be received from these islands by cablegrams in time to give full warning of the approach of the same before they reach the coast of the United States: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War, by and with the consent of the proper authorities, is hereby authorized and directed to establish not to exceed six signal stations at such points upon the West India Islands as he may think advisable, for the purpose of observing such cyclones and storms of like character, and telegraphing warning of their character and approach; and the sum of $4,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The report shows fully the necessity for these stations. As we can not possibly pass the separate bill this session I hope this amendment will be adopted by the committee, as it will attain the desired object without delay.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not discussing the merits of the proposition; I am discussing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WHEELER. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. RANDALL. The point of order is sustained. There is no last word to strike out.

Mr. WHEELER. Then I must appeal from the decision of the Chair. I regard this as one of the most important matters that has been introduced in this Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not a question of importance; it is a question of order.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think the point of order is well taken.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, the gentleman appeals. Let us have the matter decided.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee? [After a pause.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask for a division. [Before the division was completed.] I do not ask for a further count.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the connections of signal stations with live-saving stations or light-houses, including services of operators, repairmen, materials, and general service, being for the maintenance and repair of the military-telegraph line along the Atlantic coast of the United States, and including $18,350 for a new submarine cable at Block Island Bay, Rhode Island, $26,350: Provided, That such connections, in the opinion of the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service and the Light-House Board, shall be deemed necessary.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to raise the point of order against the provision in lines 1349, 1350, 1351, and 1352, providing for a new cable at Block Island Bay in Rhode Island.

It is new legislation.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation is in accordance with existing law and is for public works and objects now in progress. The cable referred to is a part of the military telegraph line provided for by existing law. The law will be found in the Revised Statutes, sections 221, 222, and 223. This appropriation is simply to provide for the carrying out of the provisions of that law. And certainly, in the light of this existing legislation, it can not be held subject to the point of order.

Section 221 of the Revised Statutes provides that—

The Secretary of War shall provide for taking meteorological observations at the military stations in the interior of the continent, and at other points in the States and Territories, and for giving notice on the northern lakes and seacoast, by magnetic telegraph and marine signals, of the approach and force of storms.

Section 222 provides that—

The Secretary of War shall provide, in the system of observations and reports in charge of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, for such stations, reports, and signals as may be found necessary for the benefit of agriculture and commercial interests.

Section 223, which is more particularly in point with reference to his question of order, provides:

The Secretary of War is authorized to establish signal stations at light-houses and at such of the life-saving stations on the lake or seacoast as may be suitably located for that purpose, and to connect the same with such points as may be necessary for the proper discharge of the Signal Service by means of a suitable telegraph line in cases where no lines are in operation, to be constructed, maintained, and worked under the direction of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, or the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury; and the use of the life-saving stations as signal stations shall be subject to such regulations as may be agreed upon by said officials.

This is a part of the general signal service provided for by the general law to which I have referred. This particular cable is a part of the military telegraph line for the connection of which provision is made in section 223 of the Revised Statutes which I have just read. Not only that, but the Block Island submarine cable was itself provided for in the Forty-sixth Congress by a law which will be found in chapter 5, volume 21 of the Statutes at Large.

The provision upon which the gentleman raises this point of order is no more new legislation than any other part of the paragraph. It applies to existing projects and existing public works as much as any other part of the paragraph in which it is included. If any portion of that telegraph line is out of order, requiring repair or replacement with new telegraph wire, no one can doubt that a provision for that purpose is in order under the general language of this section providing for the purchase of requisite "materials" for that purpose and for that service.

The submarine cable here provided for is that part of the military telegraph line running under the waters of Block Island Bay, connected at its shore end on the mainland with the shore telegraph provided by the Government for the same purpose running to Narragansett Pier, a telegraph station some miles away, which connects with the general telegraph line along the Atlantic coast. It connects at the Block Island end with the shore line of the military telegraph system running 4, 5, or 6 miles on Block Island until it reaches the signal station with which its connection is made.

I will not at this stage of the discussion, a point of order being pending, refer to the great commercial importance of this cable connection with the signal station on Block Island. I think the importance of this provision is well understood by the chairman and other members of the Committee on Appropriations with whom I have conferred concerning it, the committee being satisfied, I believe, on this subject, have embraced this particular matter by designation in this paragraph, simply specifying for this purpose a particular part of the military telegraph line, that it may receive the attention which its importance and necessity demand.

I do not see that any point of order can properly be urged as against this proposition in the bill. If it were subject to such point of order I should earnestly urge any gentleman on this floor, looking to the interest of American commerce passing in that neighborhood, looking to the general good which it is intended to subserve, to withdraw the point. But certainly, Mr. Chairman, this provision is not and can not be subject to any such point of order. It provides for a part of this telegraph line already established by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman read the authority to which he last referred in the twenty-first volume of the Statutes at Large?

Mr. SPOONER. The law to which I referred is entitled "An act to authorize the laying of a telegraph cable from the mainland in Rhode Island to Block Island," and is chapter 5, volume 21 of the Statutes at Large. The act provides—

That the sum of $15,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated for the purpose of laying a telegraph cable, under the direction of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, from the mainland of Rhode Island to Block Island, R. I.

This was in continuance of the general law, in the extension of the signal service by telegraphic communication.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, the urgency deficiency bill of the present session contained an appropriation of $5,000 for the repair of this cable, which, of course, was not liable to the point of order. It now turns out that the cable can not be repaired; so there comes to us on this bill an appropriation for a "new submarine cable."

It may be said by my friend on the other side that the whole of this section is obnoxious to the rule. I do not know that to be so; but I have made the point against that part of the paragraph that I do know to be in violation of the rule. There was originally laid a submarine cable at the point designated, which has become unserviceable; and now it is proposed to make in this bill an appropriation for laying a new submarine cable. The provision which the gentleman has read from the Statutes at Large has no sort of application to laying a submarine cable specified in this bill. The provision here is for a new cable. It is new legislation, falling clearly and distinctly within the rulings already made by the Chair with reference to light-houses upon the coast and also in regard to the construction of reservoirs at Hot Springs, Ark.

Mr. SPOONER rose.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman will let us have a decision on the point of order.

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to say a word concerning a matter which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] has brought into this discussion. He refers to the appropriation made in the "urgency deficiency bill." An estimate was made by the Secretary of War for this cable, being the amount included in the provision now under consideration; and the recommendation was made that provision for the new cable should be included in the "urgency deficiency bill."

I brought that recommendation to the attention of the Appropriations Committee; and believing at that time, as they did, that the repair of the cable would be possible and therefore economical, they recommended, instead of providing at that time for a new cable, that $5,000 should be provided in the urgent deficiency bill for the repair of that cable. That provision became law in the urgent deficiency bill, passed at this session, but as shown by Executive Document 197 of the present session it appears that when an examination was made of this then broken cable it was found in such condition that repair was absolutely impossible. It was examined by experts under the direction of the War Department, and the information was brought by this executive communication to the House that the expenditure of $5,000 would be of no service; that no repair of that cable could be made; and that a new cable was required to complete the connection in the telegraph line, which had been broken across Block Island Bay.

Mr. RANDALL. I must insist on this debate being brought to a close.

Mr. SPOONER. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I will conclude in a moment. Therefore, a recommendation was made by the Secretary of War for the appropriation under consideration; and the Committee on Appropriations have reported this clause, to provide the required appropriation.

The military telegraph line, of which this cable is a part, exists by law; the clause in question is to provide the appropriation for the material and labor required to replace this broken connection across Block Island Bay.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have a decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph to which the point of order is raised is as follows:

For continuing the connections of signal stations with life-saving stations or light-houses, including services of operators, repairmen, materials, and general service, being for the maintenance and repair of the military-telegraph line along the Atlantic coast of the United States, and including $18,350 for a new submarine cable at Block Island Bay, Rhode Island, $26,350: Provided, That such connections, in the opinion of the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service and the Light-House Board, shall be deemed necessary.

If the existing law authorizes the making of a new line, then the words of this amendment directing the making of a new line would not be necessary. If it can not be made without the insertion of these words, then it is new legislation and it is not in order in this bill. If the law authorizes the work and the appropriation is not sufficient to make the new cable, to increase the amount to what is sufficient for that purpose would not require any direction for the application of it. In other words, if this work were authorized by law it would be competent to increase the amount of the appropriation and not to provide a mode for spending it without authority of law.

Mr. REED, of Maine. This expenditure is authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. If it is, then the words directing the manner of its expenditure are not necessary to the statute. But if it is necessary to put these words in, then this is new legislation and not in order.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Whether it be necessary or not is not the question under the point of order. That is addressed to the discretion of the House as to whether——

The CHAIRMAN. I did not mean whether the appropriation is necessary; I meant if it were necessary to insert those words to give power to do this thing, then it is new legislation. If the power does not exist, then the words showing how the expenditure is to be made is new legislation.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Does the Chair sustain the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Will the Chair permit me?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided the question.

Mr. REED, of Maine. This is an important matter beyond this particular question and I think the attention of the Chair being called to it he will see we do not assume that position. The law says that the Secretary of War is authorized to continue the same with such rights as may be necessary to the proper discharge of the signal service by lines of suitable telegraph in cases where no line is in operation. That is this case. There is express provision in the bill that $26,000 shall be used for that purpose. That is strictly in accordance with the law.

The CHAIRMAN. If the additional amount provided for in this paragraph were simply added to the other amount without giving the direction of the new mode of expenditure it would not be out of order.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It must be perfectly competent for Congress in making a general appropriation in accordance with the law to specify how a portion of the money shall be spent, and that is all this does.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has thought that it is a good test as to whether or not a provision was new legislation to inquire whether or not the appropriation or the expenditure could be made without the words of direction——

Mr. RANDALL. I insist that the point of order has been decided.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desired simply to satisfy the mind of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. SPOONER. I feel that I must appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Rhode Island appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 69, noes 77.

Mr. HOLMAN. Tellers.

Mr. RANDALL. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. SPOONER and Mr. RANDALL were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 98, noes 76.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will rise informally to receive a report from the committee on Enrolled Bills.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The committee informally rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill (H. R. 5887) making appropriation for the service of the Post-Office Department of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

TEMPORARY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. RANDALL. Since we are now in the House, I desire to submit a joint resolution on the part of the Committee on Appropriations, extending for ten days the present appropriations, and ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection to its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under existing laws which shall remain unprovided for on the 30th day of June, 1886, be, and they are hereby, continued and made available for a period of ten days from and after that date, unless the regular appropriations therefor provided for in bills now pending in Congress shall have been previously made for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887; and in case the appropriations, or any of them, hereby continued are, or is, insufficient to carry on the said necessary operations, a sufficient amount is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry on the same.

Provided, That no greater amount shall be expended therefor than would be in the same proportion to the appropriations for the fiscal year 1886 as ten days' time bears to the whole of said fiscal year.

And provided further, That authority is also granted for continuing during the same period the necessary work required for public printing and binding, and for all other miscellaneous items embodied in the sundry civil and naval appropriation acts in advance of appropriations to be hereafter made for said objects.

And provided further, That all sums expended under this act shall be charged to and be deducted from the appropriations for like service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 196) was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury be printed in this connection.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 28, 1886.

SIR: Should the regular appropriation acts providing for the necessary operations of the Government for the service of the next fiscal year fail of enactment before the close of the present fiscal year, as from present indications would seem to be probable, I would respectfully suggest that provision be made for such operations for a period of ten days after the 30th instant, or until such time as the regular appropriation bills now pending in Congress shall be enacted. I inclose herewith draught of a joint resolution to provide for such expenditures.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. REAGAN in the chair.

Mr. ROGERS. I offer the following amendment, to conform the last section to the matter which has been ruled out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "twenty-six thousand three hundred and fifty," in line 1352, and insert "eight thousand" in lieu thereof.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no objection to that; it follows of necessity.

Mr. SPOONER. Not by any means.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There is a decided objection to it. Notwithstanding the decision of the Chair, which has received the approval of the House, as the matter stands now the money is appropriated; and if the proper authorities deem that such a telegraph-cable ought to be laid it can be laid; and the same reasons which actuated the committee in recommending the provision which has been stricken out ought also to cause them to sustain the present sum as now appropriated. Now, if they have any reason to give why their action was originally wrong in making the recommendation they have made, I hope they will present it. If they have not, then I hope the House will reject the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. REED, of Maine. I want to see if in this matter the Committee on Appropriations will go back on itself.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 79, noes 15.

Mr. SPOONER. No quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. Is it possible the other side of the House mean to break a quorum?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Is it possible the other side of the House mean to delude us by making reports of appropriations which they will not stand by?

Mr. RANDALL. The action of the House makes it necessary that change should be made.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There has been no action of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. There has been action by the committee.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not see why this should be treated differently from other matters. If such treatment is given it I shall endeavor to maintain such rights as I possess.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 85, noes 25.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Clerk, under the rule, will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following-named members failed to answer:

Adams, J. J.	Dawson,	Jackson,	Romeis,
Aiken,	Dougherty,	Johnston, J. T.	Sadler,
Allen, C. H.	Dunn,	Kelley,	Scott,
Anderson, C. M.	Eden,	King,	Scranton,

Croxton,	Hiestand,	Pirce,	Willis,
Curtin,	Hitt,	Plumb,	Woodburn.
Davenport,	Houk,	Riggs,
Davis,	Irion,	Robertson,

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. REAGAN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill, had found itself without a quorum, and he had directed the roll to be called and reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. The names of the absentees will be entered on the Journal. It appears that one hundred and five members are absent. There is a quorum present, and under the rule the committee will resume its sitting.

Mr. DUNHAM addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain anything at this time. The rule provides that, a quorum being present, the committee must immediately without a motion resume its sitting.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will resume their position as tellers. The vote will be taken over again.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 99, noes 57.

Mr. SPOONER. I withdraw the point as to a quorum.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For rent, hire of civilian employés, furniture, light, stationery, ice, repairs, rent of telephones, text-books, lumber, and other expenses of offices maintained as stations of observation in cities or places outside of Washington, District of Columbia, $35,000.

Mr. WHEELER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1363 strike out "$35,000" and insert "$39,000."

Mr. WHEELER. By adopting this amendment I think we can succeed in establishing the signal stations to which I referred a short time ago. This paragraph refers to stations situated outside the city of Washington. If this appropriation is made I think we can get the authority to establish these stations in the West Indies. I send to the desk, to be read as part of my remarks, a brief article from the New York Tribune.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The Clerk read as follows:

If the Signal Service is going to resume weather observations in the West Indies and along the Mexican coast this year it is time it began. Two recent storms which have visited the United States from the south indicate that the season of tropical disturbances which usually opens in August is already at hand. The West India hurricane and Gulf cyclone when fully developed are the worst storms that visit this country; and the opportunity for discovering their approach has not been fully utilized thus far.

Mr. WHEELER. I would not press this matter on the House were it not one of such importance that I feel it my duty to do so. As I stated in my former remarks, there is nothing so important involving the same expense as the establishment of these signal stations. By this amendment providing this amount of money I believe the object can be attained.

As I stated before, these storms occur in August and September, and unless we establish those signal stations now the shipping of the fall trade will be subjected to the dangers which these signal stations will avert. There can be no pretense that a point of order could prevail against this amendment. The gentleman who has charge of the bill says, however, he hopes it will be voted down. I appeal to the House to sustain the amendment. If they do not do it, and cyclones come, as they well may, the disaster and destruction connected with their advent will rest upon us.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no necessity for this increase. The object the gentleman has in view can be provided for under existing laws.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 1363 insert as a new paragraph the following:

"For repairs of signal station at Mount Washington, in the State of New Hampshire, $5,000."

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to have read in my time the letter which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SIGNAL OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, June 9, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your favor dated the 7th inst., notifying me of your failure to get the item for a new signal station on Mount Washington inserted in the sundry civil bill, and requesting further information on the subject.

In reply I beg to say that, both for the sake of humanity, as regards the health and safety of the observers, and for the interests of practical meteorology, it is very much to be desired that an appropriation of $10,000 be obtained for a new observatory on Mount Washington. The present building is unsafe and unsuitable for its purposes, and can not be kept as warm during winter as is required for mere health, without considerations of comfort. It can hardly be improved to the desired extent by the making of repairs.

I would therefore request that you do everything possible and proper to obtain the full amount for a new building through an amendment to the sundry civil bill; and should this be ruled out on a point of order, that you then offer another amendment appropriating $5,000 for such repairs to and alterations in the old building as can be made with a view to comparative safety and fitness.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

W. B. HAZEN,
Chief Signal Officer, Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen., U. S. A.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. GALLINGER. In connection with this letter I desire to say that some time ago I received a letter from General Hazen, chief officer of the Signal Service, saying it was very desirable an appropriation of $10,000 should be given for a new signal station at Mount Washington. I failed to get that inserted in the bill. His answer to a letter from myself so stating has just been read. He insists we should have a new signal station on Mount Washington. But knowing very well an amendment of that kind would be ruled out of order, I have submitted an amendment asking $5,000 to repair the building which is now on that mountain.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire only to say that the top of Mount Washington is more than 6,000 feet above the level of the sea; it is in the region of perpetual snow; at times the wind blows there at the rate of more than a hundred miles an hour, and these observers, according to my own personal knowledge and according to the statement made by the Chief Signal Officer, are unable to keep themselves comfortable during the winter months. It seems to me, sir, that there ought not to be a dissenting voice in regard to this amendment, and that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, as well as every other gentleman present, ought to give it his hearty support. This is one of the most important signal stations in the whole country, and in view of the fact that General Hazen says that the interests of humanity, as well as the interests of science, demand that this station shall be, if not rebuilt, at least repaired, I submit that that alone ought to be sufficient to induce every member of the House to vote for this amendment. I trust that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who is interested in humanity and science alike, will not interpose an objection to this, but will allow it to be adopted by unanimous consent.

Mr. RANDALL. I will not do any such thing. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not expect you would.

Mr. RANDALL. Then why did you say you did?

Mr. REED, of Maine. That was merely a polite compliment which he did not mean. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise merely to direct the attention of the committee to the extraordinary language contained in the letter of General Hazen counseling a member of this House as to the manner in which he shall evade the rules which the House has established to guide its legislation. We have given the Signal Service an adequate appropriation. I have never heard of any complaint on that subject from the chief of the service until this extraordinary letter of his was read here; and if that officer would attend properly to the Signal Corps, instead of sending letters to members of Congress, he would do a great deal better for the Government and get more credit for his administration.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Chairman, whatever may be said of the good taste of the chief of the Signal Service in writing this letter, the House should not forget that this matter has some merits of its own entirely independent of the character of the letters which the signal officer writes. As has been stated by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], the station on Mount Washington is one of the most exposed in the whole country; it is 6,000 feet above the sea; most of us have been there and are familiar with the locality. I have no question at all that these repairs are necessary, not only as a matter of science, but as a matter of humanity, and I do not believe the House will refuse to grant the money required for the repairs that are necessary to make that station what it should be for the proper accommodation of the officers and men employed there.

Mr. REED, of Maine. And, Mr. Chairman, I trust also that we shall not be deterred from doing a just and proper thing by an attack upon the Chief of the Signal Service for the crime which is contained in the words following, to wit:

I would therefore request that you do everything possible and proper to obtain the full amount for a new building through an amendment to the sundry civil bill, and, should that be ruled out on a point of order, that you then offer another amendment appropriating $5,000 for such repairs to and alterations of the old building as can be made with a view to comparative safety and convenience.

For that expression the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] arraigns General Hazen.

Mr. RANDALL. I do.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It is a very serious crime to suggest to a Representative in whose district a building is to be erected, or ought to be erected, the method of getting at it under our rules—for that is what the gentleman from Pennsylvania characterizes as teaching a member how to "evade" the rules.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the gentleman from Maine will allow me, I will state that the suggestion in this letter came in response to a letter from myself, saying to General Hazen that in my judgment an amendment providing for a new building would be ruled out on a point of order.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It seems to me that an attempt to disguise the real merits of this question by such an unfounded attack as that which has been made here ought not to be sustained by the House, but I presume it will be.

Mr. RANDALL. We shall see about that. I have no language to change in reference to General Hazen.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I know nothing about the feeling of the gentleman from Pennsylvania toward General Hazen.

Mr. RANDALL. Sir?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I know nothing about the motive that may have actuated this attack upon General Hazen, but I am glad to see the probability arise that these gentlemen are to be reminded occasionally that they had better attend to the business of their own departments, and keep their letters away from members of Congress. I am glad that the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has now reached that conclusion. He has, however, reached it rather late in the session. The letters of General Black and the records of the Pension Department which were produced here did not seem to make the profound impression upon the gentleman that this letter of General Hazen's seems to have made—a letter drawn out by a personal request from a member of Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I think General Black was roughly handled in the House on account of that.

Mr. GALLINGER. And General Hazen is roughly handled now. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question was taken on the amendment; and the chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 76.

Mr. GALLINGER. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from New Hampshire, Mr. GALLINGER, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. RANDALL, to act as tellers.

The tellers took their places; but before the count was concluded,

Mr. GALLINGER said: Mr. Chairman, it is evident that gentlemen here do not want to repair this signal station, and I withdraw the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The question of a quorum being withdrawn, the noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay:

For pay of one brigadier-general and sixteen second lieutenants, $29,500; for longevity pay to officers of the Signal Corps, to be paid with current monthly pay, $4,680; for pay of not exceeding one hundred and fifty sergeants, thirty corporals, and two hundred and ninety privates, including payment due on discharge, $180,000; for mileage to officers when traveling on duty under orders, $4,000; for commutation of quarters to commissioned officers at places where there are no public quarters, $5,500; in all, $223,680. And the Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to detail for the service in the Signal Corps not to exceed four commissioned officers, exclusive of the second lieutenants of the Signal Corps authorized by law; and the whole number of second lieutenants appointed and to be appointed from the sergeants of the Signal Corps under the provisions of the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 20, 1878, shall not exceed sixteen, and the whole number of enlisted men in the Signal Corps shall not exceed four hundred and seventy: Provided, That the appropriations herein made for the pay, commutations, and allowances of the commissioned officers and enlisted men of the Signal Corps shall be in full of all pay, commutations, and allowances to which said commissioned officers and enlisted men of the Signal Corps shall be entitled during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

During the reading of the paragraph,

Mr. WHEELER said: I desire to raise a point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. On the part of the Committee on Appropriations I wish to submit the following amendment——

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I desire to make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The reading of the paragraph is not concluded.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I thought it was, as an amendment was sent up.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the paragraph.

Mr. COMPTON. I raise a point of order against the provision of this paragraph included between lines 1400 and 1406. This provision for the appointment of a limited number of second lieutenants is in conflict with the statute, which provides that two lieutenants may be appointed from the corps of sergeants.

Mr. RANDALL. To save time, I concede that this is in conflict with the statutes, and if the point of order be insisted upon——

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, the other day I was deprived of the right to make a point of order because I did not interrupt. At this time I wish to interrupt early enough and often enough to have my position recognized by the Chair. I have this point of order to make——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio as soon as the gentleman from Pennsylvania is off the floor.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to be recognized for the purpose of making a point of order against all of the paragraph after the word "law," in line 1400.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no contest on the point of order.

Mr. RYAN. It is all subject to a point of order; there is no controversy about it.

Mr. RANDALL. I know it is subject to a point of order. Now I ask to amend——

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I make a point of order, and I do not want to be taken off the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. The point of order has been decided, as I understand.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I have not heard any decision. My point of order is upon the clause commencing with the word "provided," in line 1407.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON] has made that point.

Mr. COMPTON. I desire my point of order to cover the whole section.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I understand that the point of order is conceded by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but it has not been decided, as I understand, by the chairman.

Mr. RYAN. The clause has been ruled out. What more do you want?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I did not hear any ruling. I want to know whether there has been a ruling.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I submit that no one has heard any such ruling from the Chair.

Mr. RYAN. I got the impression that the Chair had ruled on the point.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is all very well to go on assuming that the Chair has taken certain action; but once in a while we would like to know what the ruling really is.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is on the floor.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I had intended to make the same point of order which I understand has been made by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON]. I would like to be informed whether that has been passed upon.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Then in regard to this point, which I make specifically for myself, I will say in the first place that it is one which has recently been discussed fully in the Committee of the Whole and decided by the chairman. The provision here is—

That the appropriations herein made for the pay, commutations, and allowances of the commissioned officers and enlisted men of the Signal Corps shall be in full of all pay, commutations, and allowances to which said commissioned officers and enlisted men of the Signal Corps shall be entitled during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

Now, if you will look at the law by which this pay and these commutations are allowed, you will ascertain that this provision of the pending paragraph differs from that law. This provision appropriates less than is fixed by law; and it is further provided that these officers and men shall take the amount here appropriated as full payment under the law. If that is not legislation, I am unable to conceive that there can be any such thing as legislation.

In regard to the other point in which I am interested, I will now say what I have to say. The law as it now exists authorizes the employment of five hundred men in this corps; the provision of this bill is for four hundred and seventy—a reduction of thirty. I will read the provision:

And the whole number of second lieutenants appointed and to be appointed from the sergeants of the Signal Corps under the provisions of the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 20, 1878, shall not exceed sixteen, and the whole number of enlisted men in the Signal Corps shall not exceed four hundred and seventy.

This bill then makes a limitation of the number of men allowed by existing law for this service. Is the answer made, as it seems to be made in every case, that this is only a limitation in regard to the manner of the expenditure of the public funds? Look for a single moment. There are now by law, not proposed as law, but by virtue of law and regulations under the law, five hundred men regularly employed. This bill and no other law limits that number to four hundred and seventy. It is a provision of law. Now, it is said in such case it is a limitation of the application of the money. Suppose the Appropriations Committee had said four hundred and fifty instead of four hundred and seventy; nay, suppose it had said one hundred instead of five hundred men, would there have been any change? There would have been no difference in policy. It is simply and solely an absolute change of existing law, and nothing else.

You might illustrate by supposing they dismissed them altogether, the whole four hundred, and left only the officers; it would be no more a change of law, although it would be a greater change so far as it affected individuals. It would be no more, certainly, a change of existing law if you provided no one should be employed out of the five hundred than if you provided only four hundred and seventy should be employed.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, from the very moment the point or order was made against these two paragraphs I conceded the point of order was well taken as to both of them, so that we need not have proceeded further in the debate.

But I wish to say in answer to the gentleman from Ohio that the reduction to four hundred and seventy comes from the abolition of Fort Myer, which has been provided for. I think the commission unanimously recommended that reduction of the Signal Service.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania there will be a point of order raised against that provision. If that point of order when made shall be decided not to be good I will then have no objection to this provision.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the point?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. That it is new legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. I will discuss it when it comes up. I ask for a decision on the pending point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order as to the following language of the paragraph, after the word "law," in line 1400:

And the whole number of second lieutenants appointed and to be appointed from the sergeants of the Signal Corps under the provisions of the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 20, 1878, shall not exceed sixteen, and the whole number of enlisted men in the Signal Corps shall not exceed four hundred and seventy: Provided, That the appropriations herein made for the pay, commutations, and allowances of the commissioned officers and enlisted men of the Signal Corps shall be in full of all pay, commutations, and allowances to which said commissioned officers and enlisted men of the Signal Corps shall be entitled during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

Mr. RANDALL. The Chair sustains the point of order as to the language which has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; all after the word "law," in line 1400.

Mr. RANDALL. I move, after the word "law," in line 1400, to insert the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1400, after the word "law," add the words "who shall receive their pay and allowances from the appropriation for the support of the Army."

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I make the point of order to that amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. That is existing law.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. It is a change of this law, because they are provided for here.

Mr. RYAN. I wish to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that proviso would be wholly inconsistent with the preceding paragraph which makes provision for the payment of these officers and men. They are not provided for at all in the Army appropriation bill, but they are provided for in the paragraph to which you propose to attach this proviso.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Does not that relate to the detail from the regular Army?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know anything of that fact. It comes from the Signal Service Bureau.

Mr. RYAN. If this relates to those who are detailed from the Army, then it is pertinent. They are paid, without such provision, out of the Army appropriation bill, and therefore this is wholly unnecessary.

Mr. RANDALL. It came from the Signal Service Bureau.

Mr. RYAN. The men are detailed from the Army and paid from the Army appropriation, and therefore it is not necessary.

Mr. RANDALL. I am only doing as requested by the bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to insert after the word "law," in line 1400, the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

And no money herein appropriated shall be used for pay and allowances of second lieutenants appointed or to be appointed from the sergeants of the Signal Corps under the provisions of the act approved June 20, 1878, in excess of the number of sixteen, or for the pay and allowances of not exceeding four hundred and seventy enlisted men of the Signal Corps.

Mr. COMPTON. I raise the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not liable to the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. It merely applies a limitation to the appropriation made in this bill.

Mr. COMPTON. I beg pardon. I do not so understand it. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. COMPTON. I make the same point of order against this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL'S amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows.

Subsistence:

For commutation of rations of not exceeding four hundred and seventy Signal Service enlisted men, at 85 cents per day each, $145,000.

Mr. WHEELER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 1418, the words "for sale of subsistence stores to officers and enlisted men, $9,000."

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order against that.

Mr. WHEELER. That is not subject to the point of order, because the statutes of the United States now authorize sales of subsistence stores to all officers and enlisted men of the Army.

Mr. RANDALL. Where is the provision for it?

Mr. WHEELER. The law now provides that they can have the privilege of buying such stores at cost.

Section 1124 provides:

The officers of the Subsistence Department shall procure and keep for sale to officers and enlisted men at cost prices, for cash or on credit, such articles as may from time to time be designated by the Inspector-General of the Army. An account of all sales on credit shall be kept, and the amounts due for the same shall be reported monthly to the Paymaster-General.

This is a privilege which has always been extended to officers and enlisted men of the Army, and has heretofore been granted to officers and enlisted men of the Signal Corps. This omission, as I understand it, was an accidental one. It is important to place them upon the same footing as other officers.

It does not cost the Government one dollar, because it simply appropriates $9,000 to keep the stores on hand, all of which will be turned back into the Treasury when the stores are sold. Circumstances will often arise when it is important that officers and enlisted men of the Signal Corps should have this privilege, and I hope the House will vote for this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. This will make a new provision of law. The point here is to this paragraph. We provide for the commutation allowed by law. In some cases heretofore it has been $1, and in some cases 75 cents; but under the recommendation of the Signal Service Bureau I think it has been made uniformly at 85 cents.

Mr. WHEELER. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The question upon the point of order has not yet been acted on. The Chair understands the gentleman from Pennsylvania to insist upon it?

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw it.

Mr. COMPTON. I offer a substitute for the whole section.

The CHAIRMAN. The first vote will be on the amendment perfecting the text of the section before the other vote is taken.

Mr. BAYNE. I will ask to have the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama again reported.

The amendment was again read.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 7, noes 40.

So the amendment of Mr. WHEELER was rejected.

Mr. COMPTON. I now offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 1415, 1416, 1417, and 1418 and insert:
"For commutation of rations for two hundred and twenty men at $1 per day, $80,300; and for two hundred and forty men at 85 cents a day, $74,460."

Mr. RYAN. I make the point of order against that amendment. The gentleman can just as well accomplish his purpose in another way. That is subject to the same point of order that the paragraph itself is subject to.

Mr. RANDALL. That would make law, when this is merely a matter of regulation now.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, the regulations clothe the Secretary of War with authority to determine what the amount of commutation shall be. This undertakes to change that regulation and fix by law the rate itself. Now, I suppose what the gentleman from Maryland really wants is to leave the law as it is.

Mr. RANDALL. The regulations.

Mr. RYAN. Yes, to leave the regulations as they are, so as to leave the amount of allowances precisely as they are now. If that is what he wishes I suggest that he can make the point of order upon the language of the paragraph on the words "at 85 cents per day each." When that is stricken out then this commutation will remain precisely as it is now, and I therefore suggest to the gentleman that he make his point of order against that.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is rather late, is it not, for that?

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania will fight on that point of order.

Now, in respect to the amendment, who are these men who are affected by this provision of the bill as reported from the committee? They are a set of young men, sir, who are selected after a very rigid examination, much more rigid than any civil-service examination. They are enlisted in the service of the United States for five years; and under the provisions of law, as at present existing, they are not paid an equivalent to that of an inferior clerk in any one of the civil departments of the Government. Now, I maintain that it is a contract between these parties and the Government. Every young man seeking to enter the service is furnished with this pamphlet before his application for admission is entertained, a pamphlet signed by W. B. Hazen, brigadier and brevet major-general, Chief of the Signal Service, United States Army, and this is the act of the Government itself. What does it say? It says to every young man who seeks to enter the service that he shall come up to certain requirements, and, among other things, that he shall receive certain fixed pay. He undergoes the examination and enters the service, and the condition is understood in advance that he is to render certain service in good faith to the Government and is to receive a certain compensation for it. He knows that he can not leave the service unless he deserts; and yet the Government can come here and through a committee of this House reduce the pay which he supposed he should receive when he entered the service. Is that a fair proposition? I maintain that it is bad faith on the part of the Government, and that the Government is bound in honor to keep its faith with these men.

My friend from Kansas suggests that I can reach this by raising the point of order on the words he has specified. I could, no doubt, although I am not clear myself on that subject. The general proposition giving the Secretary of War power to regulate these things is as general as any language can make it.

Mr. RYAN. If that is so, then your proposition changes existing law.

Mr. COMPTON. Now, sir, the Secretary of War himself recognizes the justice of this claim. In presenting to this House an appeal from these men in the Signal Service he uses this language:

Attention is invited to the remarks of the Chief Signal Officer in his indorsement of the 21st instant on the accompanying papers, from which it will be seen that the services performed by these enlisted men are of an important character; that much greater compensation is allowed by the Government for exactly similar services in other bureaus and Departments; that the changes proposed in the sundry civil bill in the commutations and allowances to these men will annul the existing law, which allows the Secretary of War to regulate these commutations according to the interests of the service, and that it will impair the efficiency of the service.

Out of abundant caution I offer this amendment, fearing this general provision will not save to these men the rights to which they are so justly entitled.

Mr. CUTCHEON. From what document did the gentleman read?

Mr. COMPTON. I read a portion of a letter from the Secretary of War transmitting the memorial of enlisted men in the Signal Corps.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] is more familiar with this part of the bill than I am, and I shall ask him to give it his attention. But I want to advert to one or two matters in this connection.

In the first place, these enlisted men after thirty years' service are retired, or, rather, are entitled to retirement. Next, this regulation provides that part of these men shall receive a dollar a day and part shall receive 75 cents. Now, it came to our knowledge from the Signal Service Bureau that that had produced a great deal of friction in the service, and they recommended there should be a uniform rate fixed. The committee fixed 85 cents. That is the history so far as I recollect it; but if there be anything else connected with this matter I am quite sure the gentleman from Kansas will be able to state it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, and the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland will be submitted to the committee.

Mr. RYAN. If I understand the amendment it provides a certain number of these enlisted men shall have $1 a day as commutation of subsistence and a certain other number of them shall have 75 cents a day. Under the existing law the Secretary of War is empowered to fix the rate of commutation for stations outside of Washington. He has fixed it at 75 cents a day almost everywhere in the United States. Here in Washington he has fixed it at $1 per day, and I believe the same for the few that are stationed in New York.

The number receiving to-day a commutation of $1 per day is only about one-third of the aggregate number of enlisted men, as I am informed by the Department. The rest are receiving but 75 cents per day.

Now, the way we came to provide 85 cents a day was this: It was stated to us by the Department that there ought really to be no distinction and that all ought to have the same rate. So the committee undertook to average it.

In doing so, however, it reduces those who were stationed here in the city eleven and a half dollars a month and raises those stationed everywhere else in the United States $8 a month. That would be the effect of the provision of 85 cents a day.

Now, I submit that if we are to go back at all, if we are not to adopt the provision incorporated into the bill, we had better let this matter rest exactly where the existing law places it and vote down this amendment, and then vote out the provision of 85 cents a day. That will leave it exactly where it stands now, and that, perhaps, would be the safer and better course.

Mr. COMPTON. I will modify my amendment and make the amount $1 for the one class and 75 cents for the other.

Mr. RYAN. But by so doing you fix the rate, which is at present left, very properly perhaps, with the Secretary of War. He fixes it at 75 cents as a rule, and at certain places where the cost of living is greater he fixes it at a dollar.

Mr. COMPTON. That is right.

Mr. RYAN. I am content to leave it so, where the law leaves it.

Mr. COMPTON. If you make that arrangement I am content.

Mr. DIBBLE. The Signal Service is necessary not only in time of war but in time of peace, and it is essential that its efficiency should be preserved for the benefit of the agricultural interests of this country. I find that this appropriation bill makes a substantial reduction. Last year the appropriation was based on an estimate of a dollar a day for commutation of rations at some of the stations and 75 cents at others. The Book of Estimates submitted has this remark:

> One dollar per man seems to be the minimum price at which board can be obtained, and the Chief Signal Officer desires to urge this, as he considers the allowance of $1 per day per man to be absolutely necessary.

The amount that is asked in the estimate is $167,000. The amount appropriated in the bill is $145,000. The amount in this amendment is $155,000, and as I am informed, and I would like to be corrected by the gentleman if I am in error, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maryland is exactly based upon the rate and number of men who are now receiving commutation in the Signal Service; two hundred and twenty are receiving commutation at $1 a day and two hundred and forty are receiving it at 75 cents per day. It is exactly maintaining the present status. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word more in relation to this matter. This is skilled service. I have here the circular which is sent out to every applicant. Every man who enters the service is required to contract with the Government as an enlisted man for five years, and it is desertion if he abandons that contract. He is told that he will be required to stand an examination fully as strict as the civil-service examination for positions in the departmental service. In addition to that, he has to be instructed in technical and scientific information; he has to become a scientific expert. At the time of entering the service a man is told that he will receive certain rates of pay during this period of five years. The law authorizes this commutation of rations and of quarters to be fixed by the Department, and they have fixed it and have told the man what he is to receive.

Mr. BRAGG. Where is the law?

Mr. DIBBLE. Why, it has been stated here that the commutation of quarters is fixed in accordance with law.

Mr. BRAGG. Where is the law?

Mr. RYAN. And as the gentleman has gone so far, I would like him to show me any law that authorizes the Secretary of War to fix any commutation of any kind whatever.

Mr. DIBBLE. I will read from the last appropriation bill.

Mr. RYAN. I should like to see the law for commutation for fuel, for barracks, or for quarters. I do not know but there may be one, but the Chief of the Signal Service has been entirely unable to point us to any law on the subject.

Mr. DIBBLE. I was taking the statement of the gentleman himself, corroborated by the appropriation bills passed from time to time.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It is contained in the Army Regulations, which have the force of statute law.

Mr. RYAN. But the question is whether they do have the force of law.

Mr. DIBBLE. I have no objection to this interruption, Mr. Chairman, if it does not come out of my time. On the contrary, I am very glad to listen to it at this time.

Mr. RYAN. The regulations have the force of law so far as the Secretary of War has the right under the law to make them, and no further.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I was interrupted a good deal, and I hope some gentleman will yield me additional time.

Mr. RYAN and Mr. BAYNE rose.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will recognize me I will yield to the gentlemen from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] with pleasure.

Mr. BAYNE. I have no objection if I can be heard later.

Mr. DIBBLE. If there be a question as to an express statute on the subject, I contend that this is the law by implication. It has appeared in appropriation bill after appropriation bill.

Mr. RYAN. And the power has been exercised ever since we have had an army.

Mr. DIBBLE. It has been exercised and it has been approved by Congress. Appropriations have been made for its exercise, and it remains as the actual practice of the Department to-day and of the Signal Service, and the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland is based on exactly what is being lawfully done to-day under the sanction of the appropriation act passed by the last Congress. All we desire is that that shall be maintained. As I was remarking when interrupted, these men have been employed under a five years' contract, and have been receiving rates of pay amounting to $900 a year and upward. The work that is done by the first privates in the Signal Service at a compensation of $900 per annum is the class of work which is done in the Departments here at a compensation of $1,400 to $1,600.

They prepare the weather charts; they do scientific expert duty. They have enlisted in good faith, with the promise of compensation at $900 per annum. This provision of the bill as it is reported taken with the other provision for commutation has the effect of cutting down their pay $11 per month, giving them $792 instead of $924 a year, making a reduction of $132 per annum in their present pay.

The work which they do is very much harder than the work that is done in the Departments here in Washington. I read from a circular on the subject:

> Questions have been asked as to the hours of labor. No general answer can cover this question. The service is varied. The order of tri-daily simultaneous observations and the amount and hours of labor are sufficient to require a man's entire attention, making on the whole a full working day. The time for improving study must come from the hours of recreation, and must not in any way interfere with prompt and constant attention to duty.

Now, Mr. Chairman, here are men who are experts, who receive only $900 a year, who have to work a full working day, and who are told that in addition they must go through a course of study, the time for which must be taken out of their hours of recreation. It seems to me that every consideration of fairness requires the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. BRAGG. Can the gentleman tell us out of whose time the preparation of such circulars as that comes?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I hope the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON] will be adopted. I think it would be a breach of faith on the part of the Government not to adopt that proposition. These men were enlisted under certain rules that were prescribed by the Secretary of War under a law enacted for that purpose, and they had a right to believe that the pledges made to them by the Secretary of War would be carried out and that the obligations entered into with them would be fulfilled in good faith.

As I understand the proposition of the committee, it will cut down those who have rendered long and faithful service, those who have been promoted for merit, those whose pay has been advanced by reason of continued, faithful, and efficient service. That should not take place. These men are not getting now any more than they should get for the high order of service they are rendering. This is a branch of science which can be carried on only by the Government. Private individuals can not do it. There is no way of accomplishing the results sought by the Signal Service except through the aid of the Government; and we can not afford to abandon the results already achieved and which will yet develop, as I believe, into a most accurate science, operating greatly to the benefit of the people all over the country in studying and availing themselves of the information afforded by this service.

I do not think a point of order lies; but I do think the question of the obligation of a contract enters into this matter. These men were enlisted under regulations promulgated by the Secretary of War. The law gave him power to make these regulations; and by their stipulations these men were to get a certain sum of money for services which they were to render. Now will any lawyer say that when men have enlisted under these conditions, and an obligation has been thus incurred by the Government, we can afford to go back on that agreement made with these men by the Secretary of War? Would not such a thing be a breach of the contract between them and the Government? It may not be such in a technical sense, these men being in the military service and the Government having omnipotent power in the control of all matters in regard to military exigencies. But these men, although enlisted in the military service, are not strictly employed upon military work. The services they render are of a high scientific character and almost wholly of a civil nature, not at all military, although the results of their labors may at times bear upon the military aspects of some question which may be before the country. The Secretary of War having been authorized by Congress to make these contracts and to regulate the amount of pay, and these men having rendered that service, I do not see how any gentleman of the Committee on Appropriations can explain away the obligation of this Government to pay the amount which it was agreed should be paid.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. Now, I want to fix ten minutes as the limit for this debate.

Mr. RYAN. I want to reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE]. I will not take more than five minutes. The assumption that the commutation for quarters, for fuel, and for subsistence is a part of the contract is simply absurd. When these men entered the service they did so under regulations (whether duly authorized by law or not) which empower the Secretary of War to commute their rations at any sum he may choose or to give them rations in kind if he shall wish—to give higher rates to some and lower rates to others. Those now in Washington who are receiving the higher rates may at any time be transferred to some other stations and receive the lower rates; and those who are now receiving the lower rates can at any time be transferred to Washington and receive the higher rates; hence there is no force in the suggestion made by the gentleman.

Then, again, the force here in Washington constitutes, I think, about one-third or a little less of all the enlisted men. They are present here to assert their rights. I do not care myself to cut them down at all; but the provision in this bill was intended to equalize the pay of all these employés, as that was deemed best by the department. The effect of the provision in the bill is absolutely to increase by $8 a month the pay of all those at stations outside of Washington. So that the proposition offered by my friend from Maryland and so vigorously pressed by my friend from Pennsylvania would operate to strike from the pay of men who can not appeal to Congress, who are scattered all over the country, who are deprived of all the social benefits and privileges enjoyed by those here in Washington, $8 a month. Why do not the sympathies of the gentleman from Pennsylvania go out toward these men as well as toward those stationed in Washington?

I repeat that I am willing this matter shall be left where the regulations leave it. If we vote down the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland and strike out the 85 cents a day provided for in the bill, this matter will rest upon the regulations under which these men enlisted. I would prefer, however, that the men who are scattered all over the United States and can not appeal directly to Congress should have the increase of $8 a month.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask to limit the debate.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I would like to occupy four minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. We can not afford to allow this bill to be discussed indefinitely day after day. I ask that this debate be limited by consent to four minutes.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I want four minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ROGERS). The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] asks unanimous consent that the debate on this provision be limited to four minutes, two on each side.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. No, I said I wanted four minutes; and I understood the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to assent to that. I do not know that I can use all that time, but I am so unaccustomed to speaking in this House that I never know how long a time four minutes is until I get through. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I do not understand the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the debate be limited to four minutes.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The debate on the paragraph or the amendment to the paragraph?

Mr. RANDALL. The paragraph and all amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the existing regulations of the department give $1 a day to some employés in this Signal Service and 75 cents a day to others. The gentleman from Maryland has in the amendment given 85 cents a day outside on the frontier.

Mr. RYAN. No; $1 to those on the frontier.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. The pending bill makes it 85 cents everywhere.

Mr. RYAN. That is all.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. The gentleman from Maryland proposes a certain number shall receive $1 and a certain number 85 cents.

Mr. RYAN. No; 75 cents.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. No; his proposition is 85 cents.

Mr. BAYNE. No.

Mr. COMPTON. My proposition is for two hundred and twenty men at $1 per day and for two hundred and forty men at 85 cents per day.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I am more interested in behalf of those enlisted men who are up on the frontier than on behalf of the enlisted men in the city of Washington. It may be $1 is not enough for those men, but certainly 75 cents is too little for those who are upon the frontier amid frost and snow and wind and ice making observations which, however erroneous the inferences may be we draw from them, are substantially correct.

The gentleman from Kansas proposes the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland shall be voted down, and then that the words "eighty-five cents" shall be stricken out of the present provision. That would leave a limit to the amount appropriated for this purpose. The result would be the department could not give this man on the frontier, in whose behalf the gentleman has spoken, more than 75 cents a day.

Mr. RYAN. An amount which would be ample.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. If the amount would be ample, and I will take the gentleman's statement for that, then I will not detain the committee further.

Mr. RANDALL. Commutation pay to enlisted men detailed as clerks has been abolished by the Army bill passed at this session. I think we should not adopt the amendment. It provides two hundred and twenty men at $1 per day and two hundred and forty at 85 cents per day as commutation of rations. It will produce irritation among the enlisted men in the corps. I hope, therefore, it will be voted down. If we do anything, perhaps it would be better to strike out "eighty-five cents."

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I misunderstood the gentleman from Kansas, and I find the amount will not be enough.

Mr. RYAN. The gentleman asked me whether it would be sufficient if under the regulations the Secretary of War should increase the amount. I stated I thought not.

The question recurred on Mr. COMPTON'S amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 63.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PERKINS reported that the Committee on Enrolled Bills had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 6395) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. ROGERS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment moved by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE].

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1417, after the word "each," insert:
"Except when traveling it shall be at $1.50 per day each."

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order on that that it changes existing law.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is not a new direction in any manner except so far that when enlisted men are required to travel they shall receive a greater amount. It does not change any existing regulation. It is not in any sense of the term new legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no law providing for a dollar and a half or any other sum during the period of transportation of enlisted men.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless there is some law cited the Chair is inclined to sustain the point of order. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. RYAN. I move to strike out in lines 1416 and 1417 the words "eighty-five cents a day each," thus leaving it where the regulations place it.

Mr. RANDALL demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 55.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I move in lines 1415 and 1416 to strike out the words "not exceeding four hundred and seventy Signal Service."

Mr. Chairman, there was an attempt——

Mr. RANDALL. Debate has been closed, but I am willing to concede a few minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I shall occupy but a few moments.

Mr. RANDALL. I know that.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, there was an attempt made in the preceding paragraph of the bill to reduce the number of enlisted men below four hundred and seventy, and that was ruled out on the point of order, and now we preserve in the bill that which is out of it in its effective clause. It should be left just as it was left by the Chair sustaining the question of order on the preceding paragraph. There should be no legislation inferentially on this part of the bill limiting the number of enlisted men. It should be left as before; and for the purpose of making it so and making the action of the chairman of some effect in ruling that the committee could not provide as it did provide I propose to leave it in this indefinite way by striking these words out.

Mr. RANDALL. I will state to the gentleman from Ohio why this number is fixed at four hundred and seventy. We had provided in a prior paragraph for the pay of but four hundred and seventy men; and then it grows out of the recommendation of the commission for the abolition of Fort Myer. There is no occasion, really, for over four hundred and seventy, and I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. That is the effective point, I know, the abolition of Fort Meyer, and that is what I protest against.

Mr. RANDALL. The commission unanimously recommended the abolition, I think, of Fort Myer.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 37, noes 52.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the subsistence of Signal Service enlisted men and for commutation of rations of Signal Service enlisted men, including $9,090.90 for subsistence stores, authorized articles for sale to officers and enlisted men and company messes, as allowed by paragraph 2199, Army Regulations, 1881, $155,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Debate, I believe, is not in order.

Mr. BRAGG. I make the point of order upon this amendment.

Mr. DIBBLE. I suppose the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me to say that this is exactly the provision of the present law.

Mr. RANDALL. The point of order is made by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. DIBBLE. This is the provision of law, and is embodied in the words of the last act.

The CHAIRMAN. What point of order does the gentleman from Wisconsin make?

Mr. BRAGG. That it changes existing law and makes new law, wherein it provides an appropriation for the purchase of subsistence stores for sale.

Mr. DIBBLE. I would refer the gentleman to the language of the resolution, which only provides for the purchase of articles for sale so far as authorized by the regulations of the Army. It is copied word for word from the same clause of the last appropriation act under which supplies have been purchased for the current year. This is authorized by the regulations of the Army.

Mr. BRAGG. The last appropriation bill made no law on the subject, and there never has been any law authorizing the sale of subsistence stores to the persons named. Therefore if we pass this act we are enacting for the first time a law to provide for selling to them.

Mr. DIBBLE. I have not the Army Regulations at hand; but I have read the regulation, and paragraph 2199 of the Army Regulations authorizes sales of this character for which this appropriation was made at the last session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not advised about the status of the law; but the Chair does not understand that the Army Regulations are law or the equivalent of law.

Mr. DIBBLE. They are made law by statute in reference to matters of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not so understand, and believes the point of order to be well taken.

Mr. DIBBLE. Then I offer as a substitute that part of it which is not subject to the point of order, leaving out the part against which the point is made.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina will perfect his amendment.

Mr. DIBBLE. I propose after the words "enlisted men" to strike out from the word "including" down to the words "eighteen eighty-one" inclusive, so that it will read:

For the subsistence of Signal Service enlisted men and for commutation of rations of Signal Service enlisted men, $155,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the committee will vote it down.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 18, noes 63.

So the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MCADOO having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Regular supplies:
Fuel: For various offices on the United States military telegraph lines, and at stations of observation outside of Washington, D. C. (for fires the year round when needed), $6,000.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting in line 1420, immediately after the word "fuel," the words:
"Furnished to officers as authorized by section 8 of the act of Congress approved June 18, 1878."

Mr. RYAN. If the gentleman wants to strike out and insert that——

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. The motion is simply to insert.

Mr. RYAN. Because the language you are striking out is not "providing for officers," while the amendment you insert is for offices. One is for offices, the other for officers, as I understand it. I understand what the gentleman desires to get at; but it ought to be added to the section if you want to secure the object you have in view.

Mr. RANDALL. If I understand correctly the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, it relates to four officers who belong to the office and draw fuel from the Army.

Mr. RYAN. If that is all, I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania it simply places these officers on the same footing as all other officers of the Army.

Mr. RANDALL. If that is the case I have no objection; but if it applies to the four officers it does not belong here.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The committee informally rose and the Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7481) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887;

A bill (H. R. 5862) providing for the establishment of certain lighthouses and fog-signals, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 2732) to authorize the printing of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late John F. Miller.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. I have modified my amendment and ask the Clerk to read it as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting in line 1420, immediately after the word "fuel," the words "furnished to officers detailed from regular Army as authorized by section 8, act of Congress approved June 18, 1878."

Mr. RYAN. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that these officers get this from the appropriation for the Army.

Mr. RANDALL. If this is to be inserted, there should be a proviso that they shall not get it in both bills.

Mr. RYAN. They are already provided for in the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the four officers do get this under the Army bill.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Commutation of fuel: For commutation of fuel for not exceeding four hundred and seventy men of the Signal Corps on duty at the office of the Chief Signal Officer and at signal stations throughout the United States, at $8 per man per month, $45,000.

Mr. DIBBLE. I make the point of order on the words "at eight dollars per man per month."

This matter at present is entirely regulated by the department and the amount is $8 or $9, according to the expense.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman states correctly the regulation; but the regulation is not the law. The committee were advised to make a uniform rate. There is no reason why one of these enlisted men should get $8 for commutation of fuel and another $9. Can any one tell me any reason for the difference?

Mr. DIBBLE. The department recommended they should all get $9, but the committee put it that all shall get $8. There is no law at present in existence prescribing a rate at which they should commute. This does provide a rate at which they should commute, and therefore changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. COMPTON. Has the Chair decided on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks from the remarks which have been made on the point of order that it is well taken.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know of any law which this changes.

Mr. CUTCHEON. This question seems to constantly recur in the course of this bill as to whether Army regulations have the force of statutes or not. I supposed it had been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States that Army regulations, when promulgated by the Secretary of War, had the force of statutes. I believe that has been decided by the Supreme Court more than once.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question before the committee.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I thought the point of order was still pending.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Barracks and quarters:
For commutation of quarters to not exceeding four hundred and seventy enlisted men of the Signal Corps on duty at office of the Chief Signal Officer and at signal stations throughout the United States, at $15 per man per month, $84,000.

Mr. DIBBLE. I make the point of order against the words "at $15 per man per month" for the same reason as before. There is no law fixing the rate, and this changes existing law by prescribing that as the rate.

Mr. RANDALL. We have a right surely to say how the money should be expended and to put a limitation on it. Heretofore there has been paid for commutation of quarters to those persons who are assigned to service at the Chief Signal Office in this city $21 a month, to officers on the Pacific coast $20 a month, and to those everywhere else only $10 a month.

This discrimination is without justification, in my judgment, and we fix it all at $15 per month, making it equitable. It makes really a difference of only $108 in the amount appropriated; but it makes a provision which is just to these officers. Nobody can say that there ought to be $21 given in this city for commutation of quarters and that in the city of Baltimore only $10 should be given. The discrimination is altogether unjust.

Mr. DIBBLE. The commutation is at $21 per month at this place and certain other designated stations; at $20 per month on the Pacific coast and at $10 per month elsewhere, being regulated by the rates at which quarters can be procured. It is manifestly unjust to allow no more commutation at a place where lodgings are expensive than at some small town in the interior where lodgings are cheap. The commutation is regulated in that way and it is equitable to do so.

A man can get his quarters at one place for $10, and here in Washington it might cost him twenty-five or thirty dollars.

Mr. RANDALL. I can live cheaper here than in Philadelphia.

Mr. DIBBLE. That may be; but there is a difference in the expense of lodgings at different places, and it is equity to preserve this distinction. I made the point of order because there is no law regulating it, except the provision that it is to be regulated by the Army authorities. A point of order was raised against me by the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] a short time ago, and in doing so he said there was no provision for the purchase and sale of subsistence stores. I simply refer him to the Revised Statutes, section 1144.

Now, as to this, the point is plain and clear. This prescribes that the commutation of quarters shall be $15 per month. There is not only no such law, but there is no instance in the practice of the Department where commutation of quarters in this service is $15 a month. I say this with the rates and the estimates before me. So that this obviously takes a matter which is now a matter of discretion and makes it a matter of positive law, fixing a rate which is not at present the practice anywhere. I therefore contend for the point of order.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order is well taken, but not upon the ground contended for by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE]. The trouble about making this appropriation for commutation of fuel and quarters to enlisted men is that the whole of it is without any support or authority in law. The Army Regulations, which confer the power upon the head of the bureau, are regulations made by the officers of the Army and not by Congress. They have made rules binding on themselves under which they act, and then they claim that the rules which they have thus made have the force of existing law, because they are in conformity wiih the regulations. Now, there is no statute and no authority anywhere in the law for making commutations for quarters for enlisted men.

Only a short time ago the Committee on Military Affairs had occasion to go over this whole subject. We found one hundred and seventy clerks and sixty-six messengers provided for under these orders, $1 a day commutation, $1.20, and under certain circumstances $1.75 a day being allowed. They told us there was law for it. We showed them the rule of the House which provides that there shall be no appropriations made except in pursuance of existing law, and said to them "show us the law." They put their law clerks and investigators at work, and there came back to us the answer: "We can not find any law, but it is a practice that has grown up;" and therefore they thought it ought to keep on growing. We said "No; we shall not appropriate any money for commutation of rations;" and we struck it out of the bill, as it ought to be stricken out of this bill. Now, if there is no law at all upon the subject, and Congress is determined to fix a rate of commutation, of course you will make a law, but if you make a law upon an appropriation bill you will do it in violation of the rule.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, it seems a remarkable thing to any person at first thought that our Army has been running for a great many years upon a certain basis of commutation for rations, fuel, and quarters in an entirely illegal and unauthorized manner—in other words, that there has been no law for it. That there has been the authority of the regulations for it is unquestionable. There has always been that authority for it, but the gentleman from Wisconsin tells us that the Department officers have been unable to find any law for it. I think the reason of that is simply that the regulation itself is a law; that under the Constitution of the United States the President, the Executive, the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, is intrusted with the power of creating regulations for the Army which have the force of statute law.

I read what the Supreme Court says upon that question. It will be found cited in the RECORD, page 4294. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of The United States vs. Eliason, 16 Peters, 291, says that—

> The power of the Executive to establish rules and regulations for the government of the Army is undoubted. The power to establish implies the power to modify or repeal, or to create anew. The Secretary of War is the regular constitutional organ of the President for the administration of the military establishment of the nation, and the rules and orders published and promulgated through him must be received as the act of the Executive, and, as such, be binding upon all within the sphere of his legal and constitutional authority. Such regulations can not be questioned or defied because they may be thought unwise or mistaken.

Again, the Supreme Court in the case of Gratiot vs. The United States, 4 Howard, page 80, says:

> The Army regulations made pursuant to the authority conferred by Congress have the force of law.

Again, in section 2 of the act of July 23, 1878, it is provided that—

> The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause all the regulations of the Army and general orders now in force to be codified and published to the Army, and to defray the expense thereof out of the contingent fund of the Army.

Now, let us put all this together. First, the President, under the Constitution, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, through the Secretary of War, has power to make regulations which shall have the force of law. The Supreme Court has declared more than once that these regulations have the force of law. The act of 1878 authorized the Secretary of War to codify and publish to the Army the Army Regulations. The Secretary of War, under that authority, did codify and did publish the Army Regulations, and those Army Regulations have received the approval of the President, the Commander-in-Chief.

Now, if those regulations thus codified, thus promulgated, under the express sanction, authority, and direction of law, and approved by the Commander-in-Chief, have not, under this decision of the Supreme Court, the force of law, then it is not possible that there should be any such thing as Army regulations having the force of law. Under those regulations, thus codified and published, the rates of commutation have been established, as stated by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE]. Now this provision attempts to change the rates so established by regulation, and thereby it assumes to change the provisions of existing law; that is, existing Army regulations which have the force of law. I am unable to see where there is any break in the continuity of this argument.

Mr. BRAGG. These regulations are not published by authority of the President, nor approved by him.

Mr. CUTCHEON. They are published under his direction, are they not, through the Secretary of War?

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir; let me read:

> WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., February 17, 1881.
>
> The following codification of the "Regulations of the Army and General Orders" is approved and published for the instruction and government of the Army.
> ALEX. RAMSEY,
> Secretary of War.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But, Mr. Chairman, these regulations have been codified and published under the direct sanction and authority of the law of Congress of 1878.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? The gentleman from Wisconsin maintains that the provision is out of order for one reason and the gentleman from Michigan holds that it is out of order for another reason. Now, if the two gentlemen agree in their conclusions, what matter as to the arguments on which the conclusions rest?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ROGERS). If these Army regulations have the force of law further than for the regulation of the Army, then the Chair does not see why the Secretary of War or the President might not by such a regulation repeal an act of Congress. In the opinion of the Chair these regulations are law for the regulation of the Army, but not for the regulation of Congress; they are not law within the meaning of the rule. The Chair thinks the point of order well taken, because a limitation is as much a new provision of law as if it were in any other form.

Mr. RYAN. I desire to offer an amendment to come in at the end of line 1480. It was offered a few minutes ago by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], but under a misapprehension I suggested that he withdraw it. I move to amend by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 1480, the following:

> That the regular Army officers herein authorized to be detailed for the Signal Service shall receive their pay and allowances from the appropriation for the support of the Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

> That no part of the appropriations made for the Signal Service by this act shall be used for the maintenance or support of a school of instruction nor of the military post at Fort Myer, Va.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph just read. There is now established by law, or in accordance with law, a school of instruction at Fort Myer.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman show me the law which authorizes it?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I say it is not in violation of law; it is in accordance with law; and for the moment I will simply refer the gentleman to the last clause in the letter of the Secretary of War on this subject:

> But under the laws now in force, to abandon it [Fort Myer] as a military post, now devoted to this special use, would, in my judgment, be unwise.

Fort Myer has been used, not in violation of law, but in accordance with law, as a school; and now this paragraph proposes to abolish that school. When I say the proposition is to abolish it, I know of what I speak. I admit that the provision is very cunningly drawn, and the words which would have been ordinarily used for the purpose are not used in this paragraph. But the committee will remember that as the various provisions in this bill relating to the Signal Service have been read and as objections have been made on the ground that they were new legislation, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has remarked from time to time that this or that provision had been inserted "because we intend to abolish in a future paragraph the school of instruction at Fort Myer." So that the legislation appearing here on every page relating to the Signal Service—objected to and the objections in some cases sustained—was simply smoothing the way for what the gentleman himself has spoken of as the abolition of Fort Myer and the school there.

I know it may be said that this provision does not include a direct proposition to abolish or do away with this institution; it is only provided that there shall be no sustenance given to it, no appropriation made for it. In this particular a distinction may be sought to be drawn. But I wish to suggest that in this high court, the Congress of the United States, we should at some time in the construction of our rules and in our other action rise to such dignity at least as would be demanded in the court of a justice of the peace in the Western States having a question under discussion by two pettifoggers. I do not ask you to go beyond that, but I do ask that this House shall now rise at least to the dignity of that position. The rule which we have adopted here was a good one—that the Appropriations Committee should not include in any regular appropriation bill new legislation. Why? Because when matters of legislation are introduced in this way there is no proper opportunity for consideration and discussion. Take the present instance. No such proposition as that embraced in this paragraph has ever been submitted to any committee; no committee has considered it; no man here is fully acquainted with the far-reaching purpose of this new legislation. I say that legislation on appropriation bills is hateful; it is despotic; it ought not to be tolerated under any circumstances; and in view of the violations of the rule which have been attempted I think there will be no repeal of this new rule.

But to come to the question. It is this: It intends, and is offered for that purpose, to do away with an institution which now exists. I say upon its face it has that purpose. I say more: By looking at the text of the preceding language, and I so understand from the gentleman from Pennsylvania, it will be seen it can have no other meaning. It has no other purpose, sir, than to do away with the school of instruction which is now carried on at Fort Myer. He has avowed it. The preceding paragraph admits of no other construction.

Shall we say here we will do by indirection what we can not do directly? If we said Fort Myer as a school of instruction shall be abandoned, there would be no question as to what it meant. I say this legislation means something and is enunciated for some purpose. It is avowed by its mover to be offered for the purpose of abandoning Fort Myer as a school of instruction. I stand here to protest in this House you can not allow that to be done by indirection which can not be directly done under the law. In any court of law in which you, Mr. Chairman, have ever practiced, presided over by men learned in the law, that would be the decision of this case.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no purpose of concealment in this paragraph. The committee adopted only the expression necessary to avoid appropriating for the continuance of the school of instruction at Fort Myer. Two years and more ago Congress created a commission, and that commission as far as I know without dissent, three members of the Senate and three of the House, recommended the abolition of this school of instruction.

There has been no pettifogging about it. I am not a lawyer. I do not belong to that profession where pettifogging prevails. The gentleman from Ohio has had more experience than I have had in that particular. I belong to a different class.

I say here, Mr. Chairman, that we have only said in another part of the bill that we would not appropriate for more than four hundred and seventy enlisted men. We only say here that none of this money shall be spent for the continuanee of this school at Fort Myer. A former occupant of the chair decided we had the right to say none of this money should be expended for an excess of four hundred and seventy enlisted men. I ask for a decision.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The distinguished chairman concedes the point of order is well taken.

Mr. RANDALL. No, I do not.

Mr. CUTCHEON. He seems to concede it, because he said the commission have recommended Fort Myer shall be abolished.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman can not be so dull as not to see what is meant.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The only inference which can be drawn from his language is that the commission intended to abolish it. And if it is intended to abolish it as it exists now under the law, this then must be a change of the existing law.

Mr. RANDALL. It is intended to give no money for this.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I never at any time undertake to talk but the gentleman and his friends on that side break in on me.

Mr. RANDALL. We are in the habit of thinking you are that man.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If the gentleman exercised more courtesy on the floor it would be better.

Mr. RANDALL. I will give you courtesy whenever it is required.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Then do not break in on me.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania says this provision is put in here because the commission has unanimously recommended that Fort Myer shall be abolished. Now, the only inference from that is this was put in here to abolish the school of instruction at Fort Myer. If that be the case, then it is a change of existing law, and of course it is contrary to the rules of the House to put it in this appropriation bill. It is an attempt to do by indirection what the gentleman knows and what every other gentleman knows can not be done directly.

He says in effect, "We will not murder you, but you shall not have anything to eat, and we will starve you to death."

That is the effect of it.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have a decision.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, this is a question which in my judgment is important enough to justify a fair and calm consideration. I do belong to the legal profession, and this is a question of law, and I am glad, Mr. Chairman, of having an opportunity to address myself to a lawyer in support of my views upon the subject of the legal construction herein involved.

There is no higher or better settled principle of law than that a body like this can not do by indirection what it may not do directly.

Now, it is admitted, sir, that if there was a provision incorporated in this bill to abolish Fort Myer it would be obnoxious to the point of order of my colleague from Ohio. Is it not, then, a little singular that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, while frankly and substantially admitting that he can not do that thing by direct enactment, comes here and professes an intention to get through with this bill an act of Congress, a provision that by indirection will accomplish that purpose? I do not wonder that the gentleman boasts that he is not a lawyer. I am glad that he has relieved the legal profession of that responsibility which might possibly attach by such a suggestion as he has made.

Now, my own opinion is, and I give it only for what it is worth and submit it to you, Mr. Chairman, that Fort Myer is established by law just as specifically as Fortress Monroe or any other fort or arsenal that belongs to this Government. How do we establish these places? We do not enact a statute that there shall be a fort upon a given point; but we make a provision, and I call the attention of the Chair to the statutes in force in regard to Fort Myer, and will send it up for the benefit of the honorable chairman of the committee, and I cite you to the several statutes which one by one have made appropriations for the buildings, for the roadways out there, for the grading, for the approaches, and for the expenditures in all of the various directions that Congress may enact to build up a fort or fortification.

I do not believe there has been any more decided and specific legislation adopted by Congress for the erection of any other fort than that. It is there by act of Congress. It is there because Congress directed its building, directed its dedication, directed that it should be devoted to the education of these young men; and I do not believe that West Point or the Naval Academy at Annapolis was ever builded in any other way than by that sort of legislation which made appropriations for specific purposes that ultimately worked out the result of the Naval Academy or the school at West Point. So that now, if it is found by the Chair that the result of this failure of appropriations, this effort to abolish the school at Fort Myer, thereby vacates one of the forts belonging to the Government, one of the places of our Government, one of the points where the flag of the Government floats over a reservation of the Government, then I submit that this appropriation bill seeks by indirection to change existing law.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, the difficulty about the argument of the gentleman from Ohio is that there is nothing in this bill that affects the status of Fort Myer as a Government fortification at all. We do not deny any appropriation for Fort Myer as such. Fort Myer belongs to the War Department of the United States; it is controlled by the Secretary of War precisely like all the other forts of the United States, though it has been used of late years by this branch of the Army for a school of instruction. Still all that this bill does is to say that the money herein appropriated shall no longer be used for a school of instruction at Fort Myer. Then if that should be the judgment of Congress the Secretary of War will devote it to any other purpose that he can or any other fort in the United Sates.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not familiar with precedents on this point; but is of opinion that the point of order ought to be overruled, on the ground that this is a mere direction on the part of the committee that they will not give any more money for the support of this institution. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

This provision of the bill declares:

That no part of the appropriations made for the Signal Service by this act shall be used for the maintenance or support of a school of instruction nor of the military post at Fort Myer, Virginia.

Now, sir, and gentlemen of the committee, if there is anything of importance connected with our military service that has been valuable in the past and that will be valuable in the future it is the instruction as to military signaling, and this post, this school, this fort, is the only one where this system of instruction is established.

By some strange misapprehension I concede the commission appointed to investigate these questions did report in favor of its abolition; but, sir, when I say to the chairman of this committee and to this committee that the destruction of this school accomplishes no good purpose whatever, I say what every well-informed man must know. When I say that it is destructive of the best purposes for which we can use our money in the direction of military affairs, I state what all must recognize to be an obvious truth. And further—I was going to make a stronger remark, but I will not do it.

This school is needed; and when they do what I have said, they do one thing more. It costs the country to-day with the appropriations which have been made $40,000; and the abolition of this school of Fort Myer would cost the country $40,000 more than it will cost if the committee had made no innovation with regard to this school at all. I am reminded that the other day when my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] was appealing for a continuance of schools that I advised him it was not worth while. I think perhaps he would now give me the same advice and tell me it is not worth while to press this matter. But I will say this is the effect of it. At an expense of more than $40,000 this committee proposes by new legislation, of a kind which they dare not express, to do an irreparable injury to the best interests of the country. It is useless, it is said to me, to appeal to the House, because as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations demands the members shall vote so they will vote. Still I am unwilling to rest here in silence when this injury is illegally done and at such a cost, is being done for no purpose whatever.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for a vote.

Mr. HERBERT. I simply desire to say this in reply to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR]. The joint commission on the Surveys and Signal Service disagreed on many things, but were unanimous on this. Here is a paragraph from the report made by Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. LOWRY, and it was assented to by the other three gentlemen of the commission, who went further in that direction than this report went:

The testimony shows that an intelligent young man of good education can, in the period of six weeks or less, acquire the use of instruments necessary to be used at the stations, take observations, and make the reports required. The remainder of the six months is spent in military drill and in studies that are not necessary to the practical work of an observer.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Is not that remark made with reference to scientific instruction?

Mr. HERBERT. It is made in reference to Fort Myer.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. It is made in reference to scientific signaling.

Mr. HERBERT. If the gentleman will allow me to read the paragraph through he will understand it.

Military drill is not necessary to qualify observers, and they are not likely in any case or at any time to put in practice the military knowledge thus acquired, as in case of war it is not supposed that this meteorological work will be dispensed with. So that the commission agree that Fort Myer should be abolished as a school of instruction.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is that signed by a military man?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If this change is adopted, what provision is made or is proposed to be made for such a school of instruction? It seems to me conceded upon all hands that it is necessary there should exist such a school of instruction for the young men who are to enter the Signal Service. That being so, what objection is there to the continuance of Fort Myer as such a school? It may be true, as has just been read by the gentleman from Alabama, that military training is not necessary. It is not absolutely necessary for the success of those young men in the duties they are called upon to perform in the Signal Service, but it is certainly very valuable, and is calculated to make them capable of enduring the fatigue, the hardships, and the privations that they are sometimes called upon to endure in the service.

I wish to read a paragraph from a letter of the Secretary of War upon this subject:

If the Signal Service is to be continued under existing laws, I can not recommend the abandonment of Fort Myer as a military post.

I think such a statement coming from the Secretary of War, under whose immediate care and control this bureau exists, ought to be considered by this House before voting upon this subject. The letter goes on to say:

The work there conducted is an essential part of the present system of instruction in that corps.

If the work there conducted is an essential part of the present system of instruction, until there has been some legislative provision for another point at which such work may be as well conducted why will this House lay violent hands upon that fort? He says:

The work there conducted is an essential part of the present system of instruction in that corps, which would have to be carried on elsewhere and at increased expense.

I know that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is always seeking an opportunity to economize, to do things for this Government at a less expense; and yet this provision in this bill which he sustains is, as stated by the Secretary of War, one that must result in increased expense.

Mr. RYAN. I suppose a man who knows about as much of the needs of the Army as anybody is General Sheridan. He says that this school of instruction for Army purposes is wholly unnecessary. General Drum, the Adjutant-General of the Army, says the same thing. There is an order issued by the general of the Army which requires a school of instruction for the purpose of Army telegraphy and signal service in nearly all the forts of the United States, and in some of the forts it is very extensively taught; so that General Sheridan says he has made already ample provision for instruction in Army signal service within the Army proper itself.

Mr. RANDALL. I think I would take General Sheridan's opinion as soon as I would take the opinion of the Secretary of War upon such a subject as this.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That is, you would take the opinion of either when it agrees with your own. [Laughter.]

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have read an extract from a general order showing that there is instruction given at these stations.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Extract from General Orders No. 12, current series, Headquarters of the Army, Adjutant-General's Office, amending paragraph 2575, Army Regulations.]

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 25, 1886.

General Orders No. 12.]

* * * * * * *

2575. In times of peace a detail of not less than one officer and three enlisted men will be kept constantly under instructions and practice in military signaling at each post in the United States until the officers and all enlisted men who have sufficient intelligence are proficient in the use of the English Morse code, with flag, torch, and heliograph. By command of Lieutenant-General Sheridan:

R. C. DRUM, Adjutant-General.

The question was taken on the pending amendment; and there were—ayes 26, noes 70.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. No quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, the point is made that there is no quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. It is too late.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman from Ohio made the point immediately. Is there to be no attention paid to what goes on on this side of the House?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I made the point instantly and loudly, but I was unable to be heard.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I do not wish to cut the gentleman off, but I desire that the committee rise now so that the House may act upon the report of the committee of conference on the consular and diplomatic bill.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to.

The House accordingly rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the consular and diplomatic bill.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6392) "making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3 and 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

WM. R. COX,
W. W. RICE,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,

R. 6392, entitled "An act making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, and for other purposes," submit the following in explanation of the action of the conference committee in the report herewith submitted:

Amendment number 1 provides the sums severally appropriated in the bill shall be in full compensation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

Amendment number 2 appropriates $20,000 instead of $15,000, as provided by the House bill, for chargés d'affaires ad interim and diplomatic officers abroad.

Amendment number 3 restores the appropriation of $500 as passed by the House, instead of $800 as provided by Senate amendment, for an interpreter to the legation and consulate-general in Bangkok, Siam.

Amendment 4 restores the Arabic clerk at the consulate at Tangiers provided for by the House.

Amendment 7 restores the appropriation of $15,000 to meet the necessary expenses attendant upon the execution of the neutrality laws as provided for by the House. It also agrees to the appropriation of $50,000 recommended by the Senate to enable the President to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the diplomatic and consular service and to extend the commercial and other interests of the United States.

Amendment 8 makes the salary of the consul-general at Halifax $3,500 instead of $3,000, as provided by the House.

Amendment number 9 specifies the total sum provided for salaries of consuls, vice-consuls, and commercial agents.

Amendment 10 restores the classification of consuls to the law for the present year with the exception of the consulship at Apia, which is increased $500.

Amendment 11 provides that in the estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, there shall be estimated for specifically, under classified consulates, all consulates and commercial agencies where the fees collected or compensation allowed for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, exceeds $1,000.

Amendment 12 specifies the total sum appropriated for clerks at consulates, and provides that the sum to be allowed at each consulate shall not exceed the rate specified in the bill.

PERRY BELMONT,
WM. R. COX,
W. W. RICE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print some remarks upon the conference report.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The report of the committee of conference was then agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. REAGAN in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose, the point had been made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] that no quorum had voted. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. RANDALL.

The tellers took their places; but before the count was concluded,

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR said: I withdraw the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The point as to a quorum being withdrawn, the noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

National cemeteries:

For national cemeteries: For maintaining and improving national cemeteries, including fuel for superintendents of national cemeteries, pay of laborers, purchase of tools and materials, and head-stones for deceased soldiers of the regular Army, $100,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend by inserting after the word "laborers," in line 1491, the words "and other employés." This amendment is offered at the request of General Holabird, the head of the Quartermaster's Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Head-stones for graves of soldiers: For continuing the work of furnishing head-stones for unmarked graves of Union soldiers, sailors, and marines in national, post, city, and village cemeteries, and other burial places, under the acts of March 3, 1873, and February 3, 1879, and for supplying head-stones for unmarked graves of soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Revolution, war of 1812, Mexican, and other wars, not heretofore provided for, $45,000.

Mr. MCADOO. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After "marines," in line 1499, insert "including all who have died in the regular naval service at any time."

After the word "cemeteries," in line 1500, insert "naval cemeteries at navy-yards and stations of the United States."

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] will let us have a vote at once on the amendment I will vote with him.

Mr. RYAN. If this proposition prevails, the amount of money appropriated by the paragraph will not be sufficient.

Mr. RANDALL. These persons who have died in the naval service ought to have head-stones.

Mr. RYAN. Then we ought to increase the amount of the appropriation

Mr. RANDALL. I think not.

The amendment of Mr. MCADOO was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of the fees and expenses of United States marshals and deputies, $675,000.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I wish to inquire how far short of the estimate the amount here proposed to be appropriated is.

Mr. RANDALL. It is fully up to the estimate.

Mr. REED, of Maine. What was the appropriation last year for marshals and deputies?

Mr. RANDALL. We have given fully up to the estimate. Last year there was an appropriation and a deficiency.

Mr. REED, of Maine. You have not here covered the amount of the deficiency of last year?

Mr. RANDALL. We have not.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I understand that these figures are $100,000 less than the actual expenditure of 1885.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know how much less they are; but I know the estimate has been given in full. [Cries of "Read!" "Read!"]

Mr. REED, of Maine. I thank gentlemen for calling for me so loudly. [Laughter.] In response to what seems to be the general desire, I will say that I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has some explanation to make for proposing a smaller appropriation than the actual expenditure of last year. As I understand, these expenditures are all made in pursuance of law. If that is the case, it becomes the duty of the House sitting in Committee of the Whole on an appropriation bill to make the appropriations necessary to carry out the law; and I am unable to see any reason why the full amount should not be put in this bill; for I take it for granted that after the frequent exposures we have had here in the House of this business of appropriating, for ulterior purposes, less than the actual expenses of the Government, it will not be attempted very much oftener.

Mr. RANDALL. I have only to say that we make appropriations in a large degree upon information derived from the Departments, and in this case we have given the full amount estimated by the Department as necessary for the next fiscal year.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, it is notorious to every man who knows anything about the legal business of this country that the courts of the United States have been embarrassed in every possible way for the last few years by a failure of appropriations. Courts have had to stop, important suits have had to be postponed, prisoners have had to lie in jail because juries could not be impaneled, public buildings in which the courts have been held have been neglected, and all because the legislative power has failed to make the necessary appropriations to carry out existing laws. We have had in these matters a series of deficiency bills. It seems to me we ought to come to an end of this system.

The course of procedure which is adopted always in the interest of "economy" is to pay no attention to the estimates of the Departments if they are not satisfactory, and if they are satisfactory to cling to them and present them to the House as arguments. But after all, the criterion in determining the amount of such an appropriation as this ought to be what the existing law of the land requires. We ought to be as obedient to the law as we ask other people to be. Yet here is a deficiency bill in 1885 of $100,000 for marshals, $40,000 for pay of district attorneys, $20,000 for clerks, $20,000 for commissioners, $50,000 for jurors, and $100,000 for witnesses—$330,000 in all. And the amounts for the succeeding year, of which I could give details, are very nearly the same. Now, is this sort of thing creditable?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Maine will allow me to say that he understates the deficiency. For witnesses in the United States courts, the amount appropriated for 1886 was $550,000 in the first instance, $135,000 in the urgent deficiency bill, and $50,000 recommended in the deficiency bill proper, making $735,000 in all. Yet this bill proposes to appropriate for the coming year $550,000, which is $185,000 less than has been spent for the current year.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Now, here is a deficiency that stares us right in the face. We propose deliberately to make provision for a deficiency bill. The courts are hampered from one end of the country to the other by reason of legislation according to methods which certainly can not be called "economy." It is "economy" on an appropriation bill, but not economy for the Treasury. After all, if we really mean business, the place where economy makes itself felt is in the disbursements of the Treasury, not in these empty figures of an appropriation bill.

Mr. RANDALL. It has been perfectly well understood, Mr. Chairman, and admitted, that there has been great extravagance in connection with the administration of justice. I do not know myself how in the world we could do differently than we have in giving the full amount estimated for this purpose by those in charge of the matter. The estimate of the Attorney-General's Department compared with past expenditure would indicate that those in charge of the Department of Justice expect to run that Department on much less money next year. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to strike out the last word. I think I can explain to the gentleman from Maine why it is possible for the Department to estimate a less amount for the ensuing year than has been required for the current year or for the preceding year. It is well known to gentlemen who have investigated the subject that court expenses are subject to great expansion and might be subject to great reduction by careful and proper administration of the law.

I will give the gentleman an instance. In the matter of preliminary examinations before United States commissioners the custom has prevailed for many years until the incoming of the present administration of bringing prisoners to the seat of government, or the place where the court is held, or having one place only in the district where preliminary examinations are made. It has given rise to great expense in the bringing of these prisoners sometimes 200 or 300 miles and keeping them for several days, and for marshals' fees going and returning. All these expenses have tended largely to increase, and unnecessarily, the cost of the administration of justice.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Will the gentleman answer me a question right here?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly, if I can.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, there has been given to the marshal of the great district of New York city the paltry sum of $1,500 to carry on the three or four courts there. The marshal was here on Saturday last asking for a deficiency to pay jurors' fees now due to the extent of $1,300. There is that amount of money due for the payment of jurors who have actually served in that city, not one dollar of which has been appropriated for by the Appropriations Committee, of which I am a member.

Mr. SPRINGER. That will be included in the deficiency bill for this year.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. No; it has not been included in the deficiency bill for this year, and that is what I refer to.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I hope the gentleman from New York will allow the gentleman from Illinois to finish his explanation, because it is full of interesting detail.

Mr. SPRINGER. On the incoming of the present administration, Mr. Chairman, the Attorney-General made an order requiring persons arrested to have their preliminary examinations taken at the nearest commissioner, and this order has already very largely reduced, and will still further reduce, the expenses of marshals.

I will give the gentleman an instance which came under my own observation in the Territory of Dakota. That is a very large Territory. It so happened when the court was sitting at Bismarck the preliminary examinations were held at Yankton, and when the court was held at Yankton they took the prisoners to Bismarck, and in this way they were carried to the farthest distance for preliminary examinations, vastly increasing the expense to the Government. The administration desires to reduce expenses in this particular by reforming this among many other abuses. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I will withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I wish to speak against your formal amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I will withdraw it!

Mr. REED, of Maine. Thank you. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Illinois has presented the argument to give full weight to views on that side. I am glad to hear it, because it shows the importance of the matter to which I have called the attention of the House. And I call the attention of the House to it in no partisan spirit. It is a matter of as little consequence to any one on this side as it is to any one on that side.

The answer the gentleman from Illinois makes is that we are going to economize because accused persons are going to be brought to different places to commissioners instead of to one place.

Now, if the administration purposes to rely upon that for economy they are going to find themselves terribly mistaken. They are not going to economize a dollar, but will succeed only in interfering with the administration of justice most seriously in many places. But, after all, the whole item to which the gentleman alludes is only $20,000——

Mr. SPRINGER. No; this relates to fees of marshals as well.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There is not a living soul here who does not know that the courts of the United States have been hampered in their work, and there is not a man who does not know under this proposition they will be hampered still further. Now, do you want to carry out this same system for the purpose of showing false figures on this appropriation bill? You will have to come up to it on a deficiency bill, and in addition to that you will clog the legal business of the country for an entire year.

Gentlemen speak about expenditures. Why the expenditures of the Department of Justice are regulated by law, and the money has got to be paid; the only effect of this is to hamper the courts, to compel the discharge of jurors, to keep accused persons in prison, and there is no sense in it.

I move, therefore, that the word "six" be stricken out of this paragraph and the word "seven" be inserted in line 1763 of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment, so as to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Maine.

I desire to state further, Mr. Chairman, in the same line of argument I was pursuing a while ago, that the system of arrests for trivial offenses has grown to such an enormous extent that it has vastly increased the expenditures of the courts of the country, and I will give an instance. At one time in the State of Texas it occurred that all of the voters in one county were subpœnaed to appear as witnesses in one case, and were brought to attend court in another county 40 miles distant, when the judge who tried the case said that twenty witnesses were ample to prove all of the facts in the case. This was done, of course, to make fees for the officials. It occurred also in one of the counties of Alabama on another occasion, where it appeared that during one or two years' time every man in the county had been arrested for some offense and taken long distances to be formally examined before some United States commissioner.

Mr. REED, of Maine? When was that?

Mr. SPRINGER. It was about three years ago.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That was before this deficiency occurred.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; but I am showing the system that has caused these deficiencies; and these arrests were made for the sole purpose of making fees for the marshals not for the purpose of enforcing the law.

Now, there has been under the last administration, and I will give the gentleman in charge of the Department at that time credit for his purpose, under Mr. Brewster, a determined effort, in fact he directed his energies to breaking up these practices.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Still there was a deficiency of $100,000.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York (to Mr. SPRINGER). Have you not a bill to pay marshals' salaries?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have a bill pending in this House, but it takes a long time to reform all of these abuses. They have been reformed to some extent under former administrations, and are still being reformed; and I maintain that this amount will be largely in excess of the necessities of an honest and economical administration of the service.

Mr. RANDALL. I have only to say again to this House that the bill, except in a single item, gives every dollar that has been asked. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I must say, Mr. Chairman, that in so plain a matter as that I do not think we ought to be guided by the head of a Department. The gentleman from Pennsylvania expressed his preference for other authorities than the head of a Department only a few moments ago, and I hope a number of us present will rise superior to the Department of Justice.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. REED, of Maine, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 79.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no quorum, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. REED, of Maine, and Mr. RANDALL were appointed tellers.

Mr. REED. I withdraw the demand.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fees of clerks, $175,000.

Mr. RYAN. I move to strike out in line 1767 the words "seventy-five" and insert "ninety-five." The deficiency for the current year is $20,000, and I propose to increase this amount so as to cover that deficiency.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I offer an amendment to come in after line 1768.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after line 1768:

"But no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay fees of United States marshal, clerk, or district attorney upon any writ or bench warrant for the arrest of any person or persons who may be indicted by any United States grand jury where such person or persons is under recognizance taken by or before any United States commissioner or other officer requiring the appearance of such person or persons before the court in which such indictment is found, to answer the charge upon which such indictment is found, and when such recognizance has not been forfeited."

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the point of order until an explanation is given of the amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask that the amendment be reported again, and that we may have order while it is read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. GROSVENOR. My purpose in offering this amendment is to get rid of an abuse which has come to my personal knowledge in the matter of the administration of justice in the United States courts. Persons are bound over by United States commissioners to appear before the grand jury on the first day of the term of court, and to abide the order of the court, and not to leave. But the practice has grown up all over the country that the moment the grand jury returns the indictment a præcipe is filed by the district attorney, a warrant is issued by the clerk, and the marshal goes out and arrests the party somewhere—perhaps in the adjoining room, perhaps at his home waiting notice that his presence is required.

Now, I do not think the law at this time justifies that sort of taxation of costs. It is a system by which large sums of money are made every year by these officers—I have no doubt a very significant and important sum of money. It is clearly in my judgment a violation of the principle of existing law, and I offer this amendment so that hereafter there will be no question about it.

Mr. BLAND. Suppose a party is held for one offense and indicted for another?

Mr. GROSVENOR. That case is saved by the terms of the amendment. It says when he is under recognizance for the same offense for which he is indicted.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Would not the United States district attorney have to go into court and take a forfeiture of the recognizance under which the defendant was held? That is the law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That may be the law. But within ten days I saw five bench warrants issued from a United States court and a large sum of money made in the form of costs; and the judge of our district court, Judge Sage, called my attention to it, and to the fact that it was an abuse. He said he had no power over it except when it came under his immediate observation; and he warned the clerk in my presence not to do it any more. The purpose of this amendment is to make that plain, so that hereafter unnecessary costs shall not be made. This is a matter of no consequence to me personally; but it is an abuse which ought to be remedied.

Mr. OATES. I ask that the amendment be again read.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know whether I can accomplish the result I desire in the committee or not. What I wish is that we shall extend the sitting of the House till 6 o'clock or such time as a vote may be reached.

The CHAIRMAN. That will require the action of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I am under obligation to gentlemen who have facilitated the passage of this bill to-day to move at five minutes to 5 the committee rise. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. REAGAN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the sundry civil bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent that the hour for adjournment be extended to-day till 6 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HEPBURN. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the hour be extended till a conference report can be presented.

Mr. HEPBURN. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. BURROWS. I suppose the gentleman from Pennsylvania merely wants to extend the time long enough to finish the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir; and we can vote to-morrow.

There being no further objection, the order extending the sitting of the House till 6 o'clock was agreed to.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I present the report of a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, the amendments to this bill are so numerous——

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. STRUBLE. I rise to ask unanimous consent to take up a bill——

The SPEAKER. There is a report before the House.

Mr. WILSON. The amendments to this bill were so numerous that the committee, having just concluded their conference, have not had time to prepare the statement which is required by the rule. I therefore ask unanimous consent to present that statement hereafter, merely remarking now in comprehensive terms that we have just about "split the difference" between the House and the Senate on the Senate amendments to the bill.

There being no objection, the request of Mr. WILSON was agreed to.

The report of the committee of conference was then adopted.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Subsequently Mr. WILSON filed the following report:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6397) making appropriation to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1887 submit the following written statement in explanation of the action recommended on each of the amendments by the conference committee in their report, acted upon by the House June 30, 1886, namely:

On amendments 1, 2, and 4, provides for a clerk at $1,500, instead of a clerk and assistant secretary at $1,500; strikes out one stenographer at $1,200, and corrects the total of the paragraph.

On amendments 5 and 6, strikes out proposed increase of one clerk at $1,000 in the assessor's office.

On amendments 8 and 9, provides $2,000 for services necessary for preparing an exhibit of all outstanding indebtedness.

On amendments 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15, relating to the attorney's office, fixes the salary of the special assistant attorney at $1,100 and that of the messenger at $200 and the amount for contingent expenses at $300.

On amendments 22, 23, and 24, leaves the paragraph touching the engineer's office just as it was passed by the House.

On amendments 26, 27, 32, 33, and 34, relating to improvements and repairs, fixes the amount as follows: For repairs to concrete pavements, $65,000; for materials for permit work, $60,000; and for work on the sundry avenues and streets, $266,000.

On amendments 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, and 41, relating to the repair and maintenance of bridges, places the bridges under the control and supervision of the District commissioners, and appropriates $10,000 for their repair and maintenance.

On amendments 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, and 47, leaves the paragraph touching the Washington Asylum just as it was passed by the House, except that $2,000 is added for the purchase of a dummy engine.

On amendments 48, 49, 50, 51, and 52, relating to the Reform School, fixes the pay of the engineer at $396, limits the amount that may be expended for additional labor to $900, and places the expenditure of the fund for support of the school in the discretion of the commissioners.

On amendments 55, 56, and 57, relating to the Industrial Home School, places the expenditure of the fund for maintenance of inmates under the discretion of the District commissioners, appropriates $3,500 for the erection of a new building, and strikes out proposed sum of $1,000 for heating apparatus.

On amendment 58, makes the sum for support of indigent insane of the District $75,132, as passed by the House.

On amendments 68, 69, and 70, touching streets, fixes the amount for current work on county roads and suburban streets at $40,000, as originally passed by the House; and gives $30,000 for opening and extending suburban streets, with the provision that the appropriation shall not be construed to authorize the widening of any streets now laid out and opened.

On amendments 71 and 73, fixes the amount for street-lamps at $100,000, and provides that $10,000 thereof may be used for providing electric lights.

the number of privates of class 1 at 105, as passed by the House; fixes the pay of the patrol-wagon drivers at $360 each; gives $10,000 for miscellaneous and contingent expenses, and $5,500 for the additional work at the sixth and seventh precinct stations.

On amendments 83, 34, 85, 86, 87, 88, and 89, touching the fire department, fixes the pay of firemen, tillermen, and hostlers at $840 each, being an increase of $40 each over the current law, fixes the pay of the veterinary surgeon at $400, gives $3,000 for repairs of engine-houses instead of $2,500 as passed by the House, and strikes out the provision of $1,200 for a pumping engine.

On amendments 90, 91, 93, 94, and 95, touching the telegraph and telephone service, provides for two repair men at $720 and two laborers at $300 each, as was proposed by the House, gives $7,000 for general supplies instead of $6,500, &c., and strikes out the sum of $7,500 for laying underground the telegraph and telephone wires.

On amendments 96 and 97, touching the courts, provides $1,400 for United States marshal's fees.

On amendments 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, and 116, touching the public schools, makes the total appropriation for public schools $572,750, being $11,100 more than was passed by the House, limits the number of teachers to six hundred and twenty, gives $2,500 instead of $2,000 for night schools, makes certain changes as to the assignment of janitors to the various school buildings, involving an increase of the sum given therefor by the House of $600; leaves the amount for repairs and improvements of school buildings at $20,000 as passed by the House, and gives $50,000 for new school buildings, being $10,000 more than was passed by the House, thus making the said $7,100.

On amendments 117, 118, and 119, touching miscellaneous expenses, fixes the amount of rent for district offices at $3,600, being the same as was passed by the House, and makes some verbal additions to the text of the paragraph.

On amendments 120, 121, 122, 123, and 124, touching the health department, provides for two clerks at $1,200 each, one clerk at $1,000, and strikes out proposed amount of $400 for temporary clerk-hire; gives $3,500 instead of $2,500 for contingent expenses, and $15,000 for removal of garbage, as passed by House, omitting $5,000 for ashes.

On amendments 125, 126, and 127, touching the water department, provides for one inspector at $3 per day, as was passed by the House, and gives $75,000 for engineers and firemen, &c., being $10,000 more than was passed by the House.

On amendments 128, 129, and 130, makes section 2 of the bill read as follows: "That said commissioners shall not make requisitions upon the appropriations from the Treasury of the United States for a larger amount during the fiscal year 1887 than they make on the appropriations arising from the revenues, including drawback certificates, of said District. And all the drawback certificates heretofore or hereafter received for general taxes under the acts of June 27, 1879, and July 5, 1884, and paid or deposited in the Treasury, shall be considered and treated as money in the keeping and settlement of accounts between the United States and the District of Columbia under this or any other act, and one-half of the same, less any amounts heretofore credited, shall be credited to said District as such, together with all other revenues, as received, upon the books of the Treasury."

The amendments of the Senate not enumerated herein were concurred in by the House, and were therefore not considered in the conference.

The total amount of the bill as agreed upon is $3,721,047.99, being $102,180 less than was passed by the Senate, $109,385 more than was passed by the House, $118,821 less than the estimate submitted, and $98,364.79 more than was appropriated for 1886.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STRUBLE. I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill No. 149, and to put the same upon its passage.

Mr. MORRISON. Regular order.

Mr. STRUBLE. I desire to say, if the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. This is the forfeiture bill.

Mr. STRUBLE. It is a bill upon which gentlemen who differed the other day have agreed on an amendment.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. There is no disagreement about it now; all parties are agreed; and I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER. Is the demand for the regular order withdrawn?

Mr. MORRISON. I call for the regular order.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. REAGAN in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9478) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 1768 insert the following:

"But no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the fees of United States marshals, clerks, or district attorneys upon any writ or bench warrant for the arrest of any person or persons who may be indicted by any United States grand jury where such person or persons are under recognizance taken by or before any United States commissioner or other officer authorized by law, requiring the presence of such person or persons before any court in which such indictment is found, to answer the charge upon which such indictment is found, and where such recognizance has not been forfeited or said defendant is not in default: Provided, That the court in which such indictment is pending orders a warrant to issue."

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the amendment by adding to it the following:

Or in payment of a per diem to any such officer for attendance in court except for days when business is actually transacted in the court.

Mr. Chairman, under a practice which has grown up in some courts—I hope it is not universal—the court will sometimes remain in session somewhat indefinitely, being formally open, but without the transaction of business; and upon such days the marshal and clerks receive per diem. It seems to me this was not the intention of the law. The purpose was that the per diem should be paid only when the court is actually and necessarily open for the transaction of business and when business is transacted.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, the practice that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] seeks to cure is a clear, positive abuse; there is no question about that. Where a party has been apprehended and is under recognizance to attend courts upon any given charge there never should be a bench warrant for his arrest until there has been a forfeiture of that recognizance. The practice, so far as I know, both in the State and Federal courts, is that when the indictment is returned the judge of the court simply makes the inquiry whether the party is under recognizance, and if informed that he is, he calls for the bond to see whether the charge in the indictment is the same as that for which he has been held or is for an offense of any less grade, but covered by the same charge. If either of these things be true, then the indictment is simply docketed and the defendant called. If he does not respond, a forfeiture is taken; and then a bench warrant ought to issue. But when a bench warrant issues prior to this stage of the case it is simply an abuse. The court ought to control this matter without any express provision of law; but if the abuse does exist, as my friend from Ohio says that it does in his State, then the amendment, in my judgment, is proper and will operate to correct the abuse. I shall therefore support the amendment, if a point of order is not made against it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to modify my amendment by striking out the words "provided that" and inserting the word "unless," so as to read "unless the court in which such indictment is pending orders a warrant to issue."

Mr. ROGERS. There was one other observation I wanted to make. If the defendant is indicted for some other offense than that for which he has given recognizance to appear, then the court ought of course to have the right to issue a bench warrant and bring him before the court; and this right, as I understand, is reserved by the last clause of the amendment.

The question being taken on agreeing to Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment to the amendment of Mr. GROSVENOR, it was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio as amended.

Mr. ROGERS. Before the vote is taken I think this amendment ought to be again read, as it has been considerably modified and amended.

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. GROSVENOR as amended.

Mr. ROGERS. Before we vote on this matter, the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio as amended should be reported to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment as it has been amended.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest the words "used in payment of any per diem" should be inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment will be modified in that respect.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would also suggest the provision is not broad enough. It should apply to all appropriations applicable for this purpose.

Mr. HERBERT. It does apply to the marshals and clerks.

Mr. HOLMAN. It should apply to all appropriations applicable for this purpose. The pending appropriation relates only to the clerks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and that modification is also made.

Mr. HERBERT. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] that he should put in "informations" also. Informations are governed precisely by the same rules. A large number of indictments are found by these informations.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is true; and I agree to that modification.

Mr. HERBERT. I suggest those words be put in.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I agree to that.

Mr. HERBERT. Now read the amendment as it has been modified.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment as modified will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

But no part of the appropriation under this act shall be used to pay the fees of United States marshals or clerks upon any writ or bench warrant for the arrest of any person or persons who may be indicted by any United States grand jury, or against whom an information may be filed, where such person or persons is or are under a recognizance taken by or before any United States commissioner or other officer authorized by law to take such recognizance requiring the appearance of such person or persons before the court in which such indictment is found or information is filed, and when such recognizance has not been forfeited or said defendant is not in default, unless the court in which such indictment or information is pending orders a warrant to issue; nor used in payment of per diem to any officer for attendance in court, except for days when business is actually transacted in the court.

Mr. GROSVENOR'S amendment as amended was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fees of jurors, $450,000.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I move to strike out "$450,000" and insert "$525,000." [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. Chairman, it is a notorious fact that the jurors of the courts of the United States have been kept out of their pay. It is a fact stated to me by a gentleman on the floor just now the jurors in his district have been serving for six weeks without pay. This is the appropriation as presented here, for which the only defense given is the estimate of the Department of Justice, when there is proof positive, from the actual expenditures taking place in court in accordance with law, those estimates are insufficient by the sum of $75,000. This is not a question of peculation or overcharge of fees by officers. This is a question of the payment of men who are obliged to serve as jurors in court, and there is but one of two things to do: either to dismiss the jurors, or keep them and not pay them. The judges in some cases have discharged the jurors, and in other cases the jurors have gone on without pay. Is this a sensible thing to do?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not anticipate anything of the sort during the next year. I have no right to anticipate it. The Department of Justice thought $450,000 was sufficient. I do not want to increase the aggregate of the bill by increasing the appropriation here in reference to a matter which the gentleman knows no more about than I do.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There is only one way of judging of the future, and that is by the past, which has become quite a common-school declaration, and imports absolute verity.

Now, last year, or two years ago, $75,000 was the amount of the deficiency, and last year there was a deficiency of $50,000; and yet the gentleman says that we have no right to presume that there will be a deficiency this year. Yet it is a notorious fact, and if the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not know it then I do know more than he does about it, that to-day there is a deficiency being created in this item, which, I repeat, is in payment not of officials performing service for the Government but in the payment of a class of citizens who are serving their country under somewhat of a restraint.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, a single word upon this amendment.

This subject of jurors is largely under the control of the courts. Gentlemen who have been in the habit of practicing before the Federal courts have observed the fact that but little attention is usually bestowed by the judge upon the length of time the jurors are detained, or the time when they are summoned for service. That is generally left to the subordinate officers, to the clerk and marshals; and in many instances weeks and months elapse in our Federal courts with juries at hand where no case is to be tried. A comparison of the practice of Federal courts with the State courts in this particular, and gentlemen here have generally had an opportunity of doing so, will show that the difference in cost as between the two is simply enormous.

The appropriation of money which the gentleman from Maine suggests should be very carefully made for this purpose, because abuses are very likely to occur and most unsatisfactory results flow from it. I would be willing and prefer rather that the appropriation for this purpose should be a little under than over the amount actually required. I think the result would be better.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The practical results of the economic arrangement the gentleman from Indiana suggests have been to show a deficiency for the last two years of $75,000 and $50,000 respectively. It takes a good while to teach the lesson.

The question is simply about appropriating the money now or appropriating it on a deficiency bill hereafter, and with the disadvantage of causing great trouble to the courts——

Mr. HOLMAN. If we have to appropriate it hereafter we can very well do it on a deficiency bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. And at the same time and in the same category doing great injustice to the jurors themselves.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to say a word on the amendment. I believe I have never known an instance where the appropriation by Congress exceeded the estimates upon a matter of ordinary expenditure of the Government. It is the duty of the Department of Justice, through the machinery at its control, to estimate for the expenses of the succeeding year. That Department has put its machinery in operation for the purpose of doing so, and has estimated the amount that will be necessary for this purpose, and the Committee on Appropriations have granted that amount.

It seems to me that that ought to be conclusive on the House of Representatives. The gentleman from Maine, however, says that he knows of no way of judging of the future except by the past.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That was a quotation, you know. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. That was a quotation, I know—from Patrick Henry, I believe.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Very likely.

Mr. PETTIBONE. It is common newspaper literature.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is a quotation, at all events, from some distinguished gentleman, that is true in ordinary cases, I have no doubt. But the error into which the gentleman has fallen is this: that he is judging the future of an economical Democratic administration by the past record of an extravagant Republican administration.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Yes; we have had one year, a very interesting year, of that administration.

Mr. SPRINGER. We are getting gradually——

Mr. REED, of Maine. Especially in the Department of Justice.

Mr. SPRINGER. We are getting gradually down to business, and it takes some time, as the gentleman must know, to get these matters in hand. They are being well taken in hand now, and the gentleman from Maine will find that there is to be no deficiency. The Department has estimated liberally for the next year, and there will be no necessity for a deficiency.

Mr. SYMES was recognized.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Let me ask my friend from Illinois, as he speaks of the present administration as a part of the future to show what we may expect, are we to take the expenditure of $735,000 for witness' fees for the past year as a proof of the future?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will state to the gentleman from Maryland that the present administration found all of this machinery in operation, and, as I said before, it takes some time to get it in shape.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. I wish to say that so far as his criticism is concerned regarding the management of the Federal judges in summoning jurors, and their sitting around the court-room not called upon for jury duty, is not true so far as the district of Colorado is concerned.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is an exception, then.

Mr. SYMES. I know that Judge Hallet, of that district, has gone on under the appropriations made for that court and economized in every way that he can. I want to state that he does not call a petit jury until the third week in the term; so that in the mean time he will have all of the demurrers and everything of that nature disposed of, and after the petit jury comes he will not occupy the usual morning hour for the purpose of hearing motions and demurrers; but he calls the jury at 9 o'clock in the morning during the term, allowing them one hour for dinner, and sitting until 6 o'clock in the evening, and sometimes holds evening sessions.

He has done that from term to term, and then had to discharge the jury and adjourn the court because the appropriation gave out. That has been going on to the detriment of the administration of justice in that district for several years. And this charge of the gentleman from Indiana that the affairs of the Federal courts are not administered with economy as regards jurors is simply a piece of that character of talk that we have heard until we are tired of it. It is simply an attempted excuse of cheese-paring and false economy. I believe the Federal judges of America are as economical as the State judges, and they are not half as apt to sit around the court-room and electioneer with jurors and witnesses, because they do not require a re-election.

I hope the amendment will be adopted increasing the amount for jurors' fees so that the courts will not be hampered in the administration of justice.

[Here the hammer fell.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 6397) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its sitting.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I would like to inquire of him what has been the amount expended or appropriated for this service for the fiscal year which expires to-day.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Including deficiencies?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. The amount appropriated was $450,000; and there is already in one of the deficiency bills $50,000; making in all $500,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. The total amount I believe is $725,000. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has not made his amendment half high enough. How much does the law carry for the present year?

Mr. RANDALL. I think $500,000, including the appropriation and the deficiency.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is not the law for the current year $550,000 for witness fees?

Mr. RANDALL. We have not reached that yet. But I will answer the question. We have appropriated $550,000 for the current year, and a deficiency of $135,000; making in all $685,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. And how much does the general deficiency bill which has just been reported carry for witnesses' fees?

Mr. RANDALL. Fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. HISCOCK. Well, that makes $735,000.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] indulges us in the hope which now springs in his mind that the present administration will be much more economical than the past. Now judging, as he has beautifully said, the future by the past, you will find there was $50,000 deficiency in 1885, and that that deficiency had increased to $75,000 in 1886. It is not so hopeful on the side of economy as the gentleman has led us to believe.

So the question really comes back to the House, will you vote the money which under the law has been properly spent or will you refuse it? Gentlemen here know in what condition the courts are in their districts.

Mr. RANDALL. I have never known any political party in control here on either side which has given for these objects in excess of what the Department having control said was sufficient.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But if the ignorance of a Department is made manifest by such unimpeachable figures as these, Congress should take notice of it.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know that the Department is ignorant.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There is the fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has brought in bills and a Democratic House has passed them for $525,000 for fees of jurors; and everybody knows such expenses can not decrease in a growing country like this.

Mr. RANDALL. We have given the Department the amount they ask.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

The question being taken, there were—ayes 31, noes 52.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. CABELL. I desire to offer an amendment to come in after line 1771.

Mr. RANDALL. We have passed that.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has now reached the paragraph commencing with line 1774.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For fees of witnesses, $550,000.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1774 strike out "$550,000" and insert "$735,000."

Mr. REED, of Maine. Now I desire to say this: We know what has been the expenditure of the current year when we have an economical administration in the first blush and bloom of its innocence and goodness. [Laughter.] Of course we can not expect anything better in the future. Life never again will offer us anything like this year.

Mr. HAMMOND. Vote! vote! I beg pardon of the gentleman from Maine. I thought he was through.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I see the gentleman from Georgia is impatient, because he is a lawyer and knows what I say is true. But the Democratic party having gone into commission, he is waiting to vote. I appreciate the impatience he naturally feels.

Here is what was in the last bill, $550,000; one of the deficiency bills has given $135,000; another has given $50,000, which is $185,000 in addition to the $550,000 for paying fees of witnesses.

Now it is perfectly well understood these are not grasping office-holders, but they are people brought before the court in pursuance of the sworn duties of officers. They are private citizens. They are men who earn certainly the small amount that is given them. And yet you deliberately propose to dock them of $185,000 of what an economical, high-minded, intelligent administration has actually paid out in money during this year, and which a high-minded and intelligent Congress with 40 Democratic majority has sanctioned by its vote. I think I have made the matter apparent.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I am impatient at an effort to raise this appropriation above the estimate of the Department of Justice. There may be waste in witness fees as in everything else. To illustrate this I may relate a little incident that occurred some years ago in Georgia, when a number of our upper Georgia counties were going wrong politically, as I thought. I saw a leading politician of that section and complained to him about it. He said, "Well, give me some point on which I can get them away from the Independents and bring them back to the Democratic party." "Well," said I, "if you have nothing else to say, denounce the United States courts for arresting people and dragging them away from their homes and sending some of them to prison and some back to their homes." I may remark parenthetically that in Georgia we generally have some three hundred or four hundred men sentenced at every court and sent back home; it is a merely formal matter. He replied, "You do not know what you are talking about, Mr. HAMMOND." I said, "Why not?" "Why," said he, "that court is the best thing we have. It is worth more to us than the corn crop." "How is that?" I inquired. "Well," said he, "some poor devil puts up a still and he is arrested and carried off to jail, and all the balance of us are summoned as witnesses and brought to Atlanta at 10 cents a mile going and 10 cents a mile coming and $2 a day while we stay in town. I tell you it is better than the corn crop." [Laughter.]

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of bailiffs and criers; of expenses of district judges who may be sent out of their districts to hold court; of meals for jurors when ordered by court; of compensation for jury commissioners, $5 per day, not exceeding three days for any one term of court; and for such other miscellaneous expenses as may be authorized by the Attorney-General, including the employment of janitors and watchmen in rooms or buildings rented for the use of courts, interpreters, experts, and stenographers; of furnishing and collecting evidence where the United States is a party in interest, and other miscellaneous expenses, $300,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I have here an amendment which was not agreed to in the committee, some of the members thinking it was new legislation and others that it ought to be incorporated in this bill. I therefore wish to state, in offering the amendment, that I offer it in my own representative capacity.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 1790, after the word "stenographers," insert "including stenographers or law clerks for the use of the Chief-Justice and the associate justices, each, of the Supreme Court of the United States;" and at the end of the sentence strike out "$300,000" and insert "$320,000."

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order upon that proposition that it is not authorized by law.

Mr. RANDALL. I concede that it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 1792 insert the following:

"For carrying into effect the orders of any justice, judge, or commissioner of any court of the United States for the removal of Chinese persons found to be not lawfully entitled to be or remain in the United States, issued under section 12 of 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese, approved May 6, 1882," approved July 5, 1884,' the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the point of order until I hear an explanation of the amendment.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that such an amendment as this would be unnecessary. I had hoped that Congress, before its adjournment at this session, would have realized the crying necessity of taking some decisive action upon this very important question. In view of its failure to realize this necessity this amendment should be adopted in order to secure some effective legislation whereby the law as it now exists may be carried into effective operation.

Section 12 of the act referred to (which will be found on pages 117 and 118 of the statutes of the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress) provides as follows:

No Chinese person shall be permitted to enter the United States by land without producing to the proper officer of customs the certificate in this act required of Chinese persons certified to land from a vessel, and any Chinese person found unlawfully within the United States shall be caused to be removed therefrom to the country from whence he came and at the cost of the United States, after being brought before some justice, judge, or commissioner of a court of the United States, and found to be not lawfully entitled to be or remain in the United States. * * *

This law was approved on the 5th of July, 1884, and at the date of its approval it was thought it would be as effective in preventing the incoming of Chinese cooly labor as this character of legislation can be. Subsequently the Canadian parliament passed an act from which I read an extract, as follows:

4. Subject to the provisions of section 13 of this act every person of Chinese origin shall pay into the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, on entering Canada, at the port or other place of entry, the sum of $50, except the following persons, who shall be exempt from such payment, that is to say, first, the members of the diplomatic corps or other government representatives and their suite and their servants, consuls, and consular agents; and second, tourists, merchants, men of science, and students, who are bearers of certificates of identity, specifying their occupation and their object in coming into Canada, or other similar documents issued by the Chinese Government or other government whose subjects they are; and every such certificate or other document shall be in the English or French language, and shall be examined and indorsed (visé) by a British consul or chargé d'affaires or other accredited representative of her majesty at the place where the same is granted, or at the port or place of departure; but nothing in this act shall be construed as embracing within the meaning of the word "merchant" any huckster, peddler, or person engaged in taking or drying or otherwise preserving shell or other fish for home consumption or exportation.

Mr. Chairman, Washington Territory is bounded on the north by British Columbia, and we have something like three or four hundred miles of boundary line. The practice of the Chinese, landing at British Columbia ports, is to come into Washington Territory, crossing the boundary line by both land and water, and when they are apprehended and taken before the United States courts and ascertained to be unlawfully in the United States, and an order is issued for their return to the country from whence they came under section 12 of the act which I have cited, it has been found that there is no fund out of which to pay the extraordinary expense contemplated in the Canadian law referred to.

Last September, when I was in Washington Territory, I had an extended conversation relating to the Chinese question with the United States marshal, in the course of which he informed me that he had in the United States penitentiary at that time eighteen Chinamen. It had been ascertained that they were unlawfully in the United States, and that they had come in from British Columbia. They had been turned over to the marshal by the court with instructions to carry out the provisions of section 12 of the Chinese restriction act by returning them to the country from whence they came. Not having $900 of Government funds with which to pay the duty referred to, and having failed to obtain any relief upon application to the Department of Justice, he had taken the only course left open to him, namely, that of putting them in the penitentiary for safe-keeping until some means could be devised for permanently ridding the Territory of them in accordance with existing laws.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BYNUM was recognized, and yielded to Mr. VOORHEES.

Mr. VOORHEES. I thank my friend from Indiana.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to give very briefly some reasons why it is of the most vital importance that this question shall at an early date receive the intelligent consideration of the American Congress.

Race antagonisms have furnished the most serious problems of history. Wherever two races totally lacking in homogeneity have been thrown in contact the centers of society have been disturbed. In proportion as this inharmonious condition has been controlled by the Government the general welfare of society has been promoted. When, on the other hand, these discordant elements have been permitted to establish a footing in the midst of unwilling and hostile populations every condition of peaceful and prosperous government has been sorely menaced.

With the ratification of the Burlingame treaty with China on July 28, 1868, there was presented to the American people a condition of things which, from that hour to the present, has resulted in economic as well as social disorder. The incoming of Chinese cooly labor under treaty stipulations has invariably been met by an anxious and determined protest on the part of white labor and a firm but respectful presentation of the situation to Congress for such action as its gravity demands.

Thus far Congress has played the laggard, and in some instances despairing of that relief which Congress should have afforded, the people have overstepped the barriers of the law, and have sought by force to rid themselves of this pestiferous and uncongenial element. The inaction of Congress has to excited and oppressed labor seemed to furnish a reasonable justification for its assaults upon social law and order. The supine indifference of the law-making power to the crushing effect of the continuance of this abuse of white labor is the direct cause of all the disturbances raised in this connection. While we all deprecate and deplore the demonstrations of lawlessness which have directly grown out of the presence of this alien element, it is useless to attempt to close our eyes to the fact that such demonstrations are the unavoidable outgrowth of the continued failure of Congress to meet the issue in an adequate manner. I do not stand here as an apologist of lawlessness and violence. It seems to me but fair, however, that Congress should bear its share of the responsibility which flows from a failure to properly deal with this emergency. The history of civil government proves that whenever the law-making power has looked with indifference upon the repeated and continued demands of the people for a redress of grievances, deep-seated and long-standing, a determined and aggressive effort, regardless of existing laws, has always been made by the people themselves to accomplish that result of which, by the indifference of the law-making power, they have been deprived.

For a number of years past the people of the Pacific coast have, at stated intervals, humbly and earnestly petitioned Congress for the redress of grievances so rank and gross that every condition of life has been distinctively affected by them. The unchecked importation of a vicious heathen element into the civilization of the Pacific coast has at length grown into a grievance too burdensome to be borne. Every peaceable method has been exhausted for the correction of the evil, and still the grievance exists in all its forbidding proportions. It has always been in the power of Congress to pour oil upon the troubled waters. At no time in the history of Chinese agitation on the Pacific coast has it been impossible to appease the turbulent public sentiment by appropriate legislation. Only the legislation has been lacking.

I have sometimes heard surprise expressed that the presence of Chinese on the Pacific coast should call forth such an intense and universal protest. A practical knowledge of the habits, manners, and customs of this people will convince the most skeptical that there is nothing remarkable in the universality of the opposition to their residence among us. This problem can not be solved by the theorist and the doctrinaire. A thorough and a practical knowledge of the situation alone will solve it.
